That your Lordship therefore felt that the case was one which required careful consideration on your part, and that your Lordship was anxious, for your assistance in dealing with it, to be furnished with our views upon its legal aspects, as well as with any observations of a more general nature which we might be good enough also to offer.

That Sir H. Percy Anderson was therefore to request that we would take the papers into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion—

1. As to whether, assuming that the Court had jurisdiction in the matter, the verdict was correct in law, and the subsequent commutation of the sentence such as was sufficient and reasonable in the circumstances?

2. As to whether it was incumbent on the Secretary of State, having regard to the fact that the petitioner is a British subject, to make any, and, if so, what representations to the Niger Company upon the subject?

3. Generally as to the case.

We have taken the papers into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

That we are of opinion—

1. That, assuming the Court had jurisdiction in the matter, the verdict was not correct in law, and the subsequent commutation of the sentence was not such as was sufficient and reasonable in the circumstances.

There was abundant evidence that Coker was aware of, and assenting to, "sasswood" being administered to Brass, and some evidence, which the Court was quite entitled to believe, that Coker ordered Brass to take the "sasswood." But there is not evidence upon which we can come to a conclusion that Coker thought he was really exposing Brass to the risk of death, and not the slightest evidence of any desire on Coker's part to injure Brass from any malicious motive. On the contrary, the two men seem to have been upon good terms, and Brass only took the "sasswood" on behalf of others who refused to take it.

We think the true view of the case is that Coker regarded the taking of "sasswood" as an ordeal which might lead to the detection of the thieves, and that he is not proved to have known it was an ordeal that endangered life. We consider that there was culpable recklessness in Coker, and that it resulted in the death of Brass.

Under these circumstances, it was, in our opinion, a wrong verdict to find Coker guilty of murder. A verdict of manslaughter would have been proper, and a sentence equivalent to twelve months' imprisonment with hard labour sufficient—whether as a punishment or as an example.

We have not in these papers any sufficient materials to deal with Coker's complaint as to his witnesses not being called and counsel denied to him. Such proceedings would have been a flagrant injustice; but we cannot assume that these complaints are well founded on the mere statement of Coker himself.

2. That it would be advisable for your Lordship to represent to the Niger Company that the sentence upon Coker passed in the first instance was not justifiable, because the evidence does not disclose a case of murder, but of manslaughter; and that the commuted sentence is out of proportion to the offence.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquess of Ripon.

My Lord,

Royal Courts of Justice, July 3, 1894.

Suzerainty of Queen over South African Republic.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Fairfield's letter of the 28th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to request us to favour you with our opinion on the question whether Her Majesty's suzerainty still existed in relation to the South African Republic, a point on which Her Majesty's Government had been challenged in Parliament to give an answer, in a manner which made it difficult to avoid doing so.

That, in the first place, Mr. Fairfield was to observe that the word "suzerainty," which was borrowed from the terminology of the feudal system, where it had a sufficiently definite meaning, was not a very apt term to apply to any recognized system of relationship between two modern States, each possessing Constitutional Government, and was not susceptible of a precise definition. That it had been remarked of it that it "may mean anything from the white palfrey of the King of Naples to full dominion."

That the South African Republic was founded by a number of British subjects of Dutch and Huguenot descent who, in order to escape from the restraints of British rule, migrated to the north of the Vaal River, i.e., beyond the limits of Her Majesty's dominions. That after some years it was decided to come to a friendly understanding with those emigrant farmers, and that that was done by an instrument known as "The Sand River Convention," dated 15th April, 1852.

That the persons, whose right to manage their own affairs and govern themselves without any interference on the part of the Queen's Government was thus recognized, were at the time divided into three governmental groups, but that early in 1858 they amalgamated themselves into one State, known as the "South African Republic."

That the Republic was practically recognized by this and other countries as an independent foreign State until the 12th April, 1877, when the country was annexed on behalf of the Queen by Sir Theophilus Shepstone, whose act was ratified by Her Majesty's Government, the country being thenceforth administered, without physical resistance, as a British Crown Colony until towards the end of 1880, when a large part of the adult male population broke out into open insurrection. That after various engagements between the insurgents and the British forces, a preliminary Treaty of Peace was agreed to on the 21st March, 1881, between the British General, Sir Evelyn Wood, and the Transvaal leaders, of whom the principal was M. Paul Kruger, who for the last thirteen years has been the State President of the revived Republic.

That in Blue Book [C. 3114] of the year 1882, we should find at pp. 49-51 a full record of the negotiations between Sir Evelyn Wood and the leaders, which proceeded on the basis that the people of the Transvaal were to be granted self-government, subject to Her Majesty's suzerainty. That during the discussion M. Kruger said, "I accept suzerainty as explained by General Wood" (p. 51), and that Sir Evelyn Wood's explanation was set forth at the top of the following page (Annexure 8). That it was in the following words:—

"Suzerainty means: That the country has entire self-government as regards its own internal affairs, but that it cannot take action against, or with, an outside Power without the permission of the suzerain."

That that preliminary agreement being arrived at, the Transvaal forces broke laager and dispersed to their homes, it being left to the leaders to negotiate a definite and formal arrangement with a duly appointed Royal Commission. That those later negotiations took shape in the instrument known as the Pretoria Convention (see pp. 37-44 of Blue Book [C. 3114]).

That it would be seen that that instrument had no preamble or recital, but began at once with an operative clause, bearing no number, granting self-government, subject to the suzerainty of the British Crown and to the conditions and limitations set forth in a series of Articles numbered from I to XXXIII, the acceptance of the arrangement being contained in a concluding clause, also unnumbered, inserted below the signatures of the British Commissioners and itself signed by the Transvaal Representatives.

That our particular attention was requested to the Articles numbered II, III, XVIII, XXI, and XXII, which, it would be seen, claimed for Her Majesty (either in her regal capacity, or specifically as "suzerain") the entire conduct and control of foreign relations, and important rights of interference, both as to matters of internal government and border management.

That the Convention having proved distasteful to the Transvaal State, Her Majesty's Government agreed in 1883 to enter into negotiations for an amelioration of the then existing state of relations.

That the Transvaal State thereupon appointed a Delegation, consisting of M. Kruger and two other public men, who came to London with powers to negotiate; and that the correspondence between them and the then Secretary of State for the Colonies would be found in the Blue Book [C. 3947] of 1884. That it was important to observe in the opening letter, dated the 14th November, 1883, the Transvaal Delegation did not ask for a total abrogation of the suzerainty of the Queen, but rather their grievance was that, through duress, they had been forced in 1881 to accept Articles extending and developing that suzerainty, so as to make it something quite different and more hampering than what Sir Evelyn Wood had explained that it would amount to.

That the result of the negotiations between the Secretary of State and the Delegates was embodied in the London Convention of 1884 (pp. 47-58 of Blue Book [C. 3947]).

That the Resolution of the Volksraad of the South African Republic ratifying the Convention was inclosed for reference.

That in that Convention nothing was said, one way or the other, about suzerainty, and that the question was whether it survived notwithstanding. That in doing their work, Mr. Fairfield was to observe that the draftsmen, so far from appearing anxious to place the point beyond dispute, would almost seem to have desired to leave to each possible disputant something on which to base an argument, a course which was probably unavoidable if an agreement were to be arrived at, but which was directly answerable for the existing difficulty.

That in favour of the view that suzerainty survived, it might be said that—

1. It was not renounced, and Her Majesty ought not to be held to have deprived herself of such a right unless by express words.

2. The first part of the instrument, which was in the form of a direction and declaration by Her Majesty, did not say that the new Articles were to be substituted for the Convention of Pretoria, but for the "Articles" of that Convention, meaning presumably the numbered Articles, but excluding, by implication, the first (unnumbered) clause or sentence, which contained the grant of self-government to the Transvaal people, subject to Her Majesty's suzerainty.

3. Unless, at least, that opening part of the old Convention survived, the Transvaal people would have nothing in writing to show that the Queen had expressly abandoned her full sovereignty and dominion over the country as exercised between 1877 and 1881.

4. Although most of the attributes of suzerainty, as defined in the old Convention, disappeared in the new set of Articles, as much survived in Article IV, as Sir Evelyn Wood said that suzerainty consisted in, in fact, all that the new settlement did was to abandon those specific powers of suzerainty which Her Majesty's Government, in ignorance of the exact words used by Sir Evelyn Wood, had allowed, or directed, to be introduced, contrary to the understanding arrived at in March 1881.

That, on the other hand, it might be argued that:—

1. Her Majesty was made to speak of the new and substituted Articles as if they constituted "a new Convention," no words being used declaring or plainly implying that the new Articles were to be governed by, and read with, the opening sentence of the old Convention.

2. The declaration of suzerainty was over the "Transvaal State," a name imposed on the community by the Secretary of State's order against the wishes of the people and their leaders. The title of Transvaal State was quietly dropped in the new Convention and Articles, and the State was spoken of under its former title of the South African Republic, which before 1877 was undoubtedly an independent State. Although that Republic was for a time annexed, Her Majesty's authority being exercised over it in invitam, it was never made the subject of the particular form of dependence implied in the term suzerainty.

3. Her Majesty had never used the style of suzerain of the South African Republic in any public instrument, nor had any claim of suzerainty been made by Her Ministers on her behalf during the ten years which had elapsed since the London Convention was concluded.

4. The three earlier Conventions, viz.: those of Sand River, Pretoria, and London, were not in the form of agreements between equal parties, but, as to their opening and more operative parts, were in the form of grants by, or declarations of, the pleasure of a superior towards an inferior. The Conventions which had been concluded since 1884, were more in the form of agreements between equals. The Swaziland Convention of 1890 and that of 1893, which would be found in the documents noted in the margin, illustrated that proposition.*

5. As to the argument that, apart from the opening sentence of the Pretoria Convention, the British Crown had never undone the forcible annexation of 1877, and that the Transvaal people had otherwise no clear title to even a qualified independence, the answer of the Republic would probably be that the language of the Convention of 1884 and the subsequent attitude of this country constituted a tacit admission that the Sand River Convention constituted the true root and basis of the Republic's independence.

That the question was of no particular importance from a practical point of view, but that any unguarded utterance upon the subject might, in the present state of our relations with the South African Republic, produce mischievous results; and that your Lordship was inclined to think that, in answering questions in Parliament, it would be prudent—as far as possible—to adhere to the line taken by the late Mr. W. H. Smith in answering a question put to him by Mr. Edward Hardcastle on the 25th February, 1890.

That the question and answer were in the following terms:—

"Mr. Edward Hardcastle,—To ask the First Lord of the Treasury whether the suzerainty of the Transvaal was retained by the British Crown when the troops were withdrawn from that country? What is the nature and value of that suzerainty?

And whether, under it, British subjects, who are said already to outnumber the Boers, are entitled to the franchise?"

In reply, Mr. W. H. Smith said: "The Convention of London, made in 1884, between Her Majesty and the South African Republic, contains no express reservation of the Queen's right of suzerainty, and, although Her Majesty retains under the Convention the power of refusing to sanction Treaties made by the South African Republic with foreign States and nations and with certain native tribes, it is a cardinal principle of that settlement that the internal government and legislation of the South African Republic shall not be interfered with.

"No persons, whether British subjects or otherwise, could at present obtain the franchise within the South African Republic unless they make a declaration of allegiance to it, which involves, to a considerable extent, the renunciation, within the Republic, of their national rights and obligations as the subjects of the Queen."

That the last part of both question and answer were not directly material to the present question, but that the earlier parts were directly in point, and might perhaps be made more conclusive by the addition or interpolation of some reference to Sir Evelyn Wood's definition of suzerainty.

That your Lordship did not propose to formulate any series of specific questions on which a reply was asked, but that you would be glad to receive our advice and remarks on the above statement of facts and considerations.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

That, in our opinion, the question whether there is not in Her Majesty a suzerainty over the South African Republic is of very little practical importance, though, on the whole, having regard to the negotiations which preceded the London Convention of 1884, the construction of that document itself, and the subsequent attitude of Her Majesty's Government towards the Republic, we are of opinion that the suzerainty has been abandoned. Whether this be so or not, the only subsisting right of interference, otherwise than by way of diplomatic representation, depends upon the Conventional right given by Article IV of the London Convention of 1884.

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, July 3, 1894.

Commandeering of Brit. subjects in South African Republic.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Fairfield's letter of the 28th ultimo stating that he was directed by your Lordship to acquaint us that Her Majesty's Government desired to be favoured with our advice on the question (which had arisen out of the so-called "commandeering" of British subjects in the South African Republic) whether a State can, consistently with international law and comity, compel the subjects of another State who reside within its borders to render military service in maintaining the authority of the Government, or to pay a war tax in lieu of such service.

That the facts connected with the incident now occurring in the South African Republic were set forth in the proof prints of recent correspondence.*

That the only Treaty stipulation affecting British subjects in that behalf was that contained in Article XV of the Convention of London,† whereby British subjects, in common with other persons, not natives of South Africa, who settled in the territory between 1877 and 1881 were exempt.

That the six States noted in the margin‡ were known to have obtained a perpetual and total exemption for their subjects, and at the same time to have accorded reciprocal exemption to burghers of the South African Republic. That it was also believed that the Netherlands had such a Treaty with the South African Republic, although no copy of it appeared to be recorded in the archives of the Colonial Office or the Foreign Office.

That, as would be seen from the recent correspondence, there was a latent difficulty in the way of negotiating with the South African Republic on the basis of reciprocal treatment, although, notwithstanding, Sir Henry Loch seemed to be making an effort to do so.

That, as would be gathered from the papers, the question was not a new one. That it arose somewhat prominently in relation to the American Civil War, and again in the Transvaal itself, before its temporary annexation to the British Crown.

Mr. Fairfield inclosed with his letter the opinions given by the Law Officers of the day to the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs at the time of the American War. He further stated that the opinion dated the 31st July, 1860, had evidently formed the basis of Lord Russell's despatch of the 4th July, 1861, which was quoted by your Lordship in the despatch to Sir Henry Loch of the 8th ultimo.

† London Convention of 1884. (Treaty No. 735.)

1894

That two reports of the Law Officers of 1876, in regard to the earlier Transvaal case, were also inclosed, as well as a copy of the Blue Book C. 1748, which contained the despatch from Lord Carnarvon of the 22nd May, 1876, wherein he gave expression to the view contained in the first of those opinions.

That, as bearing on the question whether, in the abstract, a State has the right of exacting military service from aliens, it was worth noting that the States of the world were constantly abandoning that right by reciprocal arrangements in favour of one another's subjects, which seemed to afford evidence that it was admitted, by common consent, to exist. That this country had made such Treaties, and that a Treaty was now under discussion with Japan which contained such a stipulation, and in relation thereto it was mentioned that a difficulty had been felt as to the adhesion to it of those British Colonies, for such there were, which had passed laws based on the principle that aliens might be required to render service in the local armed corps. But that the Japanese Government had expressed its willingness to waive the objection and to accept the adhesion of any particular Colony, without insisting on an amendment of its local law. That the laws in question were, rightly or wrongly, left to their operation on the assumption that there was no doubt as to the competence of a country to impose such duties on aliens. That a list of them was noted in the margin of Mr. Fairfield's letter, but that the only one with which it seemed necessary to trouble us was the Cape Act, No. 7, of 1878, in connection with which it might be mentioned that at the time of the Basuto War, the Cape Government called out German subjects under its authority, and declined to defer to the objections of the German Government on the subject, a course in which Germany finally acquiesced.

That the so-called "Commando" system was described in the Law Officers' Report of 1876. That it had existed in the South African Republic ever since its foundation, but that the law at present in force dated from 1883. That a translation was inclosed. That it would be seen that the language of the law was not very clear or consistent. But that your Lordship did not desire to raise any question as to whether it had been exceeded in particular cases, or whether it was effectual for its purpose as generally understood. That, if any point of construction could be made against its application to British subjects as a class, or to individuals belonging to that class, the persons affected had had an opportunity of making it in the local courts of law, whose opinion was understood to have been in favour of the Republic upon the main question of law and competency. That your Lordship saw no present reason to doubt the impartiality of those Courts.

That the question on which our opinion was desired was, therefore, as follows:—

Assuming the Municipal Law of 1883 to be so framed as to render British subjects liable in terms to compulsory military service, and assuming its provisions to have been observed by the local authorities, is there nevertheless any valid reason to object to its application to British subjects on grounds of international law or comity; in other words, do we agree with the views of our predecessors, and do your Lordship's telegrams and your Lordship's despatch of the 8th ultimo treat the matter on a sound legal basis?

That as the matter was urgent, and might be raised in the House of Commons at an early date, your Lordship would be glad to receive our report as soon as possible.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands, we have considered the matter, and have the honour to—

Report—

That, in our opinion, on the assumption as to the Municipal Law suggested at the close of Mr. Fairfield's letter, there is no valid reason to object to its application to British subjects on the ground of international law and comity.

We agree with our predecessors, and are of opinion that the telegrams and the despatch of your Lordship of the 8th ultimo treat the matter on a sound legal basis.

My Lord, Temple, May 9, 1876.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Malcolm's letter of the 23rd March last, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying copies of a correspondence respecting a complaint that one Hampden L. Smithers, a British subject, resident in the Transvaal Republic, had been compelled, in accordance with what was alleged to be the law of that State, to join a "commando" sent into the country of the Amazwazis, a native tribe, in order to help them against a threatened attack of the Zulus.

2. That a "commando" was a species of police force, organized in military fashion, in which it was understood that every able-bodied white resident in the Republic was compelled to serve when called upon.

3. That the principal object of the "commando" system was to provide a force which might be at all times available for the repression of disturbances among the savage tribes amongst or near whom the white inhabitants of the Republic dwell.

4. That assuming, as stated by Acting President Joubert, that the law of the Republic imposes upon all able-bodied residents the duty of compulsory service on a "commando," whether called out against the uncivilized tribes inhabiting and surrounding the Republic, or for whatever purpose, Mr. Malcolm was to request that we would advise your Lordship whether there was anything contrary to international comity and usage in the application of such a law to a foreigner, and whether the circumstances of Mr. Smithers' case appeared to be such as would justify any quasi-diplomatic intervention by Her Majesty's Representative in South Africa on his behalf, and that your Lordship would be obliged by any other observations which might occur to us on the subject generally.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to

Report—

That there is nothing contrary to international comity and usage in the application of such a law to a foreigner, and that there is nothing in the circumstances of Mr. Smither's case which would justify any quasi-diplomatic intervention on his behalf by Her Majesty's Representative in South Africa.

(CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.)

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Earl of Carnarvon.

My Lord, Temple, July 12, 1876.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Malcolm's letter of the 8th instant, stating that, with reference to the letter addressed by us to your Lordship on the 9th May last, in answer to your Lordship's letter of the 23rd March last, in which your Lordship asked for our opinion as to the power of the South African Republic to order a British subject out on a "commando," he was directed by your Lordship to inform us that further questions had arisen as to the rights of the South African Republic to exercise that power over a British subject.

2. That we should recollect that a "commando" was stated to be a species of police force organized in military fashion, in which it was understood that every able-bodied white resident in the Republic was compelled to serve when called upon; the principal object of the "commando" system being to provide a force at all times available for the repression of disturbances amongst the savage tribes of the country.

3. That your Lordship was, however, informed that recently the President of the South African Republic had decided to make an attack upon a powerful native Chief, who, it was maintained, was independent of the Republic, and had never owed them allegiance,

"That in order to carry out his purpose, the President had given orders for a large "commando" to be formed with the view of attacking the Chief; and numbers of British subjects, it was expected, would be summoned to serve upon it, and their cattle and waggons placed under requisition for the same purpose.

4. That your Lordship could not see that in that instance the "commando" differs in any way from a declaration of war upon a neighbouring people; and as it would in that case have lost its true character of a police force for the maintenance of internal order, your Lordship apprehended that the President of the South African Republic could not, consistently with international comity and usage, or with the rights of British subjects, compel them to serve upon it.

That your Lordship therefore proposed to remonstrate against any measures being taken to compel the services of British subjects, or the appropriation of their property, for the purpose of any operations beyond the Republic.

But that before doing so your Lordship would feel obliged if we would advise whether, in conformity with the rules of international custom and usage, your Lordship was warranted in making such remonstrances.

That, as the matter presses, your Lordship would feel much obliged by an early reply.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands, we have the honour to

Report—

That we are of opinion that British subjects resident in and under the protection of the laws of a foreign country are, unless under Treaty exemptions, liable to military service and other burdens imposed upon the inhabitants in consequence of war.

The principle upon which we form this opinion is that, where a man chooses to live for his own advantage, he must, with the benefit, take the burdens to which the natural subjects of the State are liable, whether those burdens take the shape of taxes, loans, personal service, or the requisition of any part of his property for military operations entered into by the country.

In the case before us, it is said that the "commando" is for the purpose of carrying war into the territory of a neighbouring people.

It may be that, though in fact aggressive, the act will be a necessary part of defensive operations; but in any case we conceive that British subjects cannot claim, by reason of their British character, any exemption, personal or otherwise, from the duties and impositions borne by and laid upon other residents within the Republic.

We are, therefore, of opinion that your Lordship would not be warranted by international custom and usage in making the proposed remonstrance.

We think that your Lordship might, however, properly claim, on behalf of the British subjects who are unwilling to serve or have their property requisitioned, that they should be allowed a convenient and reasonable time for leaving the Republic.

Extradition between British South Africa Company's territories and foreign States.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Bramston's letter of the 14th instant, stating, with reference to our Report of the 18th April last respecting the power of extradition between British Protectorates and foreign territories, that he was directed by your Lordship to request us to consider the correspondence with the Foreign Office which had passed in reference to our Report, and that he was to ask us to inform your Lordship whether the despatch, of which the draft was inclosed, might properly be sent to the High Commissioner.

The documents referred to in the draft despatch were forwarded to us for reference.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have considered the matter, and have the honour to

Report—

That, in our opinion, the despatch of which the draft is inclosed may properly be sent to the High Commissioner.

As to the reference to "The Cape of Good Hope Act, 1882," it should be considered whether that Act is not defective as to the safeguards provided by the Treaties, and "The Extradition Act, 1870," with reference to political offenders, and other provisions for the protection of extradited persons.

Draft of Despatch to High Commissioner Sir H. Loch.

Sir,
Downing Street, August , 1894.

REFERRING to your despatch of the 20th March, 1893, South Africa, No. 139, transmitting a letter from the Secretary to the British South Africa Company, asking that extradition arrangements might be made in respect of Mashonaland, I have the honour to inform you that, in view of the position now occupied by the Company in Matabeleland and Mashonaland, Her Majesty's Government consider that the time has arrived when such arrangements may be taken in hand.

2. I have therefore to authorize you to enter into communication with the authorities of the South African Republic, the Orange Free State, and the Portuguese possessions in South Africa, with the object of coming to an agreement with them for the mutual extradition of fugitive criminals between those States and the territories which, by virtue of Her Majesty's Order in Council of the 18th July, 1894, are under the authority of the above-mentioned Company.

3. You state in your despatch that the question of extradition with the Portuguese territories is a matter which is beyond your Commission, but I am advised by the Law Officers that the terms of the 3rd Article of that Commission of the 28th August, 1889, are sufficient to authorize you to make such Agreements with the Representatives of Portugal in South Africa.

4. When you have effected an arrangement with these three States, or any of them, you may by a legislative Proclamation give effect and legal sanction to the arrangements; and I may add that "The Cape Extradition Act, 1882" (No. 22 of 1882), appears to furnish a convenient precedent for your guidance, so far as its provisions extend; but the Law Officers have pointed out that it does not contain the safeguards provided by the Treaties and "The Extradition Act, 1870," with reference to political offenders, and other provisions for the protection of extradited persons. I have accordingly to draw your attention to section 3 of the Act of 1870, and to request you to take care that similar provisions are included in the Agreements with the above-mentioned States and in your Proclamation.*

5. Any such arrangement and Proclamation should be made to apply to the whole of the territories within the limits of the Order in Council of the 18th July, 1894.

O. in C. for carrying out Extradition Treaty with Argentine Republic.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Francis Bertie's letter of the 24th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the draft of an Order in Council for carrying into effect an Extradition Treaty between Great Britain and the Argentine Republic, which was signed at Buenos Ayres on the 22nd May, 1889, and of which the ratifications were exchanged on the 15th December, 1893.

That Mr. Bertie was to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion whether the draft Order in Council might be laid before the Queen in Council for Her Majesty's approval.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

That in our opinion the draft Order in Council initialled by us is sufficient and proper for carrying out the object intended, and an Order in terms of such draft may properly be submitted to Her Majesty for approval.

Draft Order in Council.

WHEREAS by the Extradition Acts, 1870 and 1873, it was amongst other things enacted that, where an arrangement has been made with any foreign State with respect to the surrender to such State of any fugitive criminals, Her Majesty may, by Order in Council, direct that the said Acts shall apply in the case of such foreign State; and that Her Majesty may, by the same or any subsequent Order, limit the operation of the Order, and restrict the same to fugitive criminals who are in or suspected of being in the part of Her Majesty's dominions specified in the Order, and render the operation thereof subject to such conditions, exceptions, and qualifications as may be deemed expedient; and that if, by any Law made after the passing of the Act of 1870 by the Legislature of any British possession, provision is made for carrying into effect within such possession the surrender of fugitive criminals who are in or suspected of being in such British possession, Her Majesty may, by the Order in Council applying the said Acts in the case of any foreign State, or by any subsequent Order, suspend the operation within any such British possession of the said Acts, or of any part thereof, so far as it relates to such foreign State, and so long as such Law continues in force there and no longer:

And whereas by an Act of the Parliament of Canada passed in 1886, and entitled "An Act respecting the Extradition of Fugitive Criminals," provision is made for carrying into effect within the Dominion the surrender of fugitive criminals:

And whereas by an Order of Her Majesty the Queen in Council, dated the 17th day of November, 1888, it was directed that the operation of the Extradition Acts, 1870 and 1873, should be suspended within the Dominion of Canada so long as the provision of the said Act of the Parliament of Canada of 1886 should continue in force and no longer:

And whereas a Treaty was concluded on the 22nd day of May, 1889, between Her Majesty and the President of the Argentine Republic, for the mutual extradition of fugitive criminals, which is in the terms following:—

And whereas the ratifications of the said Treaty were exchanged at Buenos Ayres on the 15th day of December, 1893:

Now, therefore, Her Majesty, by and with the advice of Her Privy Council, and in virtue of the authority committed to her by the said recited Acts, doth order, and it is hereby ordered, that from and after the * day of , 18 , the said Acts shall apply in the case of the Argentine Republic and of the said Treaty with the Argentine Republic.

Provided always, and it is hereby further ordered, that the operation of the said Extradition Acts, 1870 and 1873, shall be suspended within the Dominion of Canada so far as relates to the Argentine Republic and to the said Treaty, and so long as the provisions of the Canadian Act aforesaid of 1886 continue in force, and no longer.

Postal Convention with Austria-Hungary.

Gentlemen,

Foreign Office, August 29, 1894.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Earl of Kimberley, the inclosed correspondence in print (Paper A), respecting a proposed Postal Convention between Great Britain and Austria-Hungary.

In 1892 and 1893 representations were made by the Austro-Hungarian Government respecting the position of the Austrian Lloyd's steamers in Indian and certain colonial ports, and on the 10th June, 1893, the Earl of Rosebery suggested to the Austro-Hungarian Ambassador that the most satisfactory way of meeting the wishes of his Government in regard to Austro-Hungarian postal steamers visiting the ports of British Colonies and foreign possessions would be the conclusion of a Convention between the two countries respecting postal communications (p. 11 of print). A copy of the Postal Convention between Great Britain and France of the 30th August, 1890 (p. 12 of print), was at the same time sent to the Austro-Hungarian Ambassador as a basis for the negotiation of the proposed Convention.

The Austro-Hungarian Ambassador informed the Earl of Rosebery on the 2nd February last (p. 26 of print) that his Government approved in principle of the conclusion of a Postal Convention on the model of the Anglo-French Convention of the 30th August, 1890, and a draft Convention was accordingly prepared by Her Majesty's Postmaster-General (p. 28 of print).

The draft Convention was slightly modified at this Office (p. 30 of print), and was then submitted to the Treasury, Colonial Office, and India Office for the observations of those Departments. The views of the Colonial Office and the Treasury will be found at p. 33 of the print. The Government of India does not desire that the Convention should be applied to India (p. 35 of print).

The draft Convention, printed separately (Paper B), contains the modifications suggested by the several Departments concerned, and I am to request that you will take the inclosed papers into your consideration, and that you will favour Lord Kimberley with your opinion whether the draft Convention (Paper B), may properly be submitted to the Austro-Hungarian Government in its present shape for their consideration.

I have, &c.

(B.) Draft Convention.

Report.

In our opinion, the proposed draft Convention in some respects may be considered to inconveniently depart from the provisions of "The Mail Ships Act, 1891."

Article I of the draft Convention provides that packets shall not be diverted from their destination, or be liable to seizure, embargo, or "Arrêt de Prince."

This is beyond the language of section 5 of the Act, and though Her Majesty can of course make engagements as regards the use of her prerogative without statutory sanction, yet it is not certain that the limitation of the Royal prerogative, coupled with the statutory restrictions on private rights contained in section 5, exhaust every possible cause of seizure, embargo, or arrest, though they would cover nearly all; and, in so far as the draft goes beyond the Act in limiting the rights of private persons, it could not be enforced in Great Britain.

The same Article requires notice, prior to boarding, to be given to the Consul or Vice-Consul.

The Act (section 1 (a)), requires such notice only where there is at the port a Consulate of that State.

It is for the consideration of your Lordship whether the Convention should require notice except where there is such a Consulate. It might be inconvenient.

The same Article requires deposit of cash or securities of the United Kingdom. This follows the Act, but as the Act only deals with deposits in Great Britain it may, perhaps, not have been intended that deposits in Austria should be in the securities of the other party to the Convention.

The same Article provides that "the payment or transfer into Court is to abide the law of the country relating to it." We presume this means the law of the country in which the payment or transfer is made, and we further suggest that the nature and amount of the security to be provided should also be determined by the law of the same country as is required by section 3 (1) of the Act.

In regard to Article VI of the draft Convention, it purports to forbid the carriage of any letter not included in the mails, except despatches of the respective Governments. Under British law, however, persons are entitled to convey that class of letters which are referred to in section 2 (sub-section 5) of "The Mail Ships Act, 1891," and no Convention could, without statutory sanction, prevent the lawful carriage of those letters in the territory of the United Kingdom.

* Date to be inserted by Council Office, and to be a date ten days after publication in "London Gazette."

1894

This, however, may not be considered important, as it would not expose Her Majesty's Government to the risk of being disabled by our own law from carrying out Treaty engagements.

The other Articles of the proposed Convention appear to us not to require comment.

Interpretation of Article XV of Commercial Treaty of 23rd July, 1862. Meaning of "British origin."

My Lord,

Royal Courts of Justice, July 20, 1894.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir H. Percy Anderson's letter of the 2nd ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list, relative to a doubt which had arisen as to the meaning to be attached to Article XV of the Treaty of Commerce of the 23rd July, 1862, between Great Britain and Belgium.

That the full text of that Article was as follows in the English version, and in the French counterpart respectively:—

"Articles, the produce or manufacture of Belgium, shall not be subject, in British Colonies, to other or higher duties than those which are, or may be, imposed upon similar articles of British origin."

"Les produits d'origine ou de manufacture Belge ne seront pas grevés, dans les Colonies Britanniques, d'autres ou de plus forts droits que ceux qui frappent ou frapperont les produits similaires originaires de la Grande-Bretagne."

That it would be seen that the English text uses the words "similar articles of British origin," where the French text employs the expression "produits similaires originaires de la Grande-Bretagne."

That Her Majesty's Secretary of State for the Colonies had under consideration, as we should perceive from the Colonial Office letter of the 16th April last, the question of facilitating trade relations between the British Colonies, by arrangements which might, apparently, involve preferential terms in regard to customs duties, and that it therefore became matter for practical consideration whether the words of the English text were to be taken to indicate articles produced in any part of Her Majesty's dominions, or articles produced in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, or, lastly, articles produced in Great Britain proper, i.e., England, Wales, and Scotland, to the exclusion of all other parts of Her Majesty's dominions.

That if each text were clearly unambiguous in itself, and if both texts were clearly contradictory as between themselves, it was conceived that the question which of the two texts should be held to prevail, could only be settled by amicable arrangement between the High Contracting Parties, whereby they might declare their present and original intention to be, and to have been, whatever they might now mutually agree that it should be.

That if, however, the English text were admittedly ambiguous, the following further questions appeared to arise. What was the meaning of the French text? Could the French text be consulted to explain the English text; and must the French text, if held to be unambiguous, be taken as decisive of the ambiguity of the English text?

That the subject was so fully discussed in the papers referred to us that it did not seem to be necessary to trouble us with any further or more detailed observations.

That Sir H. Percy Anderson was to request us to take the papers into our consideration and to favour your Lordship with our opinion whether, in Article XV of the Treaty of the 23rd July, 1862, between Great Britain and Belgium, the words "similar articles of British origin," when considered in conjunction with their equivalent in the French text, relate to the produce of the United Kingdom alone, or should be taken to include the produce of any part of Her Majesty's dominions. Whether, also assuming the words "articles of British origin" to include the produce of any part of Her Majesty's dominions, it was open to Belgium (or any other nation claiming most-favoured-nation treatment) to demand the full benefit of that reading notwithstanding the words in the French text "produits originaires de la Grande-Bretagne."

That Sir H. Percy Anderson was to request us to be good enough, at the same time, to favour your Lordship with any general observations which the consideration of the papers might suggest to us.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

That, in our opinion, in Article XV of the Treaty of the 23rd July, 1862, between Great Britain and Belgium, the words, "similar articles of British origin," by themselves, as well as in conjunction with their equivalent in the French text, relate to the produce of the United Kingdom alone.

Position of British ship-owners in respect to claims arising out of civil war in Brazil.

WE were honoured with the Earl of Rosebery's commands signified in Mr. Francis Bertie's letter of the 2nd instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to us the accompanying letter from the Clyde Sailing-ship Owners' Association, containing inquiries in regard to the position of British ship-owners in respect to claims arising out of the civil disturbances in Brazil.*

That a draft of the reply which it was proposed to return to that communication was also inclosed.

That since the commencement of the dissensions in Brazil, the Foreign Office had been requested from various quarters to support claims against the Brazilian Government for losses suffered by British subjects in connection with those dissensions.

* Clyde Sailing-ship Owners' Association, February 19, 1894.

1894

That the reply sent in such cases had been to the effect that claims arising out of the civil disturbances in Brazil must await the termination of those disturbances, when they would be considered upon their merits.

That the Secretary of State was anxious, however, not to encourage ship-owners to entertain the belief that they were likely to get compensation for the delays to which, in consequence of the exceptional state of affairs then, and for some time past, prevailing within the harbour and port of Rio, merchant-ships had been, or might be, exposed in discharging their cargoes.

That claims upon the Brazilian Government based directly upon such delays, or in respect of demurrage paid, or future charters lost or forfeited in consequence of them, evidently differed in many respects from those arising out of the actual seizure of lighters or goods, the forcible detention of vessels, the incidental killing of British subjects or their imprisonment or ill-treatment, which were all proper subjects for consideration by a Mixed Commission or otherwise.

That, in order to prevent misapprehension on that point, the qualifying passage which appeared as the third paragraph of the inclosed draft had in the present case been added.

That Mr. Bertie was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour the Secretary of State with our opinion as to whether the proposed reply to the Clyde Sailing-ship Owners' Association was, as it stood, a proper one; or whether it might advantageously be altered or modified, and, if so, in what respects.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and have the honour to

Report—

That, in our opinion, the letter—of which a draft is submitted to us—is a proper one in the existing circumstances.

Draft of Letter from Foreign Office to the Clyde Sailing-ship Owners' Association.

Sir,

Foreign Office, March , 1894.

I AM directed by the Earl of Rosebery to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 19th ultimo, containing inquiries regarding the position of British ship-owners in respect to losses caused by the detention of their vessels at Rio.

I am to inform you that all claims in connection with the civil disturbances in Brazil must await the termination of those disturbances, when they will, in so far as Her Majesty's Government are concerned, be considered and dealt with according to their respective merits.

Her Majesty's Government cannot, however, pledge themselves to support, and, as at present advised, they do not consider that the Brazilian Government would be likely to entertain, claims for compensation in respect of losses purely arising out of the delay experienced by ship-masters in discharging their cargoes at Rio owing to the state of affairs lately prevailing in that harbour.

In answer to your inquiry whether, after order has been restored, it will be the duty of Her Majesty's Government to bring about a Convention and endeavour to obtain the appointment of a Commission which will deal with all claims arising out of the disturbances, I am to say that it is impossible for Lord Rosebery to commit Her Majesty's Government beforehand as to the particular form of action which may eventually commend itself to them as most suitable for the purpose in view, since such action must depend in great measure upon circumstances and conditions not yet ascertained or ascertainable.

I am, &c.

Detention of "Arethusa" at Rio. Claim for demurrage on Brazilian Govt.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Bertie's letter of the 7th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers relating to a claim for demurrage which the owners of the British barque "Arethusa" wished to prefer against the Brazilian Government on account of the vessel's detention by the orders of the port authorities at Rio from the 12th December, 1893, to the 16th April, 1894.

That the facts of the case were very fully set forth in the letter from Messrs. Macfarlane and Co. of the 29th May, 1894, which contained a full statement of claim, the protest entered by the master of the "Arethusa" before Her Majesty's Consul-General at Rio, and a copy of the charter-party.

That the facts of the case did not appear to your Lordship to justify Her Majesty's Government in advancing a claim for compensation against the Brazilian Government, and that the "Arethusa" Company were so informed on the 9th ultimo, and were told that they should, in the first instance, exhaust such legal remedies, if any, as they might be advised were open to them in the Brazilian Courts.

That the Company now stated in a letter of the 27th ultimo (Paper C) that, before preferring their claim to the Foreign Office, they had exhausted all the means open to them to recover compensation at Rio, but without success, and they urged a reconsideration of their case with a view to the Brazilian Government being pressed by Her Majesty's Government for a settlement of their claim.

That as the present case was similar to many other claims brought to the notice of Her Majesty's Government, Mr. Bertie was to request that we would take the papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether the case was one in which compensation might properly be demanded by Her Majesty's Government from the Government of Brazil, and with any further observations which we might have to offer on the case.

A Report by our predecessors of the 16th March with regard to the position of British ship-owners in respect of claims arising out of the civil disturbances in Brazil was also sent to us for reference.

We have taken the papers into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

That the case is not one in which compensation can properly be demanded by Her Majesty's Government from the Government of Brazil.

If it were shown that the Government of Brazil could have granted the necessary facilities, and did not choose to do so, or that the Government were granting compensation in like circumstances, the case might be altered, but nothing of the kind is shown in regard to the "Arethusa."

T. J. Hughes killed by Brazilian insurgents. Claim of his mother to compensation.

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, August 16, 1894.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Bertie's letter of the 8th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers[*] relating to a claim for compensation on the part of Mrs. Hughes, widow, on account of the death of her son, Thomas J. Hughes, an apprentice on board the British ship "Crown of India," who was killed on the 21st December last at the public landing-place in Rio Harbour by a shot from the Brazilian insurgent vessel "Jupiter."

That the facts of the case were fully set forth in the protest entered by the master of the "Crown of India" at Her Majesty's Consulate-General at Rio, a copy of which was inclosed in the letter from Messrs. Weightman, Pedder, and Co., and in the despatch from Sir H. Wyndham No. 14 of the 10th January.

That it would be seen that Hughes had, in the discharge of his duties, gone ashore at the Praça da Harmonia, the landing-place assigned by the Brazilian Government for the boats of men-of-war and merchant-vessels, as safer than the normal landing-place at the Marine Arsenal, which had been rendered exceedingly dangerous by the fire of the insurgents.

That Mr. Bertie was to request that we would take the papers into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether the case was one in which compensation might properly be demanded by Her Majesty's Government from the Government of Brazil on behalf of the mother of the deceased, and, if so, on what particular ground the claim should be supported, having regard to the fact that the shot by which Hughes was killed was fired from a vessel beyond the control of the Brazilian Government.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands, we have taken the papers into our consideration, and have the honour to

Report—

That we see no ground for the conclusion that the Brazilian Government in this case neglected to afford any protection which they were capable of giving, and that under these circumstances we are of opinion that the case is not one in which compensation can properly be demanded by Her Majesty's Government from the Government of Brazil.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, August 4, 1894.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Earl of Kimberley, the accompanying despatch, and its inclosures, from Her Majesty's Minister at Rio de Janeiro,[†] which relates to a claim for compensation presented by the master (since deceased) of the British ship "Bertie Mills" on account of the detention of that vessel, by order of the Brazilian authorities at Rio Grande do Sul, from the 30th January to the 15th February last.

The circumstances of the case are fully set out in the Memorandum which accompanies Sir H. Wyndham's despatch. From this it appears that the ship, after giving public notice of her sailing with cargo for Paranagua, was duly cleared and dispatched, with the sanction of the Customs authorities and Captain of the Port, but was stopped and detained at the bar by order of the Military Commander of the district, owing to Paranagua having fallen into the hands of the insurgents, but was subsequently released, and permitted to proceed to her destination.

This case appears to differ from many other claims for demurrage arising out of the civil disturbances in Brazil which have been presented to Her Majesty's Government, the detention of the vessel being due to the direct action of the Brazilian Government authorities.

I am to request that you will take these papers into your consideration, and that you will favour Lord Kimberley with your opinion as to whether the case is one in which compensation may properly be demanded by Her Majesty's Government from the Government of Brazil for the owners of the "Bertie Mills;" and, if your answer to this question be in the affirmative, whether the amount of 95*l.* 14*s.* 4½*d.*, claimed by the master, appears to you to be a fair and reasonable sum.

Report.

In our opinion, a claim may properly be pressed upon the Brazilian Government, and the amount mentioned does not appear to be unreasonable.

A war de facto was being carried on, and the Government, by prohibiting the "Bertie Mills" to continue the voyage because the port of destination was in the hands of the insurgents, treated the port as an enemy's port. As against neutrals, trade with such a port can only be legally prevented by an efficient blockade, which did not exist in the case before us.

Mr. Davies' claim on Brazil for damage to property during revolution.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, September 24, 1894.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Earl of Kimberley, the papers noted in the accompanying list relating to the claim of Mr. William Davies, a British subject, against the Brazilian Government for damage to his property during the late revolution in Brazil.

Mr. Davies resided at Toque Toque, a place near Nictheroy, and his house was situated in an elevated position directly opposite the island of Mocangué.

As the site was well suited for a military post, he and his family were ejected from their home by Brazilian soldiers on the 17th February last and his house has ever since been occupied by them.

The circumstances of his eviction are described in a despatch of the 21st March last from Mr. Wyndham, then Her Majesty's Minister at Rio, which is herein inclosed (Paper A).

To a communication which Her Majesty's Minister subsequently addressed to the Government of Brazil on this subject, a reply was made which will be found set out in Paper (B).

A despatch has recently been received (Paper C) from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Rio, inclosing various communications from Mr. Davies, in which he describes the injury done to his property. He states that he considers that his residence has been rendered unsafe owing to an explosion of a powder magazine in the neighbourhood caused by the firing of the Government troops, and the firing of heavy guns. He also sets forth the damages which he considers he is entitled to claim.

I am to request that you will take the papers transmitted herewith into your consideration, and will favour Lord Kimberley with your opinion as to whether

Mr. Davies' claim for compensation should be supported, and also with any general observations which you may have to offer on the case.

It will be observed that Mr. Davies affirms that neither he nor his family in any way violated the strict neutrality which it was their duty to observe during the whole period of the revolution.

I have, &c.

In our opinion Mr. Davies' claim for compensation in respect of what was done during the continuance of hostilities is not of a character which can be insisted upon.

Mr. Davies, as a resident in Brazil, took the risks of intestine war, and is in the same position as a native Brazilian, and we do not understand that in regard to compensation native Brazilians have been treated differently.

If Mr. Davies' house had been kept from him after reasonable military necessities have ceased, we think he would be entitled to compensation.

BULGARIA.

No. 14.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Earl of Kimberley.—(Received March 14.)

My Lord,

Royal Courts of Justice, March 13, 1894.

Power of Bulgaria to conclude Commercial Treaties with Great Britain.

WE were honoured with the Earl of Rosebery's commands signified in Sir H. Percy Anderson's letter of the 2nd ultimo, stating that he was directed to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list relative to the question whether the Principality of Bulgaria was in a sufficiently independent position properly to negotiate directly, and to conclude Treaties or other International Agreements with Great Britain respecting trade, industry, navigation, and other subjects exclusively involving the commercial relations between the two countries.

That prior to the date upon which the Treaty of Berlin of the 13th July, 1878, came into operation, the territory now known as Bulgaria was, both administratively and politically, an integral part of the Ottoman Empire.

That Article I of the Treaty of Berlin was as follows:—

"Article I. Bulgaria is constituted an autonomous and tributary Principality under the suzerainty of His Imperial Majesty the Sultan;" and that a Constitution for the Principality was promulgated on the 16th (28th) April, 1879.

That the other Articles of the Treaty of Berlin which had a direct or indirect bearing upon the question were Articles VIII, IX, and X. That they were as follows:—

"Article VIII. The Treaties of Commerce and of Navigation, as well as all the Conventions and arrangements concluded between foreign Powers and the Porte, and now in force, are maintained in the Principality of Bulgaria, and no change shall be made in them with regard to any Power without its previous consent.

"No transit duties shall be levied in Bulgaria on goods passing through that Principality.

"The subjects and citizens and commerce of all the Powers shall be treated in the Principality on a footing of strict equality.

"The immunities and privileges of foreigners, as well as the rights of Consular jurisdiction and protection as established by the Capitulations and usages, shall remain in full force so long as they shall not have been modified with the consent of the parties concerned.

"Article IX. The amount of the annual tribute which the Principality of Bulgaria shall pay to the Suzerain Court—such amount being paid into whatever bank the Porte may hereafter designate—shall be fixed by an Agreement between the Powers signatory of the present Treaty at the close of the first year of the working of the new organization. This tribute shall be calculated on the mean revenue of the territory of the Principality.

"As Bulgaria is to bear a portion of the Public Debt of the Empire, when the Powers fix the tribute they shall take into consideration what portion of that debt can, on the basis of a fair proportion, be assigned to the Principality.

"Article X. Bulgaria takes the place of the Imperial Ottoman Government in its undertakings and obligations towards the Rustchuk-Varna Railway Company, dating from the exchange of the ratifications of the present Treaty. The settlement of the previous accounts is reserved for an understanding between the Sublime Porte, the Government of the Principality, and the administration of this Company.

"The Principality of Bulgaria likewise, so far as it is concerned, takes the place of the Sublime Porte in the engagements which the latter has contracted, as well towards Austria-Hungary as towards the Company, for working the railways of European Turkey in respect to the completion and connection, as well as the working of the railways situated in its territory.

"The Conventions necessary for the settlement of these questions shall be concluded between Austria-Hungary, the Porte, Servia, and the Principality of Bulgaria immediately after the conclusion of peace."

That few cases illustrating the position created for Bulgaria with respect to her capacity to contract with other Powers on commercial or other kindred matters had as yet come under consideration.

That in 1881, however, our predecessors in office reported that Varna, a Bulgarian port, was no doubt, in a sense, a part of the Ottoman Empire, but that it was equally clear that Bulgaria had been made, for fiscal purposes, independent of the Porte, and might make her own Treaties with foreign Powers with reference to import and export duties, which particular duties were then under consideration.

That it was, moreover, mentioned in the letter of reference to the Law Officers which was recited in the Report above quoted, that in December 1879 the Ottoman Government had ordered their Customs officials to treat goods arriving at Constantinople for transmission to Bulgaria as goods intended for a foreign country.

That in 1889 the Governments of Great Britain and of Bulgaria agreed, by means of an exchange of notes, on certain provisional stipulations regarding the Customs treatment to be accorded in either country to the trade of the other, and similar Agreements were also entered into, in a similar manner, by the German, French, Austrian, and Belgian Governments with Bulgaria.

That the following international compacts had also been entered into by the Bulgarian Government:—

June 24, 1879. Accession. Postal Union. (Hertslet's Treaties, vol. xv, p. 1068.)

September 18, 1880. Accession. International Telegraph Convention. (Hertslet's Treaties, vol. xv, p. 5034.)

July 28, 1883. Convention with Russia—expenses of occupation. (State Papers, vol. lxxiv, p. 1230.)

March 1, 1884. Accession to Geneva Convention for the amelioration of the condition of the wounded in armies in the field. (State Papers, vol. lxxv, p. 491.)

June 21, 1890. Convention. International Telegraph Regulations. (Hertslet's Treaties, vol. xviii, p. 540.)

That, as had been previously observed, by Article I of the Treaty of Berlin,

Bulgaria was constituted "an autonomous and tributary Principality under the suzerainty of His Imperial Majesty the Sultan." That neither the Treaty nor the Minutes of the International Conference at which the terms of the Treaty were settled contained any definition of, or commentary on, the word "autonomous." That it must presumably be understood in the sense deducible from its derivation, and as meaning that Bulgaria was henceforth to be at liberty to make her own laws free from the control of any other Power. That it was also presumed that the only limitations to that liberty would be those limitations which were imposed by the Treaty itself—which had not been modified in that respect by any subsequent Agreement—and by such rules of international law and of the comity of nations as affect generally other States.

That it had been suggested that Article VIII of the Treaty appeared to foresee the possibility, and to admit the legality, of Bulgaria and another Power agreeing to modify the "Treaties of Commerce and Navigation as well as all the Conventions and arrangements" subsisting between them at the moment Bulgaria became an "autonomous Principality."

That, on the other hand, the actual language of the Article seemed scarcely to go further than to make the consent of the other Power necessary. That it was not stated whether the modifications were to be arranged with Bulgaria or with the Porte. That inasmuch as Treaties between the Porte and foreign Powers were in question, quâ Bulgaria, it might conceivably be the latter.

That the list of designations of international compacts given in the said Article VIII was very full, and might well have been intended to include all International Agreements other than such political matters of external relationship as were reserved to Turkey as being Bulgaria's "Suzerain."

That Article X of the Treaty indeed directed that Conventions in regard to certain railway matters should be concluded between Bulgaria and other countries.

That if the view now suggested of the meaning and effect of the word "autonomous" were correct, it was conceived that Bulgaria could, except for any limitations imposed by the Treaty of Berlin itself, by international law, or by the comity of nations, legislate as freely as any other State, and that it was further conceived that she could therefore contract with any other State on any matter on which she could legislate.

That if that were so, it seemed that Bulgaria was at liberty to enter into an Agreement with Great Britain similar in substance to the draft Convention inclosed in Mr. Dering's despatch No. 61, Commercial, of the 30th October, 1893.

That it was thought, however, that the form given to the proposed Convention by the draft in question should be altered, as it would be improper that the Queen should contract on a footing of equality with the Prince of a vassal State.

That it was also thought that the words "ties of friendship" should be omitted from the preamble as possibly trenching on a question of political relationship which appertained rather to the Porte as Bulgaria's Suzerain.

That Sir Percy Anderson was to request that we would take the papers into our consideration, and favour the Secretary of State with our opinion as to whether the matters included in the above-mentioned draft Convention forwarded by Mr. Dering could properly form the subject of a compact between Her Majesty's Government and the Government of Bulgaria, and generally with any observations which might occur to us upon the subject.

We have taken the papers into our consideration, and have the honour to

Report—

That, in our opinion, the matters included in the above-mentioned draft Convention may properly form the subject of a compact between Her Majesty's Government and the Government of Bulgaria.

Our opinion is founded on considerations substantially the same as those set out in Sir Percy Anderson's letter; and we concur also in the suggestions therein contained as to the form to be given to the Convention.

CHILE.

No. 15.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Earl of Rosebery.—(Received January 17.)

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, January 16, 1894.

Violation of rights of Nitrate Railway Co. by Chilean Concession for a railway from Alianza to Chucumata.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified to us in Sir Thomas Sanderson's letter of the 29th December last, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying papers relating to matters arising out of the questions at issue between the Nitrate Railways Company and the Government of Chile.

That it would be seen from the letter of Messrs. A. Gibbs and Sons that their firm in Chile, Messrs. Gibbs and Co., were seeking to obtain a Concession from the Chilean Legislature for the construction of a line of railway from Alianza to Chucumata, which the Nitrate Railways Company contended was in violation of their rights.

That Messrs. A. Gibbs and Sons stated that they understood Her Majesty's Minister at Santiago had received instructions to use his influence with the Chilean Government to stop any executive action affecting the alleged privileges of the Nitrate Railways Company pending the decision of the Chilean Courts with regard to those privileges. That they had also learned that Mr. Kennedy had extended this intervention unofficially by endeavouring to prevent legislative action with a view to granting the fresh Concession which they had applied for to Congress, and which had already passed the Chamber of Deputies, and had been reported upon favourably by a Commission of the Senate.

That, in view of the situation, they asked that Her Majesty's Minister might be instructed to refrain from action until Congress had dealt with their Bill, and that he should reserve any protest, if it should be thought necessary to make one, until the promulgation of the Law was in the hands of the Executive. That they argued, however, that no such process was necessary or expedient, that British interests called for a position of neutrality on the part of Her Majesty's Government, and that the Nitrate Railways Company had adequate remedies for the protection of their rights in the local Courts without Mr. Kennedy's support, and they pressed for immediate instructions to Mr. Kennedy in the sense desired by them, as Congress would shortly rise, and a delay of the Concession till next autumn would be very injurious to them.

That it would be in our recollection that various questions relating to the affairs of the Nitrate Railways Company, some of which had already been before our predecessors in office at intervals during the two previous years, were referred to us on the 13th September, 1892, and that on the 3rd November of that year we replied that "in our opinion nothing has taken place since the Report of the Law Officers dated the 14th May, 1892, which ought to lead Her Majesty's Government to depart from the decision then arrived at, namely, to defer the consideration of the question of the propriety of further diplomatic action until the legal proceedings before the Chilean Tribunals have come to an end."

Sir Thomas Sanderson further stated that since the date of our last Report several communications had been received from Messrs. Budd, Johnson, and Jecks, the solicitors to the Nitrate Railways Company, asking for the good offices of Her Majesty's Government to prevent further action by the Chilean Government in contravention of their asserted monopoly until the Law Courts had pronounced upon the validity of their claim. Upon these communications telegrams were addressed to Her Majesty's Minister on the 10th June last, the 29th November, and the 3rd December, authorizing him to make unofficial representations in this sense, such instructions being considered to be in accordance with the general tenour of the opinions given by us and by our predecessors.

That this correspondence was inclosed for our information, together with Memoranda explanatory of it.

That it was difficult to form any satisfactory opinion on the points raised in Messrs. Anthony Gibbs' letter as against those contained in the letters from Messrs. Budd, Johnson, and Jecks, which involved an expert knowledge of Chilean law and procedure, and the application of such knowledge to the ex parte statements presented —now by the Nitrate Railways Company—now by their opponents in interest, Messrs. Gibbs and Sons. But that unless the correspondence were sent to Her Majesty's Minister for a Report, and for an expert opinion from a Chilean lawyer of eminence (a course which time did not permit), the necessary alternative was to deal with it on the spot.

That it did not appear to your Lordship that Her Majesty's Minister, whose representations had been unofficial, had departed to any extent from that neutral attitude which a British Minister was no doubt bound to maintain pendente lite towards British subjects in controversy before the Tribunals of the Power to which he was accredited.

But that under the circumstances, as time was of great importance, your Lordship had dispatched a telegram to Mr. Kennedy, of which a copy was inclosed, authorizing him to abstain from opposition to the passing of the Concession through the Senate, if this would not entail material injustice to the Nitrate Railways Company.

That your Lordship would be glad to be favoured with our opinion on the following points arising out of the correspondence:—

1. Whether the Nitrate Railways Company had sufficient legal remedies to allow of Her Majesty's Government refraining from opposition to the grant of fresh Concessions pendente lite.

2. Whether in particular the circumstances justified a definite instruction to Mr. Kennedy to abstain from action as regards the passing of the Concession to Messrs. A. Gibbs and Sons through Congress.

3. What course it would be proper that he should take as regards any action of the Executive to promulgate the Concession after Congress had passed it; and

4. Whether it would further be desirable specially to warn Mr. Kennedy to be careful to preserve a strictly neutral attitude as to the merits of the dispute.

We have also the honour to acknowledge the receipt of Mr. Francis Bertie's letter of the 12th instant, inclosing further correspondence, as noted in the margin.*

We have taken all the papers into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

In answer to the 1st question:

That we have no sufficient knowledge of the law of Chile, or, indeed, of the exact facts, to enable us to state with certainty what are the legal remedies of the Nitrate Railways Company. We gather, however, that Messrs. Gibbs are seeking not a Charter or grant from the Executive Government, but an Act of the Legislature of Chile authorizing them to construct the line of railway in question. Assuming that the Legislature act intra vires in such legislation, and that it is without condition and receives such Executive assent as the Constitution of Chile requires, we fail to see that the Nitrate Railways Company would have any remedy whatever, either by injunction or by action.

* Messrs. Budd and Co, January 11; to ditto, January 12; Messrs. A. Gibbs and Sons, January 11; to Mr. J. G. Kennedy, Telegraphic, January 11; Messrs. Budd and Co. (second letter), January 11, 1894.

In answer to the 2nd question:

That, in our opinion, the instructions to Mr. Kennedy ought to be that Her Majesty's Government would desire that nothing should be done either by legislation or by Executive act to alter the status quo until it shall have been seen how far the issue of the pending litigation has cleared up the complicated questions which have arisen. We fear that the telegram of the 11th January, 1894, to Mr. Kennedy would not unnaturally be understood as conveying that Her Majesty's Government were in favour of the passing of the Act by the Senate subject to remonstrance against its proclamation.

In this state of things it is important to have definite information whether, as alleged, the promulgation is a merely formal and matter of course act; if it is not it would appear to afford an adequate opportunity of remonstrance should the occasion justify it.

As to the pending litigation, it is impossible to predicate how far its issue will clear up the questions involved. We gather that one of those questions raises the contention that according to the law of Chile a Concession may be revoked by the Council of State, and, if this be the law, the Concession must, we conceive, be read subject to this power of revocation.

As to the 3rd question:

That Her Majesty's Government would be justified in asking the Executive not to promulgate the Concession pendente lite, and we think this course ought to be followed, if necessary.

As to the 4th question:

That it is desirable specially to warn Mr. Kennedy to be careful to preserve a strictly neutral attitude as to the merits of the dispute.

Generally:

That, in our opinion, there is no obligation on the part of Her Majesty's Government to interfere in the present state of things, except in the manner above indicated.

Messrs. Gibbs and Co. would appear to have given currency to the statement that Her Majesty's Government are in favour of the measure for granting their Concession passing the Senate, and we think it would be well (so far as is consistent with the telegram of the 11th January, 1894) that this impression should be removed.

Chinese passenger traffic between Chefoo and Vladivostock. Over-crowding of vessels.

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, February 14, 1894.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Thomas Sanderson's letter of the 18th November last, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list relating to a question to which your attention had been called by Her Majesty's Minister at Peking in regard to the over-crowding of vessels engaged in the Chinese passenger traffic between Chefoo and Chinese and Russian Manchuria.

That the position of the question, so far as British vessels were interested in it, was fully stated in Mr. O'Conor's despatch (No. 171) of the 29th July, 1893.

That our attention was especially invited to the despatch on the subject, addressed by Mr. Allen, the British Consul at Chefoo, to the Government of Hong Kong on the 27th June, in which he explained the grounds which, in his opinion, necessitated the adoption of effective measures in order to provide against the risks of over-crowding in British vessels conveying passengers between Chefoo and the districts above referred to.

That Mr. Allen appeared to have consulted the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court at Shanghae whether he should put in force the Regulations of the Hong Kong Ordinances No. 5 of 1874 and No. 1 of 1889 in the case of steamers clearing from Chefoo to Vladivostock with more than twenty Chinese passengers.

That eventually a Proclamation was issued by the Hong Kong Government under section 3 of the Chinese Passengers Act of 1855, whereby obligations were imposed on British ships so employed as to additional accommodation fees, &c., such as are not entailed in the case of shorter voyages.

That that Proclamation was, however, subsequently withdrawn on the ground of the disadvantages entailed thereby on British shipping, so long as the vessels of other Treaty Powers were not subjected to similar Regulations for the safety of passengers.

That the Board of Trade, to whom the correspondence had been referred, had expressed the opinion that it was desirable that effective measures should be taken to prevent over-crowding as far as British vessels engaged in the Chinese passenger traffic between Chefoo and Chinese and Russian Manchuria were concerned, but that power to interfere with British ships in such a matter should not be intrusted to a Consular officer unless he was in a position to avail himself of the requisite technical advice and assistance.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was to request that we would take the papers into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our views as to the form which such restrictive measures should take. That your Lordship was of opinion that, in any event, before such measures were enforced against British subjects and ships, it would be necessary that Her Majesty's Government should procure the concurrence of other Maritime Powers to similar restrictions being applied in respect of their nationals and vessels respectively.

That your Lordship also desired to be favoured with any general observations we might have to offer on the subject.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

That, in our opinion, any measures for the regulation of the passenger traffic in British vessels between Chefoo and Vladivostock should be in the form of a special Ordinance of the Legislature of Hong Kong to be passed, under section 2 of "The Chinese Passengers Act, 1855," after consultation with and obtaining the concurrence of other Maritime Powers as regards their ships, and to be duly proclaimed as mentioned in the said 2nd section.

The course already attempted of bringing the case within the existing Ordinances, by proclaiming that the voyage is to be deemed to be a voyage of more than seven days' duration, seems to us less desirable, both on account of the questions raised as to the actual duration of the voyage and the apparently unnecessary stringency in some respects of the existing Ordinances.

Issue of permits exempting rice from customs duty by Chinese Govt. to Chinese to the exclusion of foreign shipping lines.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, May 19, 1894.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Earl of Kimberley, the papers noted in the accompanying list, which relate to a practice on the part of the Chinese Government of issuing free permits exempting rice from customs duty to the China Merchants' Steam Navigation Company, to the exclusion of foreign shipping Lines.

This practice, as will be seen from the accompanying despatch from Mr. O'Conor, Her Majesty's Minister at Peking (No. 19 of the 16th January, 1893, Paper A), has arisen from a custom which has existed in China for many years past, of issuing, whenever there is by reason of famine or inundation a scarcity in a particular part of the Empire, Proclamations permitting the free import of grain into such districts with a view to reduce the price of food.

The Superintendent of Customs at the port of shipment was in such cases in the habit of issuing certificates granting exemption of duty, called "Huchass," to all applicants, for such quantities of rice or wheat as they might require, and the holders of these permits were formerly at liberty to ship their grain by any line of steamers they pleased, the only condition being that the certificates should be used within a reasonable period of time from their issue.

Until recently vessels of all nationalities have participated in this trade, and, as showing the magnitude which it attained, it may be mentioned that as much as 150,000 tons were, during the year 1891, exported in this way from Shanghae alone.

In August 1892 orders were issued to permit the export of grain free of duty to Tien-tsin, and the local authorities at Shanghae accordingly commenced to issue exemption certificates, but introduced an important difference in the wording, making them available only by the steamers of the China Merchants' Company, a native Line.

The agents of the two principal Lines of British steamers at once protested to Her Majesty's Consul-General at Shanghae at this attempt to oust them from their fair share in the carrying trade.

Representations were in the first instance made by Her Majesty's Consul-General to the local authorities, and on this proving of no avail, a more formal protest was addressed by Her Majesty's Legation at Peking to the Chinese Government, by whom it was argued that the grain in question was virtually Government property, and was exempted from duty on the same principle as the tribute grain which is brought annually from the south to Tien-tsin, and the conveyance of which is confined exclusively to the steamers of the China Merchants' Company.

It was proved, however, by Her Majesty's Minister, as the result of practical experiment, that the rice in question was, in point of fact, bought and sold in open market; this contention would therefore appear to be unsustainable.

Under these circumstances, Her Majesty's Minister formally protested against the Concession to a native Company of preferential privileges in the carriage of an ordinary article of commerce as an infringement of Article III of the Commercial Treaty of 1880 between China and the United States (Paper B), to the benefits of which British subjects are entitled under Article LIV of the Treaty of Tien-tsin of 1858 (Paper C).

This view was strongly contested by the Chinese Government, who maintained that that clause merely provides for uniformity of duties upon articles of commerce carried by foreign and native vessels, but that it does not necessarily imply that rice carried for the relief of distress is such an article of commerce.

It was, nevertheless, finally promised that the monopoly complained of should be abolished. (Mr. O'Conor's No. 120 of the 9th May, 1893, Paper D.)

Owing, however, to the disastrous floods of last summer in northern China, the system was revived, and further free permits for rice for the affected districts were issued again exclusively to the China Merchants' Steam Navigation Company, as reported in Mr. O'Conor's No. 200 of the 30th August, 1893 (Paper E).

It appeared to Her Majesty's Government that if the rice was an ordinary article of commerce and not the boná fide property of the Chinese Government, no preferential treatment could properly be granted to any one Company to the exclusion of others without infringement of the Articles of the Treaties above mentioned, and Her Majesty's Minister was instructed to point out to the Chinese Government that it was impossible to admit the pretension that urgent measures of relief could form an excuse for, or indeed be otherwise than hindered by, this monopoly, and to claim for the firms affected the rights to which they were entitled by Treaty. (Vide despatch to Mr. O'Conor, No. 248, of the 2nd November, 1893, Paper F.)

The course of the discussions and the contentions of the Chinese Government are further illustrated by Mr. O'Conor's despatches Nos. 226 and 235 of the 10th and 24th October, 1893, respectively (Papers G and H).

In the opinion of Her Majesty's Government, besides the Articles of the Treaties above quoted, Article XLIV of the Treaty between Spain and China of the 10th October, 1864 (Paper I), may be relied on as supporting this view. The Article in question grants to Spanish vessels the right of engaging in the coasting trade.

Similar Articles also exist in the Treaties between—

China and Austria, 1864	Paper marked (J)
„ Belgium, 1865	„ (K)
„ Italy, 1866	„ (M)

Her Majesty's Minister, however, in view of the tenacity with which the Chinese Government have adhered to its own view, is disposed to think that little impression is likely to be produced by continued argument, unless accompanied by a claim for compensation for the loss inflicted on British shipping interests by the unjust privileges given to their rivals. (Mr. O'Conor's despatch No. 63 of the 14th March, 1894, Paper N.)

Lord Kimberley therefore wishes to submit to you the question whether the practice complained of does (as contended by Her Majesty's Government) constitute an infringement of the Treaty rights of Great Britain; and, if so, whether Her Majesty's Government would be justified in advancing a claim for compensation in the manner contemplated.

I am to request that you will take the Papers transmitted herewith into your consideration, and that you will favour the Earl of Kimberley with your opinion upon these questions, as well as with any general observations which you may have to offer on the case.

That, in our opinion, the practice complained of would constitute an infringement of the Treaty-rights of Great Britain if British subjects were excluded from the benefits of carrying rice duty free.

We are further of opinion that Her Majesty's Government would be justified in addressing a claim for compensation in the manner contemplated whenever damage is occasioned thereby to British subjects.

At present, however, it appears to be admitted that no such damage is occasioned, owing to the pooling arrangements mentioned in the correspondence, but care should be taken to reserve clearly the right of diplomatic representation, and claim for damages to British subjects whenever occasion requires.

Royal Courts of Justice, August 16, 1894.

Chinese passenger traffic. Overcrowding of vessels. Power of Hong Kong Govt. to make Regulations under Act of 1855.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Bertie's letter of the 21st ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers relating to the question of the overcrowding of vessels engaged in the Chinese passenger traffic between Chefoo and Chinese and Russian Manchuria.

That the previous history of this case was brought to the attention of our predecessors in November last, and that, with a view to carry out the recommendations of the Law Officers as expressed in their Report of the 14th February, a draft Circular to Her Majesty's Representatives at the Courts of the Maritime Powers was prepared inviting them to co-operate in an attempt to check this abuse by enforcing upon their subjects Regulations analogous to those contemplated by Her Majesty's Government.

That the Colonial Office and Board of Trade were, in the meanwhile, consulted with a view to the preparation of a draft Ordinance to be passed by the Legislature of Hong Kong for the enforcement of the proposed Regulations.

That the Board of Trade had now communicated a Memorandum which they had received from their Solicitor, stating that he had been unable to satisfy himself that the Government of Hong Kong had any power under the Chinese Passenger Act of 1855 to make Regulations in respect of vessels proceeding to sea on voyages of less than seven days' duration.

That the reasons for this view were fully set forth in the Memorandum by Mr. Murton, C.B., which accompanied the Board of Trade letter of the 10th July.

That this Memorandum was subsequently considered in conference by the legal advisers of the Colonial and Foreign Offices respectively, who concurred generally in the views expressed by Mr. Murton, and it had therefore been considered desirable to resubmit the papers to us in order to obtain our opinion on the specific point raised in his Memorandum, and in the event of that view of the construction of the Act being considered correct, on the further question, whether a short amending Act should not be passed, or some other, and, if so, what steps should be taken to confer upon the Government of Hong Kong the powers necessary to enforce Regulations of the nature desired.

That the papers previously submitted to our predecessors, which included a copy of the Chinese Passenger Act of 1855, were sent for convenience of reference.

Mr. Bertie further stated that he was to request that we would take the papers into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion on the questions submitted in his letter, and with any general observations which we might have to offer on the matter.

We have taken the papers into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

That, in our opinion, the Government of Hong Kong have power under the Chinese Passenger Act of 1855 to make Regulations in respect of vessels proceeding to sea on voyages of less than seven days' duration.

There is no limitation in the 2nd section of the Act, which is the source of the authority of the Legislature of Hong Kong to make Regulations.

The limitations appearing in Schedule (A) represent the scope of the Regulations thought suitable when the Act was passed; they do not qualify the power of the Legislature of Hong Kong to make other quite different Regulations if they see fit.

The limitations appearing in sections 4 and 8 of the Act expressly enjoin certain duties upon ships on voyages of more than seven days, and penalties for non-compliance, but do not in any way curtail the provisions of section 2.

We therefore see no necessity for any amending Act, or any other step of that character, considering that the existing law suffices for the purpose.

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen,

Foreign Office, November 13, 1894.

Conveyance by sea of silver lent to China by Hong Kong and Shanghae

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Earl of Kimberley, the accompanying letter from the Hong Kong and Shanghae Banking Corporation,* stating that they have recently made arrangements for a loan of half-a-million sterling to the Chinese Government, and that it is intended that an instalment of the loan shall be provided by the Shanghae branch of the Bank, under conditions explained, by means of silver shipped to Tien-tsin. It has, however, been suggested to the Corporation that, from the fact of the Bank having raised a loan for the Chinese Government, such shipment of silver might be declared contraband of war, and, although conveyed by a steamer under the British flag, be liable to seizure by the Japanese. They are therefore desirous to know how the case stands, and solicit advice and assistance in the matter.

Banking Corporation. Liability to seizure as contraband of war.

The main question which appears to arise is whether this money, which is on board a neutral vessel going to a belligerent port, is not properly to be considered to be ancipitis usus, and thus conditionally contraband, and whether, if so, the further presumption does not fairly arise in the particular case that it is intended to use the money in furtherance of the purposes of war. This is, no doubt, a matter of the appreciation of evidence, and would have, if the vessel were seized for carrying contraband, to be settled by the Japanese Prize Court; and under these circumstances there would seem to be no ground for objecting to the vessel being stopped on the high seas, with a view to being brought in, for adjudication before the competent Tribunal, by a Japanese man-of-war.

It appears to Lord Kimberley to be quite out of the question, in any circumstances, for Her Majesty's Government to provide the vessel with a naval convoy, as is apparently suggested in the postscript to the letter from the Corporation.

It is important for the Corporation to have a speedy vessel, as the navigation of the Peiho will be closed in a few days by frost.

I am to request that you will take this matter into your immediate consideration, and that you will favour Lord Kimberley, at your earliest convenience, with your opinion, and with any general observations which you may have to offer on the case.

Report.

In our opinion, money may or may not be contraband according to its destination, and the purpose for which it is intended. In this particular case we think there is a fair presumption which would warrant a Japanese war-ship in stopping the vessel carrying the silver on the high seas, and bringing her in for adjudication. Whether or not the money would be condemned would then depend upon whether the evidence established a purpose to apply it in furthering military operations in China.

We agree that it would be quite contrary to usage for a convoy to be furnished by Her Majesty's Government.

Submission of G. Pegna, Brit. subject, partner in German firm, to jurisdiction of German Consul in Egypt.

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, February 14, 1894.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Bertie's letter of the 3rd ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a copy of a despatch from Her Majesty's Representative at Cairo respecting an application made by Mr. Guttieres Pegna, a British subject, to be permitted to submit himself to the jurisdiction of the German Consulate in Egypt in all matters relating to a German firm in which he was about to become a partner.

That Mr. Bertie was also to inclose, for our information, copies of the Minutes written in the Foreign Office on Lord Cromer's despatch.

That your Lordship requested that we would take the matter into consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion whether Mr. Pegna's request might properly be granted; and

That your Lordship would also be glad to be furnished with any general observations which we might wish to offer upon the legal points involved.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have considered the matter, and have the honour to

Report—

That, in our opinion, there is no reason in principle why Mr. Pegna's request to be allowed to submit himself to the jurisdiction of the German Consulate in Egypt in all civil matters relating to the German firm should not be granted. The withdrawal of Mr. Pegna from the jurisdiction of the British Court either in criminal or civil matters ought not to be permitted, but this withdrawal would not, in our opinion, be effected by such a submission as above mentioned.

Remission of sentence on V. Minasi.

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, July 18, 1894.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir H. Percy Anderson's letter of the 4th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch* which had been received from Sir Charles Cookson, Her Majesty's Consul-General and Judge at Alexandria, inclosing a Petition from Vicenzo Minasi, a convict in the prison of the Chief Consular Court for Egypt, who was sentenced by that Court to one year's penal servitude on the 28th November, 1893, upon his conviction after trial by jury of the offence of embezzlement in his capacity of clerk.

That Sir Percy Anderson was also to inclose a copy of the Judge's notes of the evidence taken at the trial.*

That Sir C. Cookson recommended the prayer of the convict to the favourable consideration of the Secretary of State on two grounds: his previous good conduct, and his good behaviour while in prison.

That the former ground was doubtless considered by the Judge in pronouncing sentence on Minasi; while, by the operation of the system of "days of grace," Minasi's good conduct during his imprisonment would enure to his advantage, and would procure him his discharge somewhat before the expiration of the term of his original sentence.

That, as the case appeared to your Lordship to have been a very serious one of breach of trust, and as the sentence did not seem to have been at all excessive under the circumstances, your Lordship entertained serious doubts as to the propriety of granting the prisoner's petition, but that your Lordship was anxious to be favoured with our opinion on this point before finally deciding the matter.

That Sir Percy Anderson was therefore to request that we would take the papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether any, and, if so, what, remission of Minasi's sentence might properly be made.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands, we have taken the matter into our consideration, and have the honour to

Report—

That we think that a remission of three months of the sentence may properly be made if the Secretary of State thinks fit. We do not advise this upon the ground that the original sentence was excessive, but upon the ground that the Judge who passed it considers the case, with the merits of which he is familiar, as one for merciful consideration.

Provincial Consular Court at Alexandria. As to holding concomitantly with and during closing of Chief Court for Egypt.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, August 6, 1894.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Earl of Kimberley, the papers noted in the accompanying list, which raise questions with regard to the arrangements to be made for the discharge of the legal business of the Chief Consular Court for Egypt during the absence on leave, or on emergency, of the Judge of that Court.

It will be seen that by the conjoint operation of the Ottoman Orders in Council, 1873 (Article 14) and 1874, Her Majesty's Consul at Alexandria for the time being holds the office of Judge of Her Britannic Majesty's Chief Consular Court—to which he is appointed by a separate warrant under Her Majesty's Sign Manual—that he must be (with certain exceptions which it is unnecessary for the present purpose to consider) at the time of his appointment a member of the Bar of England, Scotland, or Ireland, of not less than seven years' standing, and that during a vacancy in the office of Judge, or on emergency, a fit person approved by the Secretary of State may temporarily be Acting Judge, with all the jurisdiction, power, and authority of Judge.

Sir Charles Cookson, who was originally appointed Consul "for the city and port of Alexandria" and Judge at that place on the 30th November, 1874, still holds the office of Judge of the Chief Court. In 1891 he was promoted to be Consul-General, the district assigned to him in his commission as Consul-General being also the city and port of Alexandria.

Up to the year 1889 it appears to have been the invariable custom—when Sir Charles Cookson went on leave, or other emergencies arose—to appoint temporarily as Acting Judge some gentleman from the Consular service or elsewhere who possessed the legal qualification prescribed in section 3 of Article 15 of the Ottoman Order of 1873.

Since the year 1889, however, this practice seems to have been discontinued, and on the recommendation of Sir Charles Cookson, Mr. Alban, the British Vice-Consul at Alexandria, who has from time to time during the absence of Sir Charles Cookson on leave been appointed Acting Consul-General at that place, but who himself possesses neither a Royal Commission nor the legal qualification above mentioned, has been on more than one occasion permitted to discharge judicial functions at Alexandria during the absence of the Judge.

Lord Kimberley, however, entertains some doubt as to whether such functions can be exercised at Alexandria—which is the seat of the Chief Consular Court for Egypt—by any one except the Judge of that Court, or, in his absence, by some person possessing the legal qualification prescribed by Order in Council in the case of an Acting Judge, and duly appointed to that office.

Sir Charles Cookson is, as is gathered, of opinion that a Provincial Court can sit at Alexandria concomitantly with the Chief Court, and that the Judge of the Chief Court being, according to the proper construction of the Order in Council, a Consular officer duly qualified to hold and form a Provincial Consular Court for his Consular district can as Consul-General hold and form such a Provincial Court for the city and port of Alexandria, notwithstanding that Alexandria is the seat of the Chief Consular Court.

It is suggested that Mr. Alban, as Acting Consul-General, can sit in such Provincial Court for Alexandria when and if it has been held and formed by the Consul-General for that city and port; and that such a Court, although its sittings are in abeyance so long as the Consul-General presides in the Chief Consular Court in his capacity of Judge, has always existed, and—on the closing of the Chief Consular Court during the absence of the Consul-General and Judge—revives so as to permit the Acting Consul-General to sit therein, and to adjudicate upon all cases which are within the competence of a commissioned Consular officer when sitting in a Provincial Court.

Sir Charles Cookson has, however, been good enough to prepare a Memorandum, to which I am to beg your especial attention, setting forth in more detail the grounds on which he bases his opinion.

On the other hand, it is suggested that the holding of a Provincial Court at Alexandria—either concomitantly with the Chief Consular Court, or while that Court is temporarily closed—is inconsistent with the general scheme and system of arrangement of the Courts under the Ottoman Orders in Council.

These Orders, more especially the Principal Order of 1873, do not appear to contemplate the holding of a Provincial Court at Alexandria at any time, and it appears doubtful whether the word "provincial," as used in the Orders in Council, is properly applicable to any act, event, or entity which is done, takes place, or exists at the seat of the Chief Consular Court.

This view is strengthened by reference to the provisions of the Order which deal with the Supreme Court at Constantinople in its connection with, and relation to, the various Provincial Courts within its district.

Moreover, Article 31 of the Order of 1873 clearly differentiates the Chief Court for Egypt (which sits at Alexandria) from the various Provincial Courts, as also does Article 35.

Again, Article 36, while providing that the Chief Court shall sit at Alexandria, makes no provision for a Provincial Court there.

Article 2 of the Order of 1874 makes Her Majesty's Consul (now Consul-General) at Alexandria the Judge of the Chief Court, and Article 94 of the Order of 1873 provides for the Judge of the Chief Court referring less important matters to the Law Secretary, a provision which seems inconsistent with the holding of a Provincial Court in the same place.

In these circumstances, Lord Kimberley will be glad if you will take the provisions of the Orders in Council into your consideration, and favour him with your opinion as to—

1. Whether a Provincial Consular Court can be held at Alexandria (a) concomitantly with and (b) during the temporary closing of the Chief Court for Egypt.

2. If the answer to either or both of the above questions be in the affirmative, by what Consular officer, i.e., whether the Consul-General for the city and port of Alexandria, or the Vice-Consul, should such Provincial Court be held and formed?

Collection of Ottoman Orders in Council (Confidential No. 2354.)

Report.

1. In our opinion, unless the Secretary of State has made an exception under Article 15 of the Order in Council of 1873, a Provincial Consular Court can be held at Alexandria both (a) concurrently with and (b) during the temporary closing of the Chief Court for Egypt.

We see nothing in the general scheme of the Order that is inconsistent with this view, and we may observe that the Articles in the China and Japan Order for 1865, prohibiting the holding of Provincial Courts in the districts where the superior Courts are held, seem purposely to have been omitted from the Order of 1873.

2. In this case, as the Acting Consul-General is also Vice-Consul, we are of opinion that no difficulty arises in his forming and holding a Provincial Court unless the Secretary of State has made an exception in his case under Article 15. If any conflict of jurisdiction arose between the Consul-General and the Vice-Consul, the Secretary of State could determine it by excluding either or both of them under Article 15 from forming and holding a Provincial Court.

Foreign Office, March 22, 1894.

Gentlemen,

H.M.'s Treaty obligations in Newfoundland.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Earl of Kimberley, the papers noted in the accompanying list, relating to two questions connected with Her Majesty's Treaty obligations in Newfoundland, which have been raised upon consideration of the Naval Officers' Reports on the Newfoundland fisheries for the season of 1893.

These questions are :—

1. Salting lobsters for export.

1. Whether the new industry of salting lobsters for export is or is not an infringement of the modus vivendi.

2. Transfer of lobster factories to new sites.

2. Whether, in regard to certain proposed transfers of lobster factories to new sites, a matter which is provided for in the modus vivendi, but as to which the French Admiral raised serious difficulties for the first time last year, Her Majesty's Government are justified in remonstrating against the refusal of the French Admiral to sanction any such transfers.

As regards the salting of lobsters, it will be seen from the 9th paragraph of the Colonial Office letter of the 11th February that Her Majesty's Secretary of State for the Colonies is of opinion that this industry is not an infringement of the modus vivendi; but Lord Kimberley entertains grave doubts on this subject—doubts which are in a great measure confirmed by a perusal of the annexed Memorandum by Mr. Hall, to whom the papers were referred. Whether or not the salting is done on board ship or on shore does not appear clearly from the correspondence, but his Lordship understands from the Colonial Office that it is, as a matter of fact, done on shore in the houses of the fishermen, and not on board ship. This would appear to be a point of considerable importance in considering the legality of the industry under the provisions of the modus vivendi.

In regard to the refusal of the French Admiral to sanction transfers of lobster factories to new sites, Lord Kimberley concurs in the views expressed in paragraphs 10 to 14 of the Colonial Office letter of the 11th February, and, subject to your concurrence, he proposes to address a representation to the French Government on this subject if it be eventually decided to propose a renewal of the modus vivendi for the ensuing season.

I am to request that you will take the papers transmitted herewith into your consideration, and that you will favour his Lordship with your opinion on the questions submitted in this letter, viz., whether, under the modus vivendi, Her Majesty's Government are bound to prohibit the salting of lobsters or not, or whether they may leave it open, as suggested by Mr. Hall, as a set-off against the refusal of the French authorities to permit transfers of British lobster factories to new sites; and lastly, whether, if the modus vivendi should be renewed, they would be justified in remonstrating against the action of the French Admiral in refusing his sanction to the transfer of existing British lobster factories to new sites.

Lord Kimberley would be glad at the same time to be favoured with any general observations which you may desire to offer on the papers.

I have, &c.

Report.

1. Although the point is by no means free from difficulty, it is on the whole the better construction of the modus vivendi to hold that it was intended, with reference to the whole question of lobster fishery, to preserve the existing state of things, and that the new method of salting lobsters was not contemplated, and is not permissible.

If, as it now appears, the salting is carried on in the fishermen's houses on shore, there is even greater difficulty in supporting it than if it were done on board the fishing-vessels.

2. That we concur in the views expressed in paragraphs 10 to 14 of the Colonial Office letter of the 11th February last, and are of opinion that a representation on the subject may properly be addressed to the French Government.

3. That the construction of the modus vivendi, which on the whole we adopt on the first question, is not so clear as to make it improper to leave that question open as a set-off against the contention of the French authorities on the other question.

Colonial Office to Foreign Office.

Downing Street, February 11, 1894.

Sir,

I AM directed by the Marquess of Ripon to transmit to you, to be laid before the Earl of Rosebery, copies of the Naval Officers' Reports on the Newfoundland fisheries for the season of 1893.

2. The only points in Commodore Howe's covering letter to which Lord Ripon desires to call attention are the remarks as to the continued prevalence of smuggling and the want of medical attendance among the inhabitants of the Treaty Shore, and his Lordship proposes to bring Commodore Howe's remarks on these points to the notice of the Colonial Government.

3. The letter printed at p. 44, as to the reoccupation of the coast, forms the subject of a separate communication.

4. On the letter which forms the third inclosure, p. 45, containing the report on the working of the modus vivendi, several questions of importance arise.

5. The difficulty alluded to in paragraph 2 as arising from the fact that the renewal of the modus vivendi is not notified till the spring, while the preparations for the lobster fishery are made in the autumn, does not appear to Lord Ripon to be of serious importance, as the present position with regard to the arbitration must be well known on the coast, and also, therefore, the probability of a continued renewal of the modus vivendi; but if by the end of the next fishing season no steps have been taken for providing the necessary permanent legislation which must precede the arbitration, it may be desirable to arrange for the renewal of the modus vivendi for the season of 1895 during the next autumn, with a view to avoiding any pretext of a grievance on this account.

6. With regard to the observations in paragraphs 3, 4, 5, and 16 as to the limits prescribed for adjacent lobster facfories, Lord Ripon entirely agrees in Commodore Howe's view, that the naval officers should not interfere in disputes between British subjects, for, although the Colonial Magistrates have not, so far as his Lordship is aware, any authority to compel the observance of the factory limits assigned by the naval officers, it is the duty of the Colonial Government to provide for the maintenance of peace and order amongst the population, and it is undesirable that the naval officers should use the arbitrary powers intrusted to them except in cases where the Treaty rights of the French are clearly involved. Captain Howe has informed the Colonial Government of his views on this question in his letter of the 3rd October, pp. 55–57.

7. Similarly, with regard to the remarks in paragraphs 17 to 19, Lord Ripon concurs in the Commodore's view, that the naval officers should exercise their powers as colonial justices as little as possible, and should endeavour to divert the cases in which they are now called upon to act as Justices to the Courts of the local Magistrates. It is no doubt convenient to the Colonial Government to engage the services of the naval officers in this capacity, and, so long as the population of the Treaty Coast consisted entirely of poor fishermen, the arrangement was one for which there were good reasons. Now, however, that a large number of capitalist employers has grown up who are ready to misrepresent every action of the naval officers for local political purposes, the time appears to have come when the naval officers should be confined to their proper duties in connection with the fishery, and the Colonial Government called upon to make proper provision for dispensing justice among the inhabitants of the coast.

8. The action of the master of the steam-ship "Harlaw" in encouraging violations of the modus vivendi, which is referred to in paragraphs 11 to 14, Lord Ripon proposes to bring to the notice of the Colonial Government, and to request them to instruct their Customs officials to inform the naval officers of any consignments of tins for persons who are not the owners of authorized factories.

9. With regard to the practice, referred to in paragraph 20, of salting lobsters for export, Lord Ripon fails to see that it infringes the modus vivendi. That arrangement deals only with factories for the canning of lobsters, and neither under it, nor under the old Treaties, are Her Majesty's Government under any obligation to prevent British subjects from catching either lobsters or any kind of fish, unless such catching interferes with the actual exercise of French rights. If any question is raised, therefore, by the French naval officers as to the new industry, Lord Ripon thinks that the Commodore should decline to intervene except there is interference with the legitimate fishery operations of French subjects.

10. The question of transfers of lobster factories to new sites, as to which the French Admiral raised difficulties for the first time, is a very serious one. It will be seen from the correspondence printed at pp. 54 and 55, and from Commodore Howe's letter to the Governor of the 9th October (p. 58), that Admiral Sallandrouze de Lamornaix maintains that the transfer of a factory from one site to another is equivalent to the creation of a new factory, to which, under the modus vivendi, his consent is indispensable, and the concluding words of his letter of the 30th June would seem to imply that for the future a transfer of an English factory would only be allowed in return for the transfer of a French factory. If the French Government intend to maintain this view, which is not warranted by the terms of the modus vivendi, Lord Ripon fears that serious complications will arise. The intention of the modus vivendi was that the status quo of the lobster industry on the 1st July, 1889, should be maintained pending the settlement by arbitration of the questions at issue between Her Majesty's Government and the Government of France.

11. The Agreement carefully distinguishes transfers from new factories, and while it provides that for each new English factory a new French factory may be established, it makes no such condition as to transfers, simply making them subject to the agreement of both the naval officers, a condition necessary to prevent disputes, and not intended to confer on either party an arbitrary veto on transfers by nationals of the other.

12. It is to be remembered that the English factories outnumber the French by more than seven to one, and to admit the right of the French naval officer to refuse a transfer on purely arbitrary grounds would mean, in a very short time, that the English factories would be reduced to the same number as the French, a result which could scarcely be called maintaining the status quo.

13. It appears to Lord Ripon that where the site to which it is proposed to transfer a factory is such that it would not interfere with the operations of an existing factory or with the cod-fishery of the French, that the transfer should be allowed as a matter of course, subject always to the condition insisted upon by the French Commodore in his letter of the 7th July, 1891, that the buildings on the old site are demolished.

14. Lord Ripon would suggest that the attention of the French Government should be called to the matter, and that a protest should be made against the action of Admiral Sallandrouze de Lamornaix in arbitrarily refusing his consent to transfers of British factories.

15. I am to observe, in conclusion, that Commodore Howe appears to have acted throughout the season with tact and judgment, and Lord Ripon proposes, if Lord Rosebery concurs, to so inform the Admiralty.

I am, &c.

Gentlemen,

Occupation of Newfoundland Treaty Shore for fishery purposes by fishermen from St. Pierre.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by the direction of the Earl of Kimberley, the papers noted in the accompanying list, which relate to the projected occupation of the Treaty Shore of Newfoundland for fishery purposes by individual fishermen from St. Pierre, and to the measures taken by the French authorities at St. Pierre to encourage and assist this novel mode of carrying on the cod-fishery.

The details of the scheme are explained in the Colonial Office letter marked B of the 11th February, and it will be seen that in the opinion of Her Majesty's Secretary of State for the Colonies the proceedings contemplated are inconsistent with existing Treaty stipulations, and that consequently a protest should at once be addressed to the French Government.

The extracts from the several Treaties and other engagements defining the French rights of fishery will be found set out at length in the paper which is inclosed marked (C).

The question was referred to Mr. W. E. Hall for his observations, and these will be found in a Memorandum by that gentleman dated the 11th instant.

I am to request that you will take the papers transmitted herewith into your consideration, and that you will favour Lord Kimberley with your opinion as to whether it is necessary or desirable to address a remonstrance to the French Government upon the subject; and, if so, that you will further be good enough to indicate the grounds upon which such a remonstrance may, from a legal point of view, most advantageously be based.

Lord Kimberley would also be glad to receive any general observations which you may have to offer on the case.

(C.) Extracts of Treaties and other stipulations relative to the French rights of fishery in Newfoundland (taken from Preamble to draft Bill). Inclosure in Colonial Office, April 23, 1894.

Report.

That, in our opinion (though the question is not free from difficulty), and subject to the possibility of the French Government having evidence, at present unknown, of the bye-boat system of fishing having been employed by French fishermen previously to the Treaty of Paris, the projected occupation of the Treaty Shore for fishery purposes by individual fishermen from St. Pierre is inconsistent with existing Treaty stipulations, and we concur in, and adopt, the reasoning contained in Mr. Hall's Memorandum received on the 12th March.

We are of opinion, therefore, that it is desirable that a remonstrance should be addressed to the French Government, based on the grounds that the proposed method of fishing was not the recognized method that French fishermen had followed down to the time of the Declaration of 1783, and that the use proposed to be made of the Island of St. Pierre is inconsistent with the purpose for which that island was ceded.

We may add that, although we have not had all the means of arriving at a decision on the point of fact which appear to have been, at one time or another, at the disposal of Mr. Hall, we see no reason to differ from the conclusion at which he has arrived as to the meaning of the words "the method of carrying on the fishery which has been at all times acknowledged," occurring in the Declaration of 1783.

Annex.

Memorandum by Mr. Hall.

THE occupation of Tweed Island in 1893 by boat-fishermen from St. Pierre violates, in my opinion, the spirit of the Treaties conferring fishing privileges upon French citizens; the extensive "reoccupation of the French Shore" which it is proposed shall be effected during the present year will, of course, constitute a further violation, grave in proportion to its magnitude. I think, at the same time, that the intended encroachment is ingeniously conceived, and that it is one the true nature of which it may not be altogether easy to place in a clear light. I am not—at present, at least—quite certain what may have been the fishing practices in the eighteenth century; and so much misuse of St. Pierre and Miquelon has been permitted that there is a certain difficulty in showing that their use as a fishing-base differs markedly from much that has been quietly allowed.

The intended "reoccupation" appears to be modelled upon the practice of "bye-boat" fishing, which prevailed among the English fishermen during the end of the seventeenth and a great of the eighteenth century. Men were taken out from England in the regular fishing-ships as passengers, who owned small boats, with which they seem to have fished independently, curing also their fish independently, I suppose precisely as it is intended that the French boat-fishermen shall fish and cure during the coming summer. It is so long since I had occasion to read the very voluminous papers referring to the Newfoundland fisheries, for the purpose of drawing the draft Case, that I cannot be sure that I either remember all the passages which may bear upon the practice in question, or that I can place my hand upon them—the point had no immediate connection with the lobster dispute. But so far as I can recall, or can discover without reading afresh nearly the whole mass of material, I do not think there is anything to show that this mode of fishing was practised on the shore where the French had fishing rights; and as it was certainly not part of the general customs of the fishery of which we commonly hear (it was a subject of complaint within the exclusively English fishery), I think it more than doubtful whether it can have existed there. Nor can I remember any indication that the French themselves at any time practised this method of fishing.

Apart, then, from a certain amount of boat-fishing by local inhabitants, or "planters," it is, I think, pretty clear that at the time of the Declaration of 1783 there was no "bye" or other boat-fishing on the shore where the French were allowed to fish, and that—so far as the French were concerned—the sole method of fishing contemplated in that Agreement, as the "méthode qui a été de tout temps reconnue," was the method of fishing from vessels of sufficient tonnage to cross the ocean, by means of boats attached to them, manned from their crew, and bringing in their fish to be cured at the stages occupied for the season. At the same time, the possibility that the French Government may have evidence of this "bye-boat" system having been employed by French fishermen previously to the Treaty of Paris cannot be wholly lost sight of. They will also, no doubt, contend that they are at liberty to pursue all methods of fishing which were practised by the English before 1783, and as the English then both fished from St. John's and still employed "bye-boats" to some extent, it may be argued, with a superficial appearance of truth, that French fishermen, in fishing by means of small boats annually sent out from St. Pierre, are only using a method of fishing which is strictly analogous to one which was followed by the English anteriorly to the Treaty of Paris.

St. Pierre and Miquelon were, however, only ceded to the French for a narrow and strictly defined purpose, which to my mind is wholly inconsistent with the use which it is now intended to make of them. They were to serve "réellement d'abri aux pêcheurs Français;" in other words, they were to serve as a purely temporary shelter, as a place of refuge from weather, a place for watering, provisioning, and refitting. The word is incapable of bearing the interpretation that the islands are to be treated as a Colony, with fishing interests of its own, with fishery regulations different from those of the fishermen from France, with an independent share in the privileges of the "French Shore." It may indeed be reasonably contended that the limitations imposed upon the use of St. Pierre and Miquelon cast a reflex light upon the meaning of that part of the Declaration which provides that the fishery shall be carried on upon both sides according to "la méthode qui a été de tout temps reconnue," and from it to have been intended that each party should continue to fish in the manner which it had itself habitually followed, if in view of the difference between the then existing customs of the French and English respectively, doubt upon the subject could otherwise be entertained. Cut out the right of using St. Pierre as a Colony, or as an independent fishing base, and all fishery analogous to much of that which was pursued by the inhabitants of Newfoundland before 1783 becomes impossible to French fishermen.

Gentlemen,

Occupation of Newfoundland Treaty Shore for fishery purposes by fishermen from St. Pierre.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Earl of Kimberley, the papers noted in the accompanying list, which relate to the question of the occupation of the Treaty Shore of Newfoundland for fishery purposes by individual fishermen from St. Pierre, with the approval and assistance of the French local authorities.

In accordance with the opinion expressed in the Report with which the Law Officers of the Crown favoured his Lordship on the 7th April last (see paper marked D), Her Majesty's Ambassador at Paris was instructed to address a remonstrance to the French Government, based on the grounds that the proposed method of fishing was not the recognized method which French fishermen had followed down to the time of the Declaration of 1783, and that the use to be made of the Island of St. Pierre was inconsistent with the purpose for which that island was ceded to France (see paper marked E).

The reply of the French Government to that representation is contained in a note from M. Hanotaux, dated the 31st July (see paper marked F), in which it is argued at some length that the course contemplated by the local authorities at St. Pierre and Miquelon is not at variance with the stipulations of the Declaration of the Treaty of Versailles of 1783. It is likewise argued that the instructions issued to the British and French Naval Commanders in Newfoundland waters obviate the possibility of any fears being entertained that the relations between the naval authorities and the inhabitants of the Island of St. Pierre might be embittered by the occupation contemplated.

M. Hanotaux' note was referred to Mr. W. E. Hall for his observations, and these will be found in a Memorandum by that gentleman, dated the 17th August (see paper marked G).

A copy of a letter from the Colonial Office, indicating the view taken of M. Hanotaux' arguments by the Marquess of Ripon, is also inclosed herewith (see paper marked H).

The papers in regard to this question, which were submitted to the Law Officers on the 22nd March last, are sent herewith for convenience of reference (see A, B, and C).

I am to request that you will take the whole correspondence into your consideration, and that you will favour Lord Kimberley with your opinion whether the annexed draft of a despatch to the Marquis of Dufferin, instructing his Excellency to renew the protest which he made to the French Government in April last, contains a suitable exposition of the case from a legal point of view, or whether its terms may be advantageously modified or amended, and, if so, in what respects.

I have, &c.

Report.

That, in our opinion, the annexed draft of a despatch to the Marquis of Dufferin contains a suitable exposition of the case from a legal point of view.

We desire, however, to call attention to the three following points:—

1. On p. 3 of the draft despatch the language used seems to import that the only engagements by which the sovereignty of France over St. Pierre and Miquelon is limited are the engagements there specified. Legally, however, there appear to be other engagements contained in Article VI of the Treaty of Paris, 1763, which limit that sovereignty.

2. On p. 4 of the draft despatch the language used seems to import that the strip on the Newfoundland side of the middle of the strait between Newfoundland and the two islands is non-territorial water. Legally, we consider this to be very disputable, and such a statement might at some time be construed as an admission.

3. On p. 5 of the draft despatch the language used seems to import that, under the Treaty of Utrecht, Article XIII, French fishermen are entitled to reside on the Treaty Shore for the purpose of drying fish. Legally, we do not consider it at all clear that such right exists, however it may be admitted in practice.

(No. .)
Foreign Office, November , 1894.

My Lord,

HER Majesty's Government have considered, in consultation with the Law Officers of the Crown, Mr. Phipps' despatch No. 315 of the 5th August last, transmitting copy of a note from M. Hanotaux in reply to the representation which your Excellency addressed to the French Government on the 21st April last, in regard to the question of the occupation of the Treaty Shore of Newfoundland by individual fishermen from St. Pierre, with the approval and assistance of the French local authorities.

I have to request that your Excellency will state to M. Hanotaux that the arguments put forward by his Excellency in his note of the 31st July last do not appear to Her Majesty's Government to contain any facts tending to invalidate the opinion which they had previously formed on the subject under discussion.

With regard to the conditions attached to the cession of St. Pierre and Miquelon, M. Hanotaux observes: "Aux termes du Traité de 1763, comme des Déclarations annexées au Traité de Versailles, l'Angleterre a cédé ces îles à la France 'afin de servir réellement d'abri à ses pêcheurs,' et pour éviter que ces possessions devinssent 'un objet de jalousie entre les deux nations,' certaines stipulations ont été édictées, aux termes desquelles notamment la pêche entre les Iles de Saint-Pierre et Miquelon et Terre-Neuve ne pourrait se faire, de part et d'autre, que jusqu'à mi-canal."

This statement, however, appears to be entirely inconsistent with the Declarations of 1783. M. Hanotaux apparently argues that the restriction of fishery by French and English respectively to mid-channel was the means, or at least the principal means, by which it was intended to prevent St. Pierre and Miquelon from becoming an "objet de jalousie entre les deux nations," and that, with the exception of this limit, the French are free to act as they please in those islands.

But in the Declarations the stipulations that the islands were not to become an object of jealousy and the limitation of the fishing to mid-channel are in no way connected; they are entirely distinct, and it is impossible to read into the Treaty that the one stipulation is merely auxiliary to and explanatory of the other.

The English Declaration says: "Le Roi de la Grande-Bretagne en cédant les Iles de Saint-Pierre et de Miquelon à la France, les regarde comme cédées afin de servir réellement d'abri aux pêcheurs Français, et dans la confiance entière que ces possessions ne deviendront point un objet de jalousie entre les deux nations; et que la pêche entre les dites îles et celle de Terre-Neuve sera bornée à mi-canal."

The paragraph is clearly disjunctive, and its full force would best be obtained by reading after "les deux nations" the words "et dans la confiance entière que la pêche," &c.

The French Declaration places beyond doubt the independence of the stipulations. It says:—

Paragraph 1. ". . . . Le Roi de la Grande-Bretagne met indubitablement trop de confiance dans la droiture des intentions de Sa Majesté, pour ne point se reposer sur l'attention constante qu'elle aura d'empêcher que les Iles Saint-Pierre et Miquelon ne deviennent point un objet de jalousie entre les deux nations;" paragraph 2 applies to the fishery arrangements on the Treaty Coast; and paragraph 3 then resumes: "Pour ce qui est de la pêche entre l'Ile de Terre-Neuve et celle de Saint-Pierre et Miquelon, elle ne pourra se faire, de part et d'autre, que jusqu'à mi-canal," &c.

This appears to Her Majesty's Government to be a sufficient proof that the the three stipulations (1) that the islands were to be "réellement d'abri," (2) that they were not to become "un objet de jalousie entre les deux nations," and (3) for the regulation of the fishery in the narrow channel between the islands and Newfoundland, were three separate and distinct conditions, and in no way dependent on or explanatory of any one of the others.

With regard to M. Hanotaux' further observations on this point, in the paragraph beginning "Quant à la réglementation," &c., it is only necessary to remark that he is answering an argument which has never been put forward on behalf of Her Majesty's Government.

M. Hanotaux claims, as a necessary consequence of the cession of St. Pierre and Miquelon, "en toute propriété," that, "sous la réserve d'exceptions formellement exprimées, la France est libre d'exercer, en ce qui concerne ces îles, tous les attributs de la souveraineté." The principle involved in this statement is incontestable; and it is not for Great Britain to question it, since her own contentions with respect to the fishery rights of her subjects and of French citizens respectively are founded upon the doctrine that rights of sovereignty are absolute, except to the extent of derogations from them clearly and expressly made. But, while Her Majesty's Government fully concur with the statement of principle made by M. Hanotaux, they must point out that the principle is entirely alien to the facts with which his Excellency connects it.

Cession "en toute propriété" conveys full rights of sovereignty within the territory ceded; it does not of itself necessarily invest the population of that territory with all the privileges which may be already enjoyed on foreign soil by subjects of the Power to which cession is made. Servitudes over portions of the territory of a foreign State, such as wood-felling and pasturage rights, may belong to the inhabitants of particular districts; and whether a given servitude is, or is not, a privilege which can be enjoyed by all the subjects of a State must depend upon its nature and on all the circumstances of the case. In the instances of St. Pierre and Miquelon, although it is not to be questioned that France owns all sovereign powers within the territory—except in so far as they are limited by the engagements that the islands are to serve "réellement d'abri aux pêcheurs Français," and shall not become an "objet de jalousie"—it does not follow that the inhabitants of the islands have rights of fishing within British waters. In order that they may have such rights, they must be proved to be in a position to share in the special effects of those parts of the Treaties previously made, by which limited fishing privileges were conferred on French fishermen. If the customs of the fishery which were taken up into the Treaties were consistent with fishing on the part of the inhabitants of St. Pierre and Miquelon within British waters, the right to fish exists; if they were not consistent with it, the fishermen of St. Pierre and Miquelon do not possess the right to fish within British waters.

No claim has ever been made by the French Government to the possession of a right to small-boat fishing on the ground of usage existing before the year 1783.

M. Hanotaux' statement that no complaint has been made of the people of St. Pierre having for many years past taken part in the regular fishery upon the Treaty Shore is not quite accurate. It has been a constant complaint with the Newfoundland fishermen that these men, engaging in the fishery on equal terms with them as regards proximity to the fishing-grounds, enjoy all the advantages of the bounties granted to fishermen proceeding from France, and the practice complained of has, in fact, led to the Islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon becoming the bases of the fishery, instead of being merely places of refuge for fishermen arriving from France. It is true that Her Majesty's Government, from a desire to take no step which might hamper the development of the islands, have not seriously objected to this practice; but the present question is entirely one as to the legitimacy of a new departure.

The next part of M. Hanotaux' argument deals with French rights under the Treaty of Utrecht as distinct from the Declarations. He says:—

"Si les Traités ont défini les conditions dans lesquelles nos marins pourront pratiquer la pêche, ils l'ont fait de façon à empêcher une extension abusive de leurs entreprises, au delà de l'industrie spéciale à laquelle ils doivent se livrer."

To this interpretation of the meaning of the Treaties Her Majesty's Government must demur. The Treaties have defined the conditions under which the French fishermen may exercise their industry, not only negatively, but positively; for they are not only restricted to the one industry, but that industry must be exercised by them strictly in the manner in which they exercised it at the time of the Treaty of Utrecht.

M. Hanotaux continues:—

"Pêche en mer, séchage, préparation du poisson, résidence temporaire sur le rivage comme conséquence du droit de pêche, toutes ces opérations leur sont permises par les Traités. Mais s'ensuit-il qu'ils doivent rigoureusement se livrer à chacune d'elles."

This statement likewise is not entirely accurate, as the only rights granted are those of fishing and drying; fishing does not imply or require a right to reside, and it follows that residence is only granted, if at all, so far as it is necessary for the purpose of drying.

Proceeding on the assumption that the inhabitants of St. Pierre and Miquelon have a right of fishing in British waters, M. Hanotaux goes on to assert that the various acts or operations which in their entirety make up the old customs of the Newfoundland fishery are not "forcément toutes corrélatives les unes des autres, sous peine de déchéance du droit de pêche, mais simplement facultatives, en vue d'assurer l'exercice de ce droit;" and in particular, that "le droit de pêcher ne comporte pas nécessairement l'obligation de sécher ou de résider sur le rivage, mais il en donne la faculté."

The suggestion here would seem to be that the Declaration of 1783 was intended solely to give facilities to the French for the enjoyment of their privileges, and that customs are mentioned only in confirmation of, and not in restriction of, those privileges. M. Hanotaux can hardly have put forward such a contention seriously.

The plain meaning of the Declaration is that the French shall have every facility for enjoying the fishery rights accorded to them by the Treaty of Utrecht, subject to the customs of the fishery, restrictive allusion being at the same time made to certain points upon which infringement of the customs had taken place.

Without insisting that every practice shall remain rigidly fixed so long as the Treaties are in force, it is evident that the system on which the fishery is conducted must remain the same in all important particulars—the fishermen of each nation fishing according to the customs which were already habitual to them; and Her Majesty's Government cannot admit the claim which M. Hanotaux apparently seeks to put forward to destroy every obligation by rejecting each usage in turn, and to leave as a residuum an unrestricted right of fishing in such manner as may be convenient to the French themselves.

M. Hanotaux then endeavours to reduce the meaning of the injunction to "faire la pêche" in the manner which has been "de tout temps reconnue" to methods of capture and to "l'emploi dans l'avenir des engins nuisibles ou dévastateurs des fonds de pêche." But, according to the information which Her Majesty's Government possess in regard to this point, no method of capture other than the customary fishing with hook and line had been invented in 1783, and none other could therefore have been contemplated at that time. Bultows, traps, and cod-nets have all been introduced at later periods. There were then no "engins nuisibles" or "dévastateurs" the employment of which could have been foreseen, or against which the precaution of a Treaty stipulation could have been taken.

The object of the Treaty of Utrecht was to secure the Island of Newfoundland in full sovereignty to the British Crown, and the restrictions and limitations imposed on the French were intended to prevent any such occupation by them as would be inconsistent with or in any way tend to impair that sovereignty. It is in this light that the Declaration attached to the Treaty of Versailles must be read, not, as M. Hanotaux suggests, as simply forbidding destructive modes of exercising the fishery. It definitely prescribes that the method of the fishery is to be that which has always been recognized, and the method now introduced was never either practised or recognized on the Treaty Shore.

Her Majesty's Government must therefore, in view of the importance of the subject, renew the protest which was made to the French Government in April last; and your Excellency will state to M. Hanotaux, in the most definite terms, that this new departure cannot be recognized, or this mode of fishery be protected by Her Majesty's Government. You will, at the same time, inform them that, while Her Majesty's Government cordially acknowledge the conciliatory attitude of the French Admiral on the fisheries protection service during the present season, and the readiness he has shown to co-operate with the British Commodore in preventing and accommodating difficulties which have arisen, it cannot be admitted that this friendly action in any way diminishes the objections to the new departure as a breach of the Treaty and an encroachment by the French on an island of which the undisputed sovereignty belongs to Great Britain, and in respect of which France is bound by a solemn obligation under the provisions of the Treaty of Utrecht not to impair the sovereignty of the British Crown.

I am, &c.

My Lord,

Consular Courts (Admiralty) Order in Council, 1894.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Bertie's letter of the 30th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying papers respecting a draft Order in Council, to be known as "The Consular Courts (Admiralty) Order in Council, 1894," for the purpose of applying "The Colonial Courts of Admiralty Act, 1890," to Her Majesty's extra-territorial Courts having Vice-Admiralty jurisdiction.

That Mr. Bertie was to request that we would take the papers into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion whether the draft Order might be laid before the Queen in Council for Her Majesty's approval.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken the papers into our consideration, and have the honour to

Report—

That in our opinion the draft Order in Council may, in its present shape, be laid before the Queen in Council for Her Majesty's approval.

Draft Order in Council.

WHEREAS by Treaty, grant, usage, sufferance, and other lawful means, Her Majesty the Queen has jurisdiction in the countries and places named in the Schedule to this Order;

And whereas by "The Colonial Courts of Admiralty Act, 1890," it is enacted that Her Majesty in Council may from time to time make Orders for the purposes authorized by that Act;

And whereas by the said Act Her Majesty in Council may by Order direct that that Act shall, subject to the conditions, exceptions, and qualifications (if any) contained in the Order, apply to any Court established by Her Majesty for the exercise of jurisdiction in any place out of Her Majesty's dominions which is named in the Order, as if that Court were a Colonial Court of Admiralty, and to provide for carrying into effect such application.

Now, therefore, Her Majesty, in exercise of the powers in this behalf by "The Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890," and tho said recited Act in Her Majesty vested, is pleased, by and with the advice of Her Privy Council, to order, and it is hereby ordered, as follows:—

1. The following enactments of "The Colonial Courts of Admiralty Act, 1890," that is to say, section 2, subsections (2) to (4), section 5, section 6, and section 16, subsection (3), shall apply to every Court which has been established by Her Majesty under any Order in Council relating respectively to the countries and places named in the Schedule to this Order, and to which Vice-Admiralty jurisdiction has been assigned by Order in Council, as if such Court were in the said sections mentioned in lieu of a Colonial Court of Admiralty, and as if such countries and places respectively were referred to in the said sections in lieu of a British possession.

2. For the purposes of this Order the expressions "judgment" and "appeal" shall, in the enactments of the recited Act hereby applied, have the same respective meanings as are assigned thereto in section 15 of that Act.

Case for the Law Officers of the Crown.

Readmission to British nationality of a widow who is a statutory alien.

THE Law Officers of the Crown are requested to advise the Secretary of State whether a period of residence within the United Kingdom is requisite before he can issue a certificate of readmission to British nationality to a widow, who, being a natural-born British subject, and having become an alien by marriage, makes application to him under section 10 (2) of "The Naturalization Act, 1870," and if so, in what manner the period should be calculated.

By section 7 of the Act mentioned:—

"An alien who within such limited time before making the application hereinafter mentioned as may be allowed by one of Her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, either by general order or on any special occasion has resided in the United Kingdom for a term of not less than five years, may apply to one of Her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State for a certificate of naturalization. The applicant shall adduce in support of his application such evidence of his residence and intention to reside as such Secretary of State may require. The said Secretary of State, if satisfied with the evidence adduced, shall take the case of the applicant into consideration, and may, with or without assigning any reason, give or withhold a certificate as he thinks most conducive to the public good, and no appeal shall lie from his decision, but such certificate shall not take effect until the applicant has taken the oath of allegiance."

By section 8 of the same Act:—

"A natural-born British subject who has become an alien in pursuance of this Act, and is in this Act referred to as a statutory alien, may, on performing the same conditions and adducing the same evidence as is required in the case of an alien applying for a certificate of nationality, apply to one of Her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State for a certificate, hereinafter referred to as a certificate of readmission to British nationality, readmitting him to the status of a British subject."

Section 10. The following enactments shall be made with respect to the national status of women and children:—

"(1.) A married woman shall be deemed to be a subject of the State of which her husband is for the time being a subject.

"(2.) A widow, being a natural-born British subject, who has become an alien by or in consequence of her marriage, shall be deemed to be a statutory alien, and may as such at any time during widowhood obtain a certificate of readmission to British nationality in manner provided by this Act."

The effect of these sections is that a widow who is a statutory alien and who desires to be readmitted to British nationality must apply to the Secretary of State for a certificate. But questions have arisen whether any, and if so, what, period of residence in the United Kingdom is a condition precedent of the grant of such a certificate.

On the one hand, it is maintained that it is necessary to give effect to the words "at any time" which occur in section 10 (2) and not in the sections 7 and 8 quoted above, and that to do so it is necessary to hold that the condition as to a previous period of residence in the United Kingdom does not apply to the widows referred to. This would distinguish these widows from other statutory aliens dealt with by the Act, see sections 3, 4, 6, 10 (3); and it is contended that it was the intention of Parliament so to distinguish them. Otherwise this subsection (2) need not have been inserted at all, and the widows included within its scope might have been left to be dealt with under section 8 of the Act.

Moreover, as a ground for such a distinction, the requirement of five years' residence in the United Kingdom may have been regarded as more necessary in the case of other statutory aliens as a guarantee of their intention permanently to place themselves under the allegiance of the Crown, and to reside in the United Kingdom. Whereas, in the case of a woman, a British subject, who marries a foreigner, the disability of allegiance is an incident of her marriage imposed by Statute, in some cases against her wish, and it may have been considered that immediate application to be relieved of the disability so soon as that is legally possible is sufficient proof of the intention and desire to revert permanently to the status of a British subject.

On the other hand it is argued that if there had been any intention to dispense British-born widows from all conditions as to residence, &c., such a dispensation would have been granted in explicit terms, and that the supposed reason for treating British-born widows with exceptional indulgence, if it has any force when the comparison is made with those who, under sections 3, 4, 6, have made themselves statutory aliens by some voluntary process fails when the comparison is made with children under section 10 (3) who are converted into statutory aliens merely because their parent is one. Then as a matter of construction the suggested interpretation gives a forced and excessive importance to the words "at any time during widowhood," whilst it would render almost meaningless the far more material words, "in manner provided by this Act." The two phrases must be used together, and then the whole passage, "A widow being . . . . . may as such, at any time during widowhood, obtain a certificate of readmission in manner provided by this Act," is seen to mean that an application may be made by her at any time on complying with the conditions prescribed by sections 7 and 8 (including a five years' residence in the United Kingdom).

The whole subsection, it is true, thus becomes mere surplusage; but its insertion in section 10 is explained by a not unnatural desire to make that section a complete conspectus of the position of women and children; and in support of this view it may be pointed out that after the definition in section 8 of the statutory alien as a natural born British subject who has become an alien in pursuance of this Act, and after the enactment in section 10 (1) that a married woman shall be deemed to be a subject of the State of which her husband is for the time being a subject, it was equally surplusage in section 10 (2) to enact that a widow, being a natural-born British subject who has become an alien by or in consequence of her marriage, shall be deemed to be a statutory alien.

Secondly, if a period of residence is necessary it is still left doubtful by the Act from what point of time the five years' period must be counted:—

(i.) Whether the whole five years must be after the husband's death; or (ii.) Whether a period of married life may be included; or (iii.) Whether a period of ante-connubial life may be included;

supposing, of course, that in every case the period in question comes within the "limited time" allowed by the Secretary of State under section 7.

It has been the practice of the Home Office to insist on the interpretation (i) as being most consonant with the general principles of the Act. There does not appear to be any direct authority in the Statute for this view, but it secures that in the case of these widows as in the case of other aliens (statutory and other) there shall be the guarantee afforded of five years' residence in the United Kingdom after the time when residence and future allegiance become matters within the applicant's choice.

On the other hand, it may be argued in favour of (ii), i.e., of the counting of a period of married life, that, where the national status of a married woman follows that of her husband, there is no reason why a widow should be in a worse position as regards the choice of her allegiance than her alien husband would have been had he lived. Had he lived, and been minded to apply for British nationality, his residence during married life in this country would have counted; why should it not be counted by his widow after his death?

As regards the inclusion of a period of ante-connubial life (iii) the argument is perhaps not so strong. To include such a period would involve the reckoning in a period of probation for British nationality of a time antecedent to a formal decision to give up that status. But, it may be said, Why should a period of marriage with an alien husband operate more adversely against a widow than does, in the case of an alien applying for naturalization, a period of absence from the United Kingdom intervening between two periods of residence within it? Such a period of absence merely does not count; it does not nullify an anterior period of residence within the "limited time allowed."

The questions for the Attorney- and Solicitor-General are:—

(a.) When a natural-born British subject who is the widow of an alien applies for a certificate of readmission to British nationality, is it necessary for her to show a period of five years' residence within the United Kingdom?

(b.) If the answer to the question (a) be affirmative, must such period of residence be wholly subsequent to the death of her husband, or may it include:—

(1.) A period of residence during coverture;
(2.) A period of residence before marriage?

We are of opinion:—

1. That when a natural-born British subject, who is the widow of an alien, applies for a certificate of readmission to British nationality, it is necessary for her to show a period of five years' residence within the United Kingdom.

Section 10 of the Naturalization Act of 1870 is obscurely expressed, but, on the whole, we consider that its meaning is to place the widow in the same position as other statutory aliens for this purpose.

2. That assuming that a period of five years' residence is required in the case of a widow, such period of residence need not be wholly subsequent to the death of her husband.

It would be sufficient that she has resided in the United Kingdom for a term of not less than five years wholly irrespective of coverture.

It would also be sufficient if she had resided in the United Kingdom for a term of not less than five years before her marriage.

Provided, in each case, that the Secretary of State, either by general order or on any special occasion, allowed a period of time before such widow made her application long enough to cover the years of residence before the marriage, or during the coverture, as the case might be (see section 7 of the Act).

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Earl of Kimberley.—(Received August 7.)

Royal Courts of Justice, August 6, 1894.

Lumley v. Kirby. Production of official documents in Law Court. Personal attendance of Secretary of State.

My Lord,

WE were honoured by your Lordships commands signified to us in Sir Thomas Sanderson's letter of the 4th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter which had been addressed to the Chief Clerk of the Foreign Office requiring certain information relating to the journeys to Paris and Constantinople of Captain Lumley, Queen's Foreign Service Messenger, during the years 1890 and 1891, to be produced in the Court of Queen's Bench in the case of Lumley v. Kirby, which was expected to come on for trial early in the present week.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was also to inclose the copy of a "subpœna duces tecum" which was left at the Foreign Office by Messrs. Ashurst's clerk, and which, in addition to the matters alluded to in their letter, demanded the production of "all papers relating to a proposed railway between Salonica and Dedeagatch, in the Empire of Turkey."

That the reply which your Lordship had caused to be returned to Messrs. Ashurst's letter was also annexed. That it would be seen that it promised the production of the papers respecting Captain Lumley's journeys, which there seemed to be no reason for withholding.

That with reference, however, to the papers relating to the proposed railway between Salonica and Dedeagatch, Sir Thomas Sanderson was to state that although certain reports, more or less confidential in their nature, had from time to time been received from Her Majesty's Diplomatic and Consular officers upon that subject, they did not in any apparent way bear upon the case of Lumley v. Kirby, and that although they might not contain much the publication of which would be actually prejudicial to public interests, your Lordship was nevertheless of opinion that, as a matter of principle, and in order to avoid the risk of establishing a bad precedent, it would not be advisable that these papers should be produced in Court.

That your Lordship proposed, therefore, to instruct the gentleman who would attend the Court from the Foreign Office, in obedience to the subpœna, to represent to the Judge, in the event of those papers being called for, that they were of a confidential nature, that they had no bearing on the question at issue, and that the Secretary of State considered that their production would be prejudicial to public interests.

Sir Thomas Sanderson further stated that he was to inclose the various Reports on the subject of this proposed railway, and was to request that we would take the matter into our consideration at our early convenience, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether the course proposed to be followed was the proper one, or in what other way the matter should be dealt with.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken the matter into our consideration, and have the honour to

That, in our judgment, the course proposed is the proper one to take.

We have, however, to observe that some difficulty may arise as to the manner of making the objection. In some cases it has been suggested that it is necessary for the Secretary of State himself to attend and to state that he has considered the matter, and that in his opinion it will be injurious to the public service to produce the documents. In others it seems to be laid down that it is sufficient if a deputy attend, and state that he is authorized by the Secretary of State to depose to the above effect, i.e., that the Secretary of State has considered the matter and is of opinion, &c. In the present case the principle only is at stake, the documents themselves being of no importance either to the parties, so far as we can judge, or to the public, and we suggest that Mr. Fraser should be authorized by the Secretary of State to appear as his deputy, and, if necessary, make the aforesaid statement. Even if the Court thinks his statement insufficient, no particular harm will be done; but it seems desirable to resist, as far as possible, the doctrine that the Head of the Department must attend in person.

Royal Courts of Justice, April 18, 1894.

My Lord,

Expulsion of B. Müller, naturalized Brit. colonial subject, from Prussia. His right to Brit. protection.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Bertie's letter of the 21st ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Her Majesty's Ambassador at Berlin respecting the case of Mr. Baruch Müller, a naturalized colonial British subject (of Cape Colony), of Russian origin, and of the Jewish faith, who had been ordered to leave the territory of the Kingdom of Prussia.

That Mr. Bertie was to request that we would take the matter into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the right of Her Majesty's Government to protect in Prussia a naturalized colonial British subject of Russian nationality of origin from the consequences of his being a Russian subject of Jewish faith.

That, should we be of opinion that a naturalized colonial British subject was, as a rule, entitled so to be protected, Mr. Bertie was further to inquire whether the circumstances under which, and the recent date (8th December, 1893) on which Mr. Müller obtained his colonial certificate of naturalization, did not raise such a presumption of mala fides on his part as would justify Her Majesty's Government in refusing to extend to him their protection in this particular case.

That your Lordship would also be glad to be furnished with any general observations which we might be good enough to offer upon the legal points involved.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands, we have taken the matter into our consideration, and have the honour to

Report—

That, in our opinion, Her Majesty's Government have no right, in the absence of Treaty engagements with Prussia extending to the case, to demand from the Prussian Government the exemption in Prussia of a naturalized British subject from the consequences of his being a Russian subject of Jewish faith.

Our answer above given seems to render the second question submitted to us irrelevant, but we think it right to say that, in our opinion, Her Majesty's Government would be justified in withholding protection from a naturalized British subject where, as in the present case, the certificate of naturalization has been obtained without any bonâ fide intention of residence within Her Majesty's dominions, but simply for the purpose of establishing a claim to be treated, in the country of residence, as a British subject,

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Earl of Kimberley.—(Received May 3.)

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, May 2, 1894.

Proposed amendment of Article III of Extradition Treaty with Germany of May 14, 1872.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Bertie's letter of the 16th March last, stating that he was directed to transmit to us the papers respecting a proposed amendment of Article III of the Extradition Treaty between Great Britain and Germany of the 14th May, 1872, which Article runs as follows:—

"No German shall be delivered up by any of the Governments of the Empire to the Government of the United Kingdom, and no subject of the United Kingdom shall be delivered up by the Government thereof to any German Government."

That the attention of Her Majesty's Government had been specially directed to the advisability of altering the text of the Article in question by a difficulty which occurred some four years since in connection with a German subject named Lippert.

That in the year 1890 a warrant was issued at the Cape of Good Hope for the arrest of W. A. Lippert, who was charged with the crime of forgery in that Colony. The fugitive was supposed to have taken refuge in Germany, and Her Majesty's Ambassador at Berlin was, on the 19th August, 1890, instructed to inform the German Government that documents in support of a demand for his extradition were on their way from the Cape. His Excellency was further instructed to say that if the fugitive proved to be not a native of Germany, a requisition for his surrender would be forwarded as soon as possible, but that, if he were a native of that country, it was hoped that the papers sent would be sufficient to enable the German Government to deal with the crime by their own Tribunals.

That, in acknowledging the receipt of the communication made by Sir E. Malet, the German Government stated, on the 2nd September, 1890, that it appeared that Lippert possessed German nationality, in which case the only question which could arise would be whether he should be prosecuted before German Tribunals for an offence committed at Cape Town. That, in the meanwhile, they wished to be informed whether, if an Englishman had committed a crime in Germany, and had returned to his own country, he would be prosecuted for the offence before the English Courts.

That, in reply to this inquiry, Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Berlin was instructed to inform the German Government as follows:—

Except in the case of murder or manslaughter committed on land, Slave Trade offences, and one or two other offences, Her Majesty's Government had no power at present to try British subjects in a British Court for crimes committed outside the Queen's dominions. That a Bill to amend the law in this respect was introduced into Parliament in the previous Session, but that, owing to pressure of public business, it was not found possible to pass it into law.

That this information was duly communicated to the German Government, and that on the 8th November, 1890, Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Berlin was informed that in the event of Lippert being found in Germany proceedings would be instituted against him in the proper Hamburg Court for the forgery committed by him at Cape Town.

That the German authorities did not, however, succeed in tracing the fugitive, and no further action appeared to have been taken in the matter until the 23rd March, 1893, when a telegram was sent to Her Majesty's Ambassador at Berlin, instructing him to inform the German Government that Lippert had been seen at Baden Baden; that upon receipt of this information the German Government had made inquiry as to the actual condition of the Bill for the prosecution of British subjects for offences committed abroad, and that Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires was instructed to inform them, in reply, that the Bill, which was introduced into the House of Lords in 1890, had had to be subsequently abandoned in consequence of legal difficulties.

That on learning this fact the German Government informed Sir E. Malet that in the absence of reciprocity they would not feel themselves justified in carrying further a criminal action against a German for offences committed by him on British territory.

That the Earl of Rosebery thereupon consulted the Secretary of State for the Home Department as to whether any convenient course was open to Her Majesty's Government with the object of removing the difficulty, and Mr. Secretary Asquith, in reply, suggested that the Treaty might be amended by providing for the surrender to Germany, under certain circumstances, of British subjects, in return for an undertaking on the part of Germany to prosecute German subjects who might have committed crimes on British territory.

That Lord Rosebery concurred in this suggestion, and that on the 29th July, 1893, Sir E. Malet was instructed to submit to the German Government the terms of an amended Article which Her Majesty's Government proposed to substitute for Article III of the Treaty of the 14th May, 1872. That the draft of this proposed Article would be found at pp. 7 and 8 of Paper (M).

That on the 28th December, 1893, the German Government informed Sir E. Malet that they concurred in principle in the proposal made by Her Majesty's Government, but that they desired to suggest a different wording of the Article in order that it might apply to cases in the future when Her Majesty's Government might be able, by means of fresh legislation, to prosecute British subjects for offences committed abroad.

That the German version of the Article seemed, however, to be open to some objection, chiefly on account of its complicated wording, and as a result of communications between the Foreign Office and the Home Office the Article had been redrafted.

That in connection with the general question as to the surrender of nationals Mr. Bertie was to call our attention to the recommendations contained in the Report of the Royal Commission on Extradition of 1878, and to the various precedents in Treaties between Great Britain and foreign Powers for the surrender of British subjects, particularly to the stipulations contained in Article I of the Treaty between Great Britain and Spain of the 4th June, 1878, and in Article I of the Treaty between Great Britain and Switzerland of the 26th November, 1880.

That Mr. Bertie was also to inclose, for our information, a copy of a confidential print containing the correspondence, &c., between 1884 and 1890, relating to the surrender of nationals, and to the Bill providing for the prosecution in this country of persons charged with offences committed abroad.

That Mr. Bertie was to request that we would take the papers into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion whether the draft Article, in its present shape, might be properly submitted to the German Government for their consideration, and with any general observations which might occur to us in connection with the papers.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands, we have taken the papers into our consideration, and have the honour to

Report—

That, in our opinion, the terms of the proposed draft Article are such as may properly be submitted to the German Government for their consideration.

The proposed Article does not appear to go beyond the recommendation of the Commission, or the terms of the Treaty with Switzerland already entered into.

We have, &c.

Draft Declaration between Great Britain and Germany.

THE Government of Her Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, Empress of India, &c., &c., and the Government of His Majesty the German Emperor, King of Prussia, &c., &c., being desirous to provide for the more effectual repression of crimes and offences in their respective territories, have in due form authorized the Undersigned to agree as follows:—

Article III of the Extradition Treaty between Great Britain and Germany signed at London on the 14th May, 1872, is hereby cancelled, and the following Article is substituted therefor:—

"A British subject committing an offence comprised in Article II, within German territory, shall be delivered up by the British Government, unless the laws of the United Kingdom should permit of his prosecution for such offence in a British Criminal Court, and unless the British Government should undertake such prosecution.

"A German subject committing an offence comprised in the said Article II, within British territory, shall not be delivered up, but in lieu thereof the German Government shall undertake his prosecution for such offence in a German Criminal Court."

The present Declaration shall come into force ten days after its publication in the manner prescribed by law in the respective countries, and shall have the same force and duration as the Treaty to which it relates.

In witness whereof the Undersigned have signed the same, and have affixed thereto the seal of their arms.

Foreign Office, July 31, 1894.

Gentlemen,

Nationality of a child born of German parents in English waters.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Earl of Kimberley, the papers noted in the accompanying list, in connection with an inquiry that was recently made of this Department by a Mr. G. Jones, as to the nationality of a child born of German parents in English waters.

The point raised in the case appears to Lord Kimberley to be a novel one of some importance, viz., whether a child born of German parents on a German merchant-vessel in British territorial waters is a British subject in contemplation of English law; and I am to call your special attention to the observations upon the question which are contained in the letter written to the Home Office by his Lordship's direction on the 7th May last (Inclosure D) and which indicate the views of this Department.

It will be observed, however, that the Home Office and Board of Trade, to whom the matter was referred, have expressed divergent opinions upon the point at issue, the Home Office being of opinion, for the reasons stated in their letter of the 17th May, that a child born in the circumstances stated is clearly of British nationality, while the Board of Trade, on the other hand, consider (see their letter to this Department of the 30th June last) that such child is not a natural-born British subject.

In these circumstances Lord Kimberley is anxious to obtain your opinion on the point, which is of considerable importance, and which may at any moment be raised in a practical shape.

I am to add that the existence of "The Territorial Waters Jurisdiction Act, 1878," had not escaped the attention of this Department, but that as the enactment in question did not appear to have a direct bearing upon the special point under consideration, it was purposely not alluded to in the letter to the Home Office of the 7th May last.

I am to request that you will take the papers transmitted herewith into your consideration, and that you will favour Lord Kimberley with your opinion on the question specially submitted in this letter, as well as with any general observations which you may have to offer on the matter.

I have, &c.
(Signed) FRANCIS BERTIE.

Report.

So far as we are aware there has been no decision exactly in point.

Four possible solutions present themselves:—

1. That in territorial waters British nationality attaches exclusively.
2. That nowhere in territorial waters does it attach.
3. That there is a double nationality.
4. That there is British nationality where the ship is within the body of a county, but not otherwise.

Plausible arguments may be advanced in support of each of these solutions, but the case can only be solved when the circumstances require that it should be, by the judgment of a competent Court. At present the case raises no practical question.

Foreign Office to Home Office.

Foreign Office, May 7, 1894.

Sir,

I AM directed by the Earl of Kimberley to transmit to you, to be laid before Mr. Secretary Asquith, copy of the correspondence marked in the margin, relative to an inquiry that has been made by Mr. G. Jones as to the nationality of a child born of German parents in English waters.

It appears to Lord Kimberley that this correspondence raises a point of some importance, viz., whether a child born of German parents on a German merchant-vessel in British territorial waters is a British subject in contemplation of English law; and I am to request that his Lordship may be favoured with an expression of Mr. Secretary Asquith's views upon this question, together with any observations which he may desire to make upon the matters dealt with in Mr. Jones' letter of the 28th ultimo.

It will be remembered that the converse question of the nationality, in contemplation of English law, of a child born on board a British merchant-vessel within the territorial waters of a foreign State formed the subject of correspondence between the Home and Foreign Offices in 1891, when it was considered that such child must be deemed to be a British subject so far as English law was concerned (see Foreign Office to Home Office of the 15th July, 1891, and Home Office to Foreign Office of the 4th August, 1891).

The point raised in the present case is, however, so far as Lord Kimberley is aware, a novel one, which is not directly governed by any decision of our Courts, although the case of Regina v. Anderson, 1 C.C.R., p. 161, appears to bear indirectly upon it.

In the course of that case Mr. Justice Blackburn said: "It has been decided that a ship which bears a nation's flag is to be treated as part of the territory of that nation. A ship is a kind of floating island;" and although the nationality of the ship does not necessarily oust the nationality of the territorial waters, and may indeed co-exist with the latter for many purposes, it seems very doubtful, having regard to the decision in Regina v. Keyn, L.R., 2 Ex. Div., 63, and to the opinions expressed by the majority of the Court who decided that case, whether the soil in the 3-mile littoral zone can any longer be regarded as so far part of the territorial domain of the Crown as to impress British nationality jure soli upon a child born on the superincumbent territorial waters. On the other hand, it is presumed that a child born on a foreign merchant-vessel which was lying either in a British harbour or in waters within the body of a British county, Colony, or possession would, whatever may be the view ultimately taken with regard to the nationality of a child born on a foreign vessel within the territorial waters of the 3-mile littoral zone, properly be regarded as a natural-born British subject in contemplation of English law.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Mr. Asquith.—(Received from Home Office, November 5.)

[In reply to the following Home Office letter, the Law Officers gave, on the 24th October, 1894, their opinion as on p. 55:—]

"Mr. Cunynghame to the Solicitor to the Treasury.

"Sir,

"Whitehall, September 7, 1894.

"I AM directed by the Secretary of State to transmit to you two copies of a Case respecting the admission to bail of a person charged with an extradition crime, and to ask you to be so good as to obtain the opinion of the Law Officers of the Crown upon the matter.

"I am, &c.
(Signed) "HENRY CUNYNGHAME."

Case for the Law Officers.

Admission to bail of a person charged with an extradition crime.

The Attorney- and Solicitor-General are requested to favour the Secretary of State with their opinion as asked in Mr. Cunynghame's letter.

The Secretary of State desires to be advised by the Law Officers of the Crown whether the release on bail of a person charged with an extradition crime before a Metropolitan Police Magistrate at Bow Street, and remanded for further evidence, is authorized by the law of England; and, secondly, whether, in the case of a person whose surrender is claimed by the German Government, release on bail in such circumstances would be contrary to the Treaty between Her Majesty and the German Emperor.

By section 9 of "The Extradition Act, 1870," it is enacted that:—

"When a fugitive criminal is brought before the Police Magistrate, the Police Magistrate shall hear the case in the same manner, and have the same jurisdiction and powers, as near as may be, as if the prisoner were brought before him charged with an indictable offence committed in England."

The jurisdiction and powers of a Police Magistrate in dealing "with an indictable offence committed in England" are, so far as relates to the power to remand, set out in section 21 of "The Indictable Offences Act, 1848," which runs as follows:—

"If from the absence of witnesses, or from any other reasonable cause, it shall become necessary or advisable to defer the examination or further examination of the witnesses for any time, it shall be lawful to and for the Justice or Justices before whom the accused shall appear or be brought, by his or their warrant, from time to time to remand the party accused for such time as by that Justice or Justices in their discretion shall be deemed reasonable, not exceeding eight clear days, to the common gaol or house of correction, or other prison, lock-up house, or place of security, in the country, riding, division, liberty, city, borough, or place for which such Justice or Justices shall then be acting; or if the remand be for a time not exceeding three clear days, it shall be lawful for such Justice or Justices verbally to order the constable or other person in whose custody such party accused may then be, or any other constable or person to be named by the said Justice or Justices in that behalf, to continue or keep such party accused in his custody, and to bring him before the same or such other Justice or Justices as shall be there acting at the time appointed for continuing such examination: Provided always, that any such Justice or Justices may order such accused party to be brought before him or them, or before any other Justice or Justices of the Peace for the same county, riding, division, liberty, city, borough, or place at any time before the expiration of the time for which such accused party shall be so remanded, and the gaoler or officer in whose custody he shall then be shall duly obey such order: Provided also, that instead of detaining the accused party in custody during the period for which he shall be so remanded, any one Justice of the Peace before whom such accused party shall so appear or be brought as aforesaid may discharge him, upon his entering into a recognizance, with or without a surety or sureties, at the discretion of such Justice, conditioned for his appearance at the time and place appointed for the continuance of such examination; and if such accused party shall not afterwards appear at the time and place mentioned in such recognizance, then the said Justice, or any other Justice of the Peace who may then and there be present, upon certifying upon the back of the recognizance the non-appearance of such accused party, may transmit such recognizance to the Clerk of the Peace for the county, riding, division, liberty, city, borough, or place within which such recognizance shall have been taken, to be proceeded upon in like manner as other recognizances, and such certificate shall be deemed sufficient primâ facie evidence of such non-appearance of the said accused party."

It is held as a matter of practice at Bow Street that the above provisions of the law justify the remand on bail of persons charged with extradition offences at the instance of foreign Governments; but of course the power to release such prisoners on bail is very carefully and sparingly used.

On the other hand, it is argued that the words "as near as may be" in the above-quoted section of the Extradition Act, when taken in conjunction with the words and spirit of the Treaty between Her Majesty and the German Emperor, must be taken to mean that the power of remanding on bail is excluded in extradition cases in which the German Government is the demanding party.

It is pointed out that by Article I of the Treaty in question the High Contracting Parties "engage to deliver up to each other" such persons; and that these binding words must be held so to limit the discretion which the Magistrate would otherwise exercise as to preclude him from taking any steps otherwise open to him which might render the fulfilment of the obligation to surrender less certain.

It is also pointed out that by Article XII of the Treaty it is agreed that if sufficient evidence to justify surrender be not produced in two months from the date of apprehension the fugitive shall be set at liberty; and it is argued that the inference should be drawn that before that period expires the fugitive shall not be released.

And further, as a practical argument in support of these views, it is urged that in view of the fact that under Article XIII of the Treaty all articles in the possession of the fugitive at the time of his apprehension may be ordered to be delivered up with him, it would be unreasonable to release a fugitive wholly or even partially on the security of such property, which may, and frequently does, really belong to other parties, and may be the subject of the charge on which extradition is demanded.

To these arguments it may be replied that by Article IX of the Treaty "the prisoner is to be brought before a competent Magistrate, who is to examine him and conduct the preliminary investigation of the case just as if the apprehension had taken place for a crime committed in the same country," that these words clearly include the power of remanding on bail given by the Indictable Offences Act quoted above; and that, just as in other cases, the Magistrate must be trusted so to exercise this discretion as to avoid the practical dangers and difficulties pointed out.

The Secretary of State will be glad if the Law Officers will advise him on the questions set out in the first paragraph of this Case.

Opinion.

1. We are of opinion that the release on bail of a person charged with an extradition crime before a Police Magistrate at Bow Street, and remanded for further evidence, is authorized by the law of England.

2. In our opinion, it would not be contrary to the Treaty with Germany to release an accused on bail in a proper case. The power of release on bail should be used with the utmost caution.

Judgment in appeal of H. M. Supreme Court in Chishima-Ravenna case.

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, February 16, 1894.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Thomas Sanderson's letter of the 22nd December last, stating, with reference to our letter of the 12th December, that he was directed to transmit to us the accompanying despatches which had been since received from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Tôkiô, reporting and commenting shortly upon the Judgment in appeal delivered by Her Majesty's Supreme Court for China and Japan in the Chishima-Ravenna case.

That, in connection with the principal point upon which that Judgment appeared to turn, Sir Thomas Sanderson was to inclose a Memorandum by Sir Edward Hertslet respecting the Inland Sea of Japan; and was also to call our attention to pp. 1290, 1314 et seq., and 1342-43 of the Report ("Compte Rendu," Part VI) of the proceedings before the Tribunal of Arbitration which was convened at Paris in the present year with reference to the seal fishery in Behring Sea.

That, in view of the importance of the subject, and of the probability of a further appeal to the Judicial Committee of Her Majesty's Privy Council respecting it, your Lordship was anxious that we should have the earliest opportunity of considering the Judgments which had been delivered by the Chief Justice and Assistant Judge of the Supreme Court at Shanghae.

That your Lordship was unaware whether there was anything contained in those Judgments which would modify the opinions which we had already expressed upon the points submitted to us in the reference from the Foreign Office of the 22nd September last, and we were therefore requested to inform your Lordship, after considering the papers, whether we desired to make any alteration in or addition to our Report of the 12th December last.

Sir Thomas Sanderson further stated that your Lordship would also be glad to receive any general observations upon the present aspect and future course of the case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands, we have considered the matter, and have the honour to

Report—

That, in our opinion, there is nothing contained in the Judgments now submitted for our consideration to induce us to modify the opinion which we have already expressed upon the points submitted to us in the reference of the 22nd September, 1893.

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, August 2, 1894.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Bertie's letter of the 31st ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers relating to the circumstances arising out of the differences between China and Japan in regard to Corea.

That the attitude which these two Powers had mutually bound themselves to assume towards the Kingdom of Corea was set forth in the Convention signed at Tien-tsin on the 18th April, 1885, from which it would be seen that in case of any disturbance of a grave nature occurring in Corea which rendered it necessary for the two Contracting Powers, or either of them, to send troops to that country they should, under certain conditions, be at liberty to do so.

That the position of Corea, although it was considered by China as a dependency of hers, was autonomous as regards both internal government and foreign relations.

That a Treaty between this country and Corea was concluded on the 6th June, 1882, copy of which was inclosed in Mr. Bertie's letter, together with an explanatory Memorandum drawn up in the Foreign Office with regard to Corea.

That an insurrection having recently broken out at Tongukuto in Corea, Chinese troops—at the instance of the King—were sent to suppress it. That shortly afterwards Japan officially notified to China that she did not recognize Chinese suzerainty over Corea, and dispatched 4,000 troops to that country, giving the requisite notice to China under the Treaty of 1885.

That negotiations for the mutual withdrawal of the Chinese and Japanese troops ensued, with the assistance of the good offices of the Representatives of this and other countries, but failed to bring about an understanding as to the places to which each side should retire.

That on the 28th June Her Majesty's Government were informed that the King of Corea had refused to discuss matters with the Japanese Minister while foreign troops occupied his territory, and that this attitude was approved of and supported by the Chinese Government.

That this refusal eventually led up to the Palace at Seoul being invested by the Japanese forces, and the King becoming practically a prisoner.

That in the course of the proposals for negotiations between China and Japan the Japanese Government notified that any further dispatch of troops from China to Corea would be regarded as a menace, and that they would not be answerable for the consequences.

That the attitude of the Japanese Government would be found described in a communication which they had addressed to the foreign Representatives at Tôkiô.

That on the 24th ultimo Her Majesty's Government had received information from Peking that 9,000 Chinese troops had left for Corea on the 22nd, and that on the 28th they were unofficially informed by the Japanese Minister at this Court that his Government had received intelligence that a Japanese squadron had, under provocation, been compelled to have an engagement with the Chinese ships escorting the transports near Fontao, and that one Chinese transport with troops had been sunk and a Chinese war-ship captured.

That from the inclosed letter from the Indo-Chinese Steam Navigation Company it appeared that the transport sunk by the Japanese war-ships was a British vessel chartered by Messrs. Jardine, Matheson, and Co., their Shanghae agents, under the general powers, to Li Hung-chang, the Chinese Viceroy of Chih-li, and that when attacked and destroyed she was presumably carrying the British flag.

That the vessel was, moreover, officered by British subjects, whose lives had been sacrificed by the action of the Japanese naval forces.

That although encounters had taken place between the Corean Palace guards and the Japanese troops in the vicinity of Seoul, no declaration of war had, so far as was known, been made either by China or by Japan at the time of the recent naval engagement, and that under those circumstances your Lordship would be glad to be furnished with our advice on the point of international law raised by the attack on and sinking of the British vessel, presumably flying the British flag, engaged in the conveyance of Chinese troops to a foreign country, ostensibly for the purpose of restoring order there on the invitation of the King, but alleged by the Japanese Government to be intended to expel their forces from Corea, and sent thither in full knowledge of the warning given by Japan to China to desist from dispatching more troops.

That your Lordship would be glad to know whether in our opinion Her Majesty's Government were entitled to claim redress from the Japanese Government, and also to be favoured with any general observations which we might have to offer on the case.

We have also to acknowledge the receipt of a further telegram from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Tôkiô,* and also Mr. Bertie's note of the 1st instant, inclosing additional papers marked in the margin.†

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

That, in our opinion, Her Majesty's Government are entitled, under the circumstances of this case, to claim full redress for the sinking of the British transport and for any loss of life or property occasioned thereby to British subjects.

We should be of this opinion even on the statements made by the Japanese Ambassador.

We have, &c.

War between China and Japan. Neutrality. Proclamation, &c.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Bertie's letter of the 1st instant, stating that Her Majesty's Government had received intelligence from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Tôkiô that the Japanese Government had, by an official note to him and the other foreign Representatives, announced that a state of war existed between Japan and China, and that Her Majesty being resolved to maintain the strictest neutrality, your Lordship requested that we would immediately take into our consideration the accompanying draft of a Royal Proclamation to that effect to be issued in case of need, and also drafts of letters to the Boards of Admiralty and Treasury, and to the Colonial Office, War Office, and India Office, announcing the same.

L.O.R. 1884. (Conf. 5121), p. 40.

Mr. Bertie inclosed for our information copies of like documents prepared in 1884 on the occasion of hostilities then existing between France and China, which documents were approved by the then Law Officers in their Report of the 2nd September, 1884.

Mr. Bertie also inclosed a copy of the Report of the Neutrality Laws Commissioners.

Mr. Bertie further stated that your Lordship would be glad to be informed whether the proposed drafts were, in our opinion, right and proper under the circumstances.

A PROCLAMATION.

VICTORIA R.

WHEREAS We are happily at peace with all Sovereigns, Powers, and States:

And whereas a state of war unhappily exists between His Majesty the Emperor of China and His Majesty the Emperor of Japan, and between their respective subjects and others inhabiting within their countries, territories, or dominions:

And whereas We are on terms of friendship and amicable intercourse with each of these States, and with their subjects and others inhabiting within their countries, territories, or dominions:

And whereas great numbers of Our loyal subjects reside and carry on commerce, and possess property and establishments, and enjoy various rights and privileges, within the territory of each of the aforesaid States, protected by the faith of Treaties between Us and each of the aforesaid States:

And whereas We, being desirous of preserving to Our subjects the blessings of peace which they now happily enjoy, are firmly purposed and determined to maintain a strict and impartial neutrality in the said state of war unhappily existing between the aforesaid States:

We, therefore, have thought fit, by and with the advice of Our Privy Council, to issue this Our Royal Proclamation:

And We do hereby strictly charge and command all Our loving subjects to govern themselves accordingly, and to observe a strict neutrality in and during the aforesaid war, and to abstain from violating or contravening either the Laws and Statutes of the Realm in this behalf, or the law of nations in relation thereto, as they will answer to the contrary at their peril:

And whereas in and by a certain Statute made and passed in a Session of Parliament holden in the 33rd and 34th year of Our reign, intituled "An Act to regulate the Conduct of Her Majesty's Subjects during the existence of Hostilities between Foreign States with which Her Majesty is at Peace," it is, amongst other things, declared and enacted as follows:—

"This Act shall extend to all the dominions of Her Majesty, including the adjacent territorial waters.

"Illegal Enlistment.

"If any person, without the licence of Her Majesty, being a British subject, within or without Her Majesty's dominions, accepts or agrees to accept any commission or engagement in the military or naval service of any foreign State at war with any foreign State at peace with Her Majesty, and in this Act referred to as a friendly State, or, whether a British subject or not, within Her Majesty's dominions, induces any other person to accept or agree to accept any commission or engagement in the military or naval service of any such foreign State as aforesaid,—

"He shall be guilty of an offence against this Act, and shall be punishable by fine and imprisonment, or either of such punishments, at the discretion of the Court before which the offender is convicted; and imprisonment, if awarded, may be either with or without hard labour.

"If any person, without the licence of Her Majesty, being a British subject, quits or goes on board any ship with a view of quitting Her Majesty's dominions, with intent to accept any commission or engagement in the military or naval service of any foreign State at war with a friendly State, or, whether a British subject or not, within Her Majesty's dominions, induces any other person to quit or to go on board any ship with a view of quitting Her Majesty's dominions with the like intent,—

"He shall be guilty of an offence against this Act, and shall be punishable by fine and imprisonment, or either of such punishments, at the discretion of the Court before which the offender is convicted; and imprisonment, if awarded, may be either with or without hard labour.

"If any person induces any other person to quit Her Majesty's dominions, or to embark on any ship within Her Majesty's dominions, under a misrepresentation or false representation of the service in which such person is to be engaged, with the intent or in order that such person may accept or agree to accept any commission or engagement in the military or naval service of any foreign State at war with a friendly State,—

"He shall be guilty of an offence against this Act, and shall be punishable by fine and imprisonment, or either of such punishments, at the discretion of the Court before which the offender is convicted; and imprisonment, if awarded, may be either with or without hard labour.

"If the master or owner of any ship, without the licence of Her Majesty, knowingly either takes on board, or engages to take on board, or has on board such ship within Her Majesty's dominions any of the following persons, in this Act referred to as illegally enlisted persons, that is to say:

"(1.) Any person who, being a British sucject within or without the dominions of Her Majesty, has, without the licence of Her Majesty, accepted or agreed to accept any commission or engagement in the military or naval service of any foreign State at war with any friendly State:

"(2.) Any person, being a British subject, who, without the licence of Her Majesty, is about to quit Her Majesty's dominions with intent to accept any commission or engagement in the military or naval service of any foreign State at war with a friendly State:

"(3.) Any person who has been induced to embark under a misrepresentation or false representation of the service in which such person is to be engaged, with the intent or in order that such person may accept or agree to accept any commission or engagement in the military or naval service of any foreign State at war with a friendly State:

"Such master or owner shall be guilty of an offence against this Act, and the following consequences shall ensue; that is to say:

"(1.) The offender shall be punishable by fine and imprisonment, or either of such punishments, at the discretion of the Court before which the offender is convicted; and imprisonment, if awarded, may be either with or without hard labour; and

"(2.) Such ship shall be detained until the trial and conviction or acquittal of the master or owner, and until all penalties inflicted on the master or owner have been paid, or the master or owner has given security for the payment of such penalties to the satisfaction of two Justices of the Peace, or other Magistrate or Magistrates having the authority of two Justices of the Peace; and

"(3.) All illegally enlisted persons shall, immediately on the discovery of the offence, be taken on shore, and shall not be allowed to return to the ship.

"Illegal Shipbuilding and illegal Expeditions.

"If any person within Her Majesty's dominions, without the licence of Her Majesty, does any of the following acts; that is to say,—

"(1.) Builds or agrees to build, or causes to be built, any ship with intent or knowledge, or having reasonable cause to believe that the same shall or will be employed in the military or naval service of any foreign State at war with any friendly State; or

"(2.) Issues or delivers any commission for any ship with intent or knowledge, or having reasonable cause to believe that the same shall or will be employed in the military or naval service of any foreign State at war with any friendly State; or

"(3.) Equips any ship with intent or knowledge, or having reasonable cause to believe that the same shall or will be employed in the military or naval service of any foreign State at war with any friendly State; or

"(4.) Dispatches, or causes or allows to be dispatched, any ship with intent or knowledge, or having reasonable cause to believe that the same shall or will be employed in the military or naval service of any foreign State at war with any friendly State;

"Such person shall be deemed to have committed an offence against this Act, and the following consequences shall ensue:

"(1.) The offender shall be punishable by fine and imprisonment, or either of such punishments, at the discretion of the Court before which the offender is convicted; and imprisonment, if awarded, may be either with or without hard labour.

"(2.) The ship in respect of which any such offence is committed, and her equipment, shall be forfeited to Her Majesty:

"Provided, that a person building, causing to be built, or equipping a ship in any of the cases aforesaid, in pursuance of a contract made before the commencement of such war as aforesaid, shall not be liable to any of the penalties imposed by this section in respect of such building or equipping, if he satisfies the conditions following (that is to say):—

"(1.) If forthwith upon a Proclamation of Neutrality being issued by Her Majesty he gives notice to the Secretary of State that he is so building, causing to be built, or equipping such ship, and furnishes such particulars of the contract and of any matters relating to, or done, or to be done under the contract as may be required by the Secretary of State:

"(2.) If he gives such security, and takes and permits to be taken such other measures, if any, as the Secretary of State may prescribe for insuring that such ship shall not be dispatched, delivered, or removed, without the licence of Her Majesty, until the termination of such war as aforesaid.

"Where any ship is built by order of, or on behalf of, any foreign State when at war with a friendly State, or is delivered to, or to the order of, such foreign State, or any person who, to the knowledge of the person building, is an agent of such foreign State, or is paid for by such foreign State or such agent, and is employed in the military or naval service of such foreign State, such ship shall, until the contrary is proved, be deemed to have been built with a view to being so employed, and the burden shall lie on the builder of such ship of proving that he did not know that the ship was intended to be so employed in the military or naval service of such foreign State.

"If any person within the dominions of Her Majesty, and without the licence of Her Majesty,—

"By adding to the number of the guns, or by changing those on board for other guns, or by the addition of any equipment for war, increases or augments, or procures to be increased or augmented, or is knowingly concerned in increasing or augmenting, the warlike force of any ship which at the time of her being within the dominions of Her Majesty was a ship in the military or naval service of any foreign State at war with any friendly State,—

"Such person shall be guilty of an offence against this Act, and shall be punishable by fine and imprisonment, or either of such punishments, at the discretion of the Court before which the offender is convicted; and imprisonment, if awarded, may be either with or without hard labour.

"If any person within the limits of Her Majesty's dominions, and without the licence of Her Majesty,—

"Prepares or fits out any naval or military expedition to proceed against the dominions of any friendly State, the following consequences shall ensue:—

"(1.) Every person engaged in such preparation or fitting out, or assisting therein, or employed in any capacity in such expedition, shall be guilty of an offence against this Act, and shall be punishable by fine and imprisonment, or either of such punishments, at the discretion of the Court before which the offender is convicted; and imprisonment, if awarded, may be either with or without hard labour.

"(2.) All ships, and their equipments, and all arms and munitions of war, used in or forming part of such expedition, shall be forfeited to Her Majesty.

"Any person, who aids, abets, counsels, or procures the commission of any offence against this Act, shall be liable to be tried and punished as a principal offender."

And whereas by the said Act it is further provided that ships built, commissioned, equipped, or dispatched, in contravention of the said Act, may be condemned and forfeited by Judgment of the Court of Admiralty; and that if the Secretary of State, or chief executive authority, is satisfied that there is a reasonable and probable cause for believing that a ship within Our dominions has been or is being built, commissioned, or equipped, contrary to the said Act, and is about to be taken beyond the limits of such dominions, or that a ship is about to be dispatched, contrary to the Act, such Secretary of State, or chief executive authority, shall have power to issue a warrant authorizing the seizure and search of such ship, and her detention until she has been either condemned or released by process of law:

And whereas certain powers of seizure and detention are conferred by the said Act on certain local authorities:

Now, in order that none of our subjects may unwarily render themselves liable to the penalties imposed by the said Statute, We do hereby strictly command that no person or persons whatsoever do commit any act, matter, or thing whatsoever contrary to the provisions of the said Statute, upon pain of the several penalties by the said Statute imposed, and of Our high displeasure.

And We do hereby further warn and admonish all Our loving subjects, and all persons whatsoever entitled to Our protection, to observe towards each of the aforesaid States, their citizens, subjects, and territories, and to all belligerents whatsoever, with whom We are at peace, the duties of neutrality; and to respect, in all and each of them, the exercise of those belligerent rights which We and Our Royal predecessors have always claimed to exercise.

And we hereby further warn all our loving subjects, and all persons whatsoever entitled to Our protection, that if any of them shall presume, in contempt of this Our Royal Proclamation, and of Our high displeasure, to do any acts in derogation of their duty as subjects of a neutral Sovereign in a war between other States, or in violation or contravention of the law of nations in that behalf, as more especially by breaking, or endeavouring to break, any blockade lawfully and actually established by or on behalf of either of the said States, or by carrying officers, soldiers, despatches, arms, ammunition, military stores or materials, or any article or articles considered and deemed to be contraband of war according to the law or modern usages of nations, for the use or service of either of the said States, that all persons so offending, together with their ships and goods, will rightfully incur and be justly liable to hostile capture, and to the penalties denounced by the law of nations in that behalf.

And We do hereby give notice that all Our subjects and persons entitled to our protection who may misconduct themselves in the premises will do so at their peril, and of their own wrong; and that they will in nowise obtain any protection from Us against such capture, or such penalties as aforesaid, but will, on the contrary, incur Our high displeasure by such misconduct.

Given at Our Court at , this day of , in the year our Lord one thousand eight hundred and , in the forty-eighth year of Our reign.

God save the Queen.

*The Earl of Kimberley to the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty.

My Lords, Foreign Office,

HER Majesty being fully determined to observe the duties of neutrality during the existing state of war between the Emperor of China and the Emperor of Japan, and being moreover resolved to prevent, as far as possible, the use of Her Majesty's harbours, ports, and coasts, and the waters within Her Majesty's territorial jurisdiction, in aid of the warlike purposes, of either belligerent, has commanded me to communicate to your Lordships, for your guidance, the following rules, which are to be treated and enforced as Her Majesty's orders and directions:—

Her Majesty is pleased further to command that these rules shall be put in force in the United Kingdom, the Isle of Man, and the Channel Islands on and after the , and in Her Majesty's territories and possessions beyond the seas, six days after the day when the Governor, or other chief authority of each of such territories or possessions respectively, shall have notified and published the same; stating in such notification that the said rules are to be obeyed by all persons within the same territories and possessions.

During the continuance of the present state of war, all ships of war of either belligerent are prohibited from making use of any port or roadstead in the United Kingdom, the Isle of Man, or the Channel Islands, or in any of Her Majesty's Colonies or foreign possessions or dependencies, or of any waters subject to the territorial jurisdiction of the British Crown, as a station or place of resort for any warlike purpose, or for the purpose of obtaining any facilities for warlike equipment; and no ship of war of either belligerent shall hereafter be permitted to sail out of or leave any port, roadstead, or waters subject to British jurisdiction from which any vessel of the other belligerent (whether the same shall be a ship of war or a merchant ship) shall have previously departed until after the expiration of at least twenty-four hours from the departure of such last-mentioned vessel beyond the territorial jurisdiction of Her Majesty.

2. If any ship of war of either belligerent shall, after the time when this Order shall be first notified and put in force in the United Kingdom, the Isle of Man and the Channel Islands, and in the several Colonies and foreign possessions or dependencies of Her Majesty respectively, enter any port, roadstead, or waters belonging to Her Majesty, either in the United Kingdom, the Isle of Man, or the Channel Islands, or in any of Her Majesty's Colonies or foreign possessions or dependencies, such vessel shall be required to depart and to put to sea within twenty-four hours after her entrance into such port, roadstead, or waters, except in case of stress of weather, or of her requiring provisions or things necessary for the subsistence of her crew, or repairs; in either of which cases the authorities of the port, or of the nearest port (as the case may be), shall require her to put to sea as soon as possible after the expiration of such period of twenty-four hours, without permitting her to take in supplies beyond what may be necessary for her immediate use; and no such vessel which may have been allowed to remain within British waters for the purpose of repair shall continue in any such port, roadstead, or waters for a longer period than twenty-four hours after her necessary repairs shall have been completed. Provided, nevertheless, that in all cases in which there shall be any vessel (whether ships of war or merchant ships) of the said belligerent parties in the same port, roadstead, or waters within the territorial jurisdiction of Her Majesty, there shall be an interval of not less than twenty-four hours between the departure therefrom of any such vessel (whether a ship of war or merchant ship) of the one belligerent and the subsequent departure therefrom of any ship of war of the other belligerent; and the time hereby limited for the departure of such ships of war respectively shall always, in case of necessity, be extended so far as may be requisite for giving effect to this proviso, but no further or otherwise.

3. No ship of war of either belligerent shall hereafter be permitted, while in any port, roadstead, or waters subject to the territorial jurisdiction of Her Majesty, to take in any supplies, except provisions and such other things as may be requisite for the subsistence of her crew, and except so much coal only as may be sufficient to carry such vessel to the nearest port of her own country, or to some nearer destination, and no coal shall again be supplied to any such ship of war in the same or any other port, roadstead, or waters subject to the territorial jurisdiction of Her Majesty, without special permission, until after the expiration of three months from the time when such coal may have been last supplied to her within British waters as aforesaid.

4. Armed ships of either party are interdicted from carrying prizes made by them into the ports, harbours, roadsteads, or waters of the United Kingdom, the Isle of Man, the Channel Islands, or any of Her Majesty's Colonies or possessions abroad.

Sinking of "Kow-Shing." Responsibility of Japanese Government for losses to British subjects.

WE were favoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Bertie's note of the 2nd instant, stating that, with reference to our Report on the subject of the destruction of the "Kow-Shing,"* he was directed by your Lordship to inquire whether a further telegram from the Japanese Government,† which had just been communicated to your Lordship by Viscount Aoki, contained anything to induce us to modify the opinion already expressed by us on the circumstances of the case as previously reported.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands, we have the honour to Detention of torpedo-catcher at Elswick believed to be for Japanese Govt.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Bertie's letter of this day's date, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the margin, relative to a torpedo-catcher now lying at Elswick, which was reported to have been sold to the Japanese Government, and to be in course of equipment for dispatch within a fortnight.

That Mr. Bertie was to request that we would take the papers into our consideration, and inform your Lordship whether the Customs authorities might properly be instructed to take any necessary measures to prevent the departure of the vessel in question pending a verification of those suspicions, and in the meanwhile to use their best efforts to obtain further information as to the vessel's destination, and as to whether any violation of "The Foreign Enlistment Act, 1870," was intended, such as would justify the issue of a warrant for her detention.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands, we have taken the matter into our consideration, and have the honour to

That, in our opinion, the Customs authorities at Newcastle-on-Tyne may properly be instructed to take any necessary steps to prevent the departure of the vessel in question pending the investigation into the statements made, and in the meanwhile to use their best efforts to obtain further information on the points mentioned in Mr. Bertie's letter.

Independently of express instructions, it is the duty of the officers of Customs, under section 24 of "The Foreign Enlistment Act, 1870," if a representation is made to them, and they believe the representation, that there is reasonable and probable cause for believing that a ship within Her Majesty's dominions is being equipped and is about to be taken beyond Her Majesty's dominions contrary to the Act, to detain the ship and communicate with the Secretary of State. Under section 23, if the Secretary of State is satisfied that there is a reasonable and probable cause for the like belief in a similar case, the Secretary of State is empowered to issue a warrant.

We should be prepared to advise that proof of the fact that work is being pressed on rapidly, day and night, at the present time, when news of the Chino-Japanese war has just reached the country, is of itself a reasonable and probable cause for believing the ship to be equipping and about to be sent out for employment in the naval service of one or the other belligerent. Of course there would be a certain risk of the Treasury being made liable to costs in case of a mistake being made on this head, but it is for the Secretary of State to consider whether such a risk ought not to be run. The detention need not be maintained if satisfactory explanations are received.

War between China and Japan. Duties of Consuls in sale and transfer of British vessels.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Bertie's letter of the 4th instant, stating that Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Tôkiô had, in view of the state of war existing between China and Japan, inquired of your Lordship in a telegram, of which Mr. Bertie inclosed a copy, whether neutrality required that Her Majesty's Consuls in Japan should refuse to exercise their administrative and executive functions in the matter of the sale and transfer of British vessels to the Japanese flag under certificate of sale.

That Mr. Paget stated that it seemed probable that the vessels were required for purposes of military transport.

That the duties of a British Consular officer in connection with the sale of a British vessel to a foreigner were performed in virtue of the provisions of the Merchant Shipping Act, and were definitely laid down in section 30, p. 14 of the Board of Trade Instructions to Consuls; and that it appeared doubtful whether any discretion rested with the Consul in the performance of those duties when called upon by the principals in the transaction to perform them.

That as there appeared to be no precedent in the archives of the Foreign Office bearing directly on this point, and as the question did not appear to be one which had previously been submitted to the Law Officers of the Crown, your Lordship requested that we would take the matter into consideration, and give our opinion as to the answer which should be returned to Mr. Paget, with any general observations which we might have to offer on the subject.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands, we have taken the matter into our consideration, and have the honour to

Report—

That, in our opinion, Mr. Paget's telegram should receive an answer in the negative. The duties of neutrality do not require or authorize Consuls to refrain from exercising their administrative functions under the Merchant Shipping Acts, or authorize a departure from the instructions given to them as to certificates of sale.

Detention of torpedo-catcher at Elswick believed to be for Japanese Govt.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Earl of Kimberley, the papers noted in the accompanying list, which relate to the torpedo-catcher now at Elswick, which formed the subject of your Report of the 3rd instant, herewith returned, and I am to request that you will take them into your immediate consideration, and favour his Lordship with your opinion whether the information now furnished by the Acting Collector of Customs at Newcastle in his letter of yesterday, marked (D), would justify Her Majesty's Government in taking any further action with regard to this vessel, and, if so, what the character of such action should be.

Drafts of the usual warrants of detention (A) and (B) are inclosed herein.

I have, &c.

Report—

That, having regard to the special circumstances of this case, the information now furnished by the Acting Collector of Customs at Newcastle in his letter of the 7th August—marked (D)—and the other papers transmitted to us, does not alter our opinion that there is reasonable and probable cause for believing that the vessel is being equipped, or is about to be dispatched, in contravention of the Act. Only a neutral Government could be looked upon as a possible purchaser otherwise than for the purposes of one of the belligerents, and if there were such a purchaser behind it would be perfectly easy to show it.

We are of opinion that Her Majesty's Government would be justified in taking further action in regard to this vessel by the issue by the Secretary of State of the warrants in the Forms (A) and (B).

It would be advisable to require from the firm of Armstrong, Mitchell, and Co. information on the following points:—

Where the vessel came from, and by whom she was built.

With whom they contracted for the equipment.

What is the cause of the unusual rapidity with which she has been equipped.

Whether any and what Government has caused her to be built or equipped, or contemplates purchasing her.

Where and to whom it is the intention of the Company to deliver her.

Whether they are willing to furnish any documentary evidence as to the points above referred to.

The answers may influence the Secretary of State as to releasing the ship hereafter or further detaining her. Any refusal to give information on these points ought to have weight with the Court of Admiralty in the event of any application for her release.

Torpedo-catcher at Elswick. Continuance of work on whilst under detention.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, August 10, 1894.

WITH reference to your Report of yesterday's date respecting the torpedo-catcher now at Elswick, I have the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Earl of Kimberley, the accompanying letter from the Board of Customs,* asking whether, under present circumstances, and while the vessel by virtue of the warrants is under seizure and detention, they are to allow work to be continued on her, with a view to the completion of her equipment.

Conversion of "Islam" into a transport. As to violation of Foreign Enlistment Act.

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, August 14, 1894.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Bertie's letter of the 13th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the letter from the Board of Customs, with its inclosures,† relative to a merchant-vessel, named the "Islam," which is now being fitted out at Glasgow, and was supposed to be in process of conversion into a transport for troops.

That Mr. Bertie was to request us to favour your Lordship with our opinion whether any violation of the Foreign Enlistment Act was involved in this case, and, if so, what steps should be taken in the matter by Her Majesty's Government.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands, we have the honour to

Report—

That there is a violation of the Foreign Enlistment Act in this case, if the vessel is being equipped, fitted, or adapted for a transport in order to be used by the Japanese Government.

In any case there is, in our opinion, reasonable and probable cause for believing that this vessel is being equipped and is about to be dispatched contrary to the Act.

Accordingly we advise that warrants be issued to detain the vessel, notice being given that the work upon her will not be interfered with, and in the meantime, information should be obtained, as far as possible, as to the character of the work intended, and the interest of the Japanese Company in her, the commerce in which it is stated she is to be used, and the cause of the rapidity with which she is being fitted.

Torpedo-catcher detained at Elswick. As to release of.

WITH reference to your letters of the 9th and 10th instant, respecting the torpedo-catcher now under detention at Elswick, I have the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Earl of Kimberley, the accompanying letter from the Commissioners of Customs, and telegram from the Acting Collector of Customs at Newcastle-on-Tyne, stating that Messrs. Armstrong and Co. have informed him that the torpedo-catcher has now been fully paid for, and is no longer their property, the purchaser being a British subject, who is, as appears from their letter inclosed in the one from the Board of Customs, a Mr. Palmer, of 50, Finsbury Square, London, E.C. The Acting Collector, as you will see from his telegram, expects an application to be made to him to register the vessel as a British ship.

I am to request that you will favour Lord Kimberley with your opinion whether the torpedo-catcher may now be released on the owner giving security that the vessel shall not be employed contrary to the provisions of "The Foreign Enlistment Act, 1870."

If, in your opinion, it would not be advisable to release the vessel, Lord Kimberley would be glad if you would inform him what action you would advise beng taken on the inclosed papers.

Report.

In our opinion, the purchaser, Mr. Palmer, ought to be asked to furnish evidence as to the destination of the torpedo-catcher. No private person would be likely to purchase such a vessel except for re-sale to a foreign Government, and if he is acting for a neutral Government, he can have no difficulty in proving the fact.

If he is able to produce evidence on the point, we think that the vessel should be released, but it would depend upon the nature of the evidence whether the release should be unconditional, or subject to the owner giving security to the satisfaction of the Secretary of State that the ship shall not be employed contrary to the Act. If Mr. Palmer cannot or will not make a primâ facie case of sale to a neutral Government, we do not think that the vessel should be released, even though security is offered.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, August 21, 1894.

Detention of "Tatsuta" under Foreign Enlistment Act, and withdrawal of British portion of crew.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Earl of Kimberley, the accompanying papers respecting the Japanese cruizer "Tatsuta."

The Board of Customs reported on the 31st ultimo (Paper B) that the "Tatsuta" had passed down the Tyne with her guns in position, and inquired whether any steps should be taken to prevent the vessel from sailing, and they were informed (Paper C) that, no declaration of war having been made by China or Japan, there was no reason why, under the then existing circumstances, Her Majesty's Government should detain the "Tatsuta" under the Foreign Enlistment Act.

The "Tatsuta" sailed from the Tyne on the 31st July, and entered the Suez Canal on her way to Japan on the 19th of this month (Papers E and F).

that the "Tatsuta" has on board of her a crew notoriously consisting in great part of British subjects, and his Lordship has been requested, in view of the Queen's Proclamation of Neutrality and of the provisions of the Foreign Enlistment Act, to give orders, in the event of the vessel touching at Aden or any other place in Her Majesty's dominions, to have the British portion of her crew withdrawn, and to take such other measures as may be necessary to prevent a violation of the Foreign Enlistment Act and of the law of nations.

Sir Halliday Macartney, English Secretary to the Chinese Legation, called at this Office yesterday with reference to the "Tatsuta."

In reply to inquiries made of him, he said that he had no reason to doubt that the vessel is commanded by a Japanese officer, and that part of her crew are Japanese subjects. But he stated that the Chinese Minister had been advised that the engagement of the British seamen, and their continuance to serve after the declaration of war, constituted a continuance of equipping in contravention of the Foreign Enlistment Act.

I am to request that you will take the inclosed papers into your consideration, and that you will inform Lord Kimberley at your earliest convenience whether, in your opinion, Her Majesty's Government should take any action with regard to the "Tatsuta," and, if so, what instructions should be sent to the Governors of Her Majesty's possessions abroad, where the vessel is likely to touch on her way to Japan.

We are of opinion also that the continuance of the voyage by the British seamen does not constitute a continuance of equipping within the meaning of "The Foreign Enlistment Act, 1870."

Gentlemen,

War between Japan and China. Competency of Prize Courts to deal with British vessels.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Earl of Kimberley, the papers noted in the accompanying list which relate to a question arising out of the hostilities now being carried on between China and Japan.

On the 14th instant a telegram was addressed by the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty to the Commander-in-chief on the China Station, informing him that the Proclamation of Neutrality just issued by Her Majesty's Government warned British ships from conveying troops, arms, or contraband of war for either belligerent, and that persons offending were liable to hostile capture. Sir E. Fremantle was further informed that Her Majesty's ships of war must not interfere to release British merchant-vessels captured by either belligerent beyond the territorial limits of Her Majesty's dominions for violation of neutrality.

The Admiral replied on the 15th instant that it was doubtful whether either China or Japan possessed suitable Prize Courts for the trial of captured vessels, and he stated that the Captains of their men-of-war had little respect for international law, and that he was apprehensive of violent and illegal proceedings on their part.

In these circumstances, it is necessary to consider before what Courts British vessels captured on account of breaches of neutrality could properly be tried.

It is assumed that neither China nor Japan can on its own initiative constitute a Prize Court competent to deal with British vessels, as, owing to the exterritorial jurisdiction possessed by Great Britain, neither of the belligerents has power to deal judicially with the persons or property of British subjects. They are under the jurisdiction of Her Majesty's Consular Courts in China and Japan. Vice-Admiralty jurisdiction has been conferred upon these Courts by the 54th Article of the China and Japan Order in Council of the 9th March, 1865, and by Articles 7 and 11 of the China and Japan Order in Council of the 14th August, 1878, of which copies are inclosed for convenience of reference. (Papers A and B.)

Copies of "The Colonial Courts of Admiralty Act, 1890," and "The Consular Courts (Admiralty) Order in Council, 1894," which bear on this, are also annexed. (Papers C and D.)

I am to request that you will take the papers transmitted herewith into your consideration, and that you will favour Lord Kimberley with your opinion as to what course Her Majesty's Government should pursue in the event of British ships being captured by the cruizers of either of the belligerents, and being taken into port for adjudication.

I am further to request that you will be so good as to furnish Lord Kimberley with any general observations which you may have to make on the subject referred to in this letter.

(D.)	Consular Courts (Admiralty) Order in Council (Confidential No. 6508*)	August 7, 1894.

Report.

In our opinion, the exterritorial jurisdiction exercised by Her Majesty under the Treaties with China and Japan has nothing to do with the law or procedure of Prize Courts.

According to international law a Prize Court must be the Court of a belligerent, and the belligerent Power must, in our opinion, bring the Court into existence. This was done by Turkey in the Russo-Turkish War, notwithstanding the exterritorial jurisdiction of the European Powers in the Ottoman dominions.

In such a Prize Court British subjects could only appear as claimants, and the questions tried would not be questions between British subjects within the exterritorial jurisdiction, but between British subjects not necessarily resident in the belligerent State, or in any way subject to the jurisdiction of the Consular Courts, and belligerent Government, or the captors.

If a Prize Court is established by either belligerent, and professes to be conducted according to the rules of international law, its decision will bind the property in the vessels dealt with, but the belligerent State will be directly responsible to the neutral Government for any unlawful decision of the Court. If no Prize Court is established the neutral Government will have the right to hold the belligerent State directly responsible for all seizures of, and damage done to the property of, subjects of the neutral State.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's further commands of to-day's date[*] respecting the "Tatsuta," and, in obedience thereto, have the honour to

Report—

That the nationality of the Captain would not in any way alter the opinion we have already given if the vessel is really a commissioned vessel of war. It does, however, suggest that she may not yet be commissioned, and the question should be dealt with on that hypothesis.

Even then we are of opinion that the British seamen could not lawfully be removed by use of force, though there would not seem to be any reason why they should not be told of the risks which they are likely to run, of which they may by possibility be ignorant.

Detention of "Diogenes" in pursuance of Foreign Enlistment Act.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Earl of Kimberley, the inclosed letters from the Board of Customs,[†] respecting a vessel named the "Diogenes," which is now undergoing alterations at the Thames Ship-Building Yard at Blackwall.

According to the Report of the Inspector of the Waterguard, dated the 21st instant (Inclosure 1 in Paper A), there is no doubt but that the vessel is being fitted for war purposes; and the Inspector observes that the fact that models of guns are being tried or fitted in gun carriages may point to the possibility that it is intended to ship the guns after the ship's departure.

It is, however, stated in the second Report from the Board of Customs (Paper B), that information has been received from the Secretary to the Thames Ship-Building Company that the vessel is being fitted for disposal to any customer offering, other than the Governments of China and Japan.

I am to request that you will take the inclosed papers into your consideration, and that you will favour Lord Kimberley with your opinion whether any action should be taken by Her Majesty's Government in regard to the vessel in question.

Report.

In our opinion, and assuming the entire accuracy of the statements made by the Ship-Building Company, there is yet a reasonable and probable cause for believing that any purchaser at the present time will purchase for one of the belligerent Powers, and that the Secretary of State may properly issue a warrant when it seems likely that the vessel is about to sail, unless he gets satisfactory evidence that she is really intended for some neutral Sovereign.

"Islam," detained in pursuance of Foreign Enlistment Act. As to release of.

WITH reference to your Report of the 14th instant, respecting the case of the steam-ship "Islam," which is now under detention at Glasgow in pursuance of warrants issued in virtue of the provisions of the Foreign Enlistment Act, I have the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Earl of Kimberley, the inclosed letter from the Board of Customs, transmitting a copy of a Report, and its inclosures, from the Acting Collector of Customs at Glasgow respecting the vessel in question.

It appears that the "Islam" has been transformed from a purely cargo vessel to one for carrying not less than twenty-two cabin passengers and about 2,000 steerage passengers or emigrants, besides cargo. The work which has been done is described in the first paragraph of the Acting Collector's Report, and he states that, in the opinion of a Board of Trade Surveyor at Glasgow, the vessel is now admirably fitted as a transport for troops, that the ice-house could be well utilized as a small-arms magazine, and that the cargo ports could be used for quick-firing and machine-guns, and also for firing torpedoes.

It is further stated (paragraph 2) that the vessel is owned by the Japan Mail-ship Company of Tôkiô; that she is to be used in carrying cabin passengers, steerage passengers, or emigrants and cargo around the coasts of Japan, and between Japan and Corea, China, &c. (paragraph 3); that there has been no undue pressing forward of the work (paragraph 4); and that the owners of the vessel are subsidized by the Japanese Government, so that their vessels may be used for transports and armed cruizers in case of necessity.

On the 14th August a note was addressed to Lord Kimberley by the Japanese Minister (Paper B), inclosing a copy of a letter from the Japanese Consul at Glasgow, in which it was stated that the "Islam" is an ordinary merchant-vessel which was purchased on behalf of the Nippon Yusen Kaisha from Messrs. D. and W. Henderson, and that the alterations effected in her were made in order to adapt her to the Company's trade.

In inclosing the letter from the Consul at Glasgow, the Japanese Minister expressed the hope that, under the circumstances stated, no obstacle would be thrown in the way of her departure from a British port.

Viscount Aoki was informed on the 16th instant that warrants had been issued for the detention of the "Islam" under the provisions of the Foreign Enlistment Act, but that his communication would be at once considered by Her Majesty's Government. (Paper C.)

I am to request that you will take the inclosed papers into your consideration, and that you will favour Lord Kimberley with your opinion whether, in view of the Report from the Customs, Her Majesty's Government should take any, and, if so, what action, as regards the release of the "Islam."

The most important item of further evidence consists in the allegation, intrinsically likely in itself, that the Japanese Government have a right to the services of the ships of the owner Company for transport services.

It seems to be the fact that the equipment of the "Islam" is practically the same as that of the other vessels of the Company, but it would also seem that although suitable to be used as a passenger ship in time of peace, she is admirably adapted for a transport in time of war.

Under the circumstances, we do not think that she should be released.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, August 24, 1894.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Earl of Kimberley, the accompanying Report from the Board of Customs,* respecting a small steel vessel built at Wallsend-on-Tyne, and now lying near the Wallsend ferry boat landing stage.

I am to call your attention to the Report of the Solicitor of Customs of the 23rd instant (Inclosure 2), stating the facts which have been brought to his knowledge respecting this vessel, and expressing his opinion that there is no reasonable cause to believe that a violation of the Foreign Enlistment Act is intended; and I am to request that you will take the matter into your consideration, and inform Lord Kimberley whether, in your opinion, any action in regard to the vessel should be taken by Her Majesty's Government.

I have, &c.

Report.

In our opinion there is not at present any evidence such as would afford reasonable and probable ground for believing that the small steel vessel at Wallsend is being built or equipped, or about to be dispatched contrary to the Foreign Enlistment Act. It may be well to direct the local authorities to keep watch upon the vessel, but unless further evidence is obtained we do not think that the Secretary of State can be advised to issue a warrant for her detention.

We did not intend in our Report of yesterday's date to exclude the release of the vessel in the event of adequate security being given that she shall not be used for war purposes.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, August 27, 1894.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Earl of Kimberley, with reference to your Report of the 21st instant respecting the case of the Japanese vessel "Tatsuta," a copy of a telegram from the Resident at Aden to the Secretary of State for India.*

The Resident at Aden reports that the "Tatsuta" arrived at that port on the 25th instant with a Captain and crew, British subjects; that the naval authorities there ruled that she was not in commission; and he also states that she has no Japanese naval officers or officials on board. He further reports that the crew were warned, in accordance with your recommendation, of the issue of the Queen's Proclamation, and that he had directed the Captain to leave Aden by 5 o'clock this evening, failing which he intended to detain the vessel pending Her Majesty's pleasure. The Captain has, as you will observe, intimated his inability to comply, owing to a portion of the crew refusing to proceed, and the Resident asks for further instructions.

I am to request that you will take the inclosed telegram into your consideration, and that you will, at your earliest convenience, favour Lord Kimberley with your opinion as to the instructions which should be sent to the Resident at Aden in the circumstances reported by him.

It is stated in the Report that the crew of the "Tatsuta" are all Englishmen, and that the vessel would probably meet her Japanese crew on the high seas in the Gulf of Bengal, or off Acheen Head, Sumatra.

Mr. Bertie presents his compliments to the Attorney-General and Solicitor-General, and, with reference to previous letters from this Department respecting the case of the Japanese vessel "Tatsuta," has the honour to transmit herewith copies of telegraphic correspondence between the Secretary of State for India and the Resident at Aden.*

The Resident at Aden reports, in his telegram of this day's date, that there are no Japanese on board the "Tatsuta," that she has a paper from the Japanese Minister authorizing R. W. Stranack to proceed in the vessel as sailing master, and that she has no other papers except ordinary log-book and muster-roll. He further reports that he has been informed that three Japanese officers took the vessel out of the Tyne and then left her, and that the vessel is now detained in charge of the Senior Naval Officer, half of her crew having refused to go on and left her.

The Secretary of State for India has informed the Resident that recruitment for dispatch of the "Tatsuta" should be forbidden pending further instructions.

Report.

In our opinion, the utmost care should be taken to prevent any recruitment or enlistment of men at Aden for service on board the "Tatsuta."

From the telegram of the 27th August, it would appear that this step will be sufficient to prevent the vessel from putting to sea, but, if necessary, she should be detained until further order.

Gentlemen,

Prize Courts in Japan. Establishment of.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Earl of Kimberley, the papers noted in the accompanying list, which relate to the establishment by the Japanese Government of Prize Courts to adjudicate in cases of neutral vessels captured for violation of neutrality during the continuance of hostilities with China.

On the 24th instant despatches were addressed to Her Majesty's Ministers at Peking and Tôkiô, communicating to them the views expressed in your Report of the 22nd instant (copy annexed, Paper A), with regard to the rights of China and Japan to establish such Courts.

On the same day, however, a telegram was received from Mr. Trench (Paper B) reporting that an Imperial Ordinance had been issued, without any previous consultation with Her Majesty's Legation, promulgating Regulations for Prize Courts entirely Japanese in their constitution and jurisdiction in all prize cases.

Mr. Trench inquired whether he should take any notice of these Regulations, and was informed (Paper C) that if they differed in any essential point from those issued by Turkey in 1877, or contained provisions which might lead to unjust decisions, he was to report by telegraph. He was further informed that it was especially desirable that there should be a right of appeal.

* India Office, August 29, 1894, and inclosure.

A copy of the Turkish Regulations is inclosed for convenience of reference (Paper D).

In reply, Mr. Trench states (Paper E) that the Regulations provide for appeal to higher Prize Courts. He also states that they differ in some respects from those issued by Turkey in 1877, and mentions various points for which provision is not made. He adds that, in the opinion of the Acting Judge of Her Majesty's Court for Japan, upon a seizure being made it would be advisable to notify the Japanese Government that Her Majesty's Government in any case involving British interests reserve the right of remonstrance, and may refuse to be bound should they consider the decision of the Court to be unjust.

I am to request that you will take the papers transmitted herewith into your consideration, and that you will favour Lord Kimberley with your opinion on the course suggested by the Acting Judge, bearing in mind the fact that the Regulations have been actually promulgated, and that the Japanese Government would probably be unwilling to withdraw or modify them.

I am further to request that you will be so good as to furnish his Lordship with any general observations on the case, in connection with which I am to call your attention with reference to the remark in your Report of the 22nd instant, as to the analogy in Turkey and Japan as regards extra-territoriality, that the cases are somewhat different, as in some matters British subjects are amenable to the jurisdiction of Turkish Courts, as will be seen from the inclosed Memorandum (marked F), but in no cases are they or their property subject to the jurisdiction of Japanese Courts.

Report.

In our opinion, and so far as we can judge from the telegram of Mr. Trench, No. 63, there is nothing in the Prize Regulations issued by the Japanese Government to call for remonstrance. Nothing should be done to relieve the Japanese Government from the responsibility which they are under of making their own Regulations, or which can be construed as an approval of them by Her Majesty's Government. In all cases in which the Japanese Prize Courts may arrive at decisions unwarranted by international law, Her Majesty's Government will have a direct right as against the Japanese Government to claim redress on behalf of British subjects. We do not consider it necessary to give an express notification to this effect on the occasion of a seizure. The proceedings of the Prize Courts should be carefully watched, and any decision apparently contrary to international law noted.

We have considered the Memoranda of Mr. Oakes, as to differences between British jurisdiction in Turkey and Japan, and do not think that they materially affect the position.

Gentlemen,

Detention of "Tatsuta" at Aden.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Earl of Kimberley, the accompanying further papers respecting the Japanese vessel "Tatsuta," whose detention at Aden formed the subject of your Report of the 29th ultimo.

1894

You will observe that on the 29th ultimo the Japanese Minister asked for information respecting the detention of the vessel in question, and inquired whether the authorities of Aden would be instructed to take charge of the vessel provisionally until the Japanese Government could relieve them of their responsibility in the matter.

Viscount Aoki has been informed that the "Tatsuta" arrived at Aden on the 25th ultimo, that the crew were warned of the issue of the Queen's Proclamation of Neutrality, and that upon receiving the notification half of the crew refused to proceed and left the vessel. He has also been informed that the "Tatsuta" is detained in charge of the Senior Naval Officer at Aden, and that no recruitment or enlistment of men for service on board of her can be permitted.

I am to inclose a letter from the India Office, transmitting a copy of telegraphic correspondence with the Resident at Aden. In his telegram of the 31st ultimo the Resident reports the circumstances under which he decided to detain the vessel, and he states that she is still in charge of a guard placed on board of her, on the 27th ultimo, by the advice of the naval authorities. He also explains the reason why this course was considered imperative.

The Resident further reports that the master of the "Tatsuta" has recently admitted that, notwithstanding his statement that he could not put to sea without his full crew, it was his intention to have slipped out during the night with what crew remained, on the chance of filling up elsewhere.

You are aware, from telegrams addressed by the Resident at Aden to the India Office, which are returned herewith, that the vessel is found not to be regularly commissioned in the service of the Japanese Government, but that the master was only provided with sailing directions from the Japanese Minister in this country.

I am to request that you will take the inclosed papers into your consideration, and that you will favour Lord Kimberley, at your earliest convenience, with your opinion whether, under present circumstances, any further instructions in the matter should be sent to the Resident in view especially of a possible claim from the Japanese Government, or the Captain of a Japanese vessel of war, to take possession of her.

Your previous Reports, and the papers which accompany them, are returned herewith.

I have, &c.

Report.

In our opinion, as it is now ascertained that the "Tatsuta" was not a commissioned ship when she arrived at Aden, the Resident has acted rightly in preventing her from putting to sea, and that the English sailing master and crew would be guilty of an offence under "The Foreign Enlistment Act, 1870," if they attempted to dispatch the vessel on her voyage without licence.

Whether Her Majesty's licence should be granted or refused depends upon questions of policy rather than of ascertained law. The weight of authority is in favour of the view that notwithstanding the rules laid down in the Treaty of Washington, and the stringent provisions of "The Foreign Enlistment Act, 1870," the obligations of Great Britain as a neutral Power are not enlarged (in the absence of Treaty) beyond what was required by previously ascertained international law. And we are of opinion that under previously ascertained international law the vessel might now be given up, without breach of neutrality, to a Japanese minimum navigating crew, if security be taken against her being manned up to a fighting standard in the neighbourhood of the port of dispatch, and any supply of coal at Aden limited to a reasonable liberal allowance, not exceeding her requirements for a voyage to her next port of destination.

The important question is, whether Her Majesty's Government intend to maintain in future with reference to nations other than the United States the rules of international law as they exist independently of the Washington Treaty, or by their practice to further the introduction into general use of the rules of that Treaty.

Regard must be had on the one hand to the engagement entered into with the United States as to recommending the rules to the other maritime nations; and, on the other hand, to the fact that no common understanding has yet been arrived at between the two nations as to the meaning of the rules, and no recommendation of the kind suggested has been made. Although we do not think that other nations have a right to call for the enforcement of the rules, it cannot, with confidence, be predicted whether, in the event of a reference to arbitration, the Tribunal might not decide that the Washington rules are applicable, or whether, in case of such a decision, the Tribunal might not further decide that permission to the "Tatsuta" to leave Aden would constitute a breach of them.

We see no reason why, at the request of the Japanese Ambassador, possession should not be taken of the vessel, but it should be made clear that such taking of possession does not imply any engagement to give her up when required, unless that course is deliberately decided upon.

Gentlemen,
Foreign Office, September 14, 1894.

WITH reference to the letter from this Department of the 1st instant, I have the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Earl of Kimberley, the accompanying letter from the India Office, inclosing a copy of a Report by Her Majesty's Political Resident at Aden relative to the detention of the Japanese vessel "Tatsuta."*

The Resident gives full particulars of the action taken by him in regard to the "Tatsuta" down to the 29th August, but his Report contains no information of importance not already communicated to you.

I am to request that, when you favour Lord Kimberley with your opinion upon the points submitted to you in the letter from this Office of the 1st instant, you will, at the same time, inform his Lordship whether you concur in the proposal of the Secretary of State for India to approve the Resident's proceedings in the matter.

Memorandum by the Lord Chancellor.

Detention of "Tatsuta" at Aden; delivery of to Japanese authorities.

I DO not think it would be a breach of the Foreign Enlistment Act or of any international duty if the "Tatsuta" were allowed to leave Aden during the existing war. She had, as I understand, become the property of the Japanese Government, and had left the United Kingdom before a state of war was recognized, in charge of a British master and crew, who were engaged to navigate her to Japan. In the course of her voyage she puts in to a British port. I do not feel altogether satisfied that the crew would have violated the injunctions of the Proclamation of Neutrality, or committed an offence under the Foreign Enlistment Act if they had prosecuted the voyage. They do not appear to me to have accepted an engagement in the naval service of Japan, because they were engaged to navigate to a Japanese port a vessel intended to be commissioned as a ship of war. Supposing no war to have existed, could it be said that such a contract on their part was an engagement in the naval service of Japan? If not, the breaking out of hostilities whilst they were fulfilling their contract could, of course, not alter its character. Nor do I think the prosecution of the voyage would have brought them within the provisions of section 8, sub-section (4). If I turn to the Rules agreed upon for the occasion under the Treaty of Washington, I do not see that the prosecution of the voyage or the absence of any steps to prevent its prosecution would have involved a violation of those broader international obligations. The case is clearly not within the first part of the first Rule. It is to be observed that the second part of it is confined to vessels specially adapted within the jurisdiction to warlike use. This cannot, I think, apply to a case like the present, where the vessel has lawfully departed from the jurisdiction within which she has been equipped before hostilities break out. Otherwise, it would be necessary to inquire into the history of ships entering British ports during a time of war, and to prevent the departure of any belonging to either belligerent which happened to have been built, however long ago, in this country. This never can have been intended. Then, would the case have come within the second Rule as a use of the British port for the recruitment of men? Clearly not, if the crew originally engaged had continued to prosecute the voyage. It does not seem certain that if fresh members of the crew had been engaged at Aden merely for the purpose of navigating the vessel to Japan any offence would have been committed. I find it laid down in Mr. Hall's work on "International Law," p. 601 (third edition), that a belligerent ship entering a neutral port with a crew reduced, from whatever cause, to a number less than that necessary to her safe navigation, may take on board a sufficient number of men to enable her to reach a port of her own country. He gives no authority for this proposition, but treats it as established. I have not the opportunity at present of consulting any other authorities on international law, but I have generally found Mr. Hall an accurate exponent of it. If the proposition enunciated be correct, the present is an à fortiori case, and I do not think the hiring of seamen merely for the purpose of conveying an uncommissioned vessel to its port of destination could be properly regarded as a "recruitment of men" within the meaning of the second of the Washington Rules.

It follows from what I have said that I think the vessel may properly be given up to any person authorized by the Government of Japan to take charge of her for the purpose of conveying her to a Japanese port; but though I doubt whether it would constitute a breach of international duty to permit the engagement of the crew requisite for the purpose in the British dominions, it would certainly be better to avoid doing this.

As I am writing without the opportunity of a full consultation of the authorities, I would suggest that this Memorandum should be laid before the Law Officers before action is taken.

Gentlemen,

Detention of "Tatsuta" at Aden. Memorandum of Lord Chancellor.

WITH reference to your Reports of the 21st, 22nd, 28th, and 29th ultimo and 17th and 20th instant, I have the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Earl of Kimberley, for your consideration, a Memorandum by the Lord Chancellor on the case of the cruizer "Tatsuta," now under detention at Aden.

The Memorandum, which is dated the 22nd September, is given at p. 7 of the inclosed print, which also contains your several Reports on the case.

I also inclose (B) the three Rules of the Treaty of Washington of the 8th May, 1871; (C) "The Foreign Enlistment Act, 1870;" (D) the Queen's Proclamation of Neutrality of the 7th August, 1894.

I have, &c.
(Signed) FRANCIS BERTIE.

Report.

We have read and considered the Lord Chancellor's Memorandum of the 22nd September, and, so far as it deals with matters of international law, we concur therein, though we thought it right, in view of opinions expressed by recent writers, to point out in our Report of the 17th September that it cannot with confidence be predicted what view would be taken by a Tribunal of Arbitration in case such a Tribunal had to deal with the question.

The question of municipal law depends entirely on the construction of the Act of 1870.

The Proclamation of Neutrality seems to divide all ships into two classes, ships of war and merchant-vessels. The "Tatsuta" must be a ship of war as opposed to a merchant-vessel.

The Act of 1870 (having regard to section 32) extends, in our opinion, to all ships except commissioned ships, and the definition of "naval service" contained in section 30 might, we think, bring within the terms of the Act the employment of sailors to navigate a ship of war from port to port, though she may not be in course of use for any naval operation. However this may be, section 8 (4) of the Act makes it a separate offence to dispatch a ship from any part of Her Majesty's dominions with knowledge that she is to be employed in the naval service of a foreign State at war with any friendly State. This would, in our opinion, apply to any ship, whether built before the outbreak of war or not, provided only that she had not a commission. Any case of hardship arising from this construction could be met by the grant of a licence.

On the whole, we venture to adhere to our opinion, already expressed, that to dispatch the ship without licence would be an offence against the Act of 1870.

We do not understand this opinion to be altogether opposed to the Memorandum of the Lord Chancellor, as, if the ship were by licence allowed to proceed to sea, no offence against the Act would be committed.

Gentlemen,

Claim for compensation owing to sinking of the "Kow-Shing."

WITH reference to your Reports of the 2nd and 3rd ultimo, I have the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Earl of Kimberley, the papers noted in the accompanying list, which relate to the sinking of the British steamer "Kow-Shing" by the Japanese man-of-war "Naniwa."

The depositions, sworn before Her Majesty's Consul at Nagasaki, of Captain Galsworthy, the master of the "Kow-Shing" (Inclosure No. 3 in Paper A), and of Mr. Tamplin, the chief officer (Inclosure 4 in Paper A); their statements made on board the "Naniwa" (Inclosure 5 in Paper A); the statement made before Her Majesty's Vice-Consul at Chemulpo of Captain von Hanneken, a German officer who was on board the vessel (Inclosure 2 in Paper G); the statement made by the Quartermaster, Pedro Realte, a Manilaman, before Her Majesty's Consul at Chefoo (Inclosure 4 in Paper G); and the Report of the proceedings before the Naval Court held at Nagasaki (Paper B), give particulars with regard to the destruction of the ship, and the communications which passed between her and the "Naniwa" before the latter opened fire.

The "Kow-Shing" was a British-registered ship, the property of the Indo-China Steam Navigation Company, and had been chartered by the Chinese Government to convey troops to Corea. She left Taku on the 23rd July, some time before the date (1st August) on which the Japanese Government notified that a state of war existed between China and Japan (Paper E).

Upon the 25th July, while on her way to Asan, in Corea, with Chinese troops, she was stopped and boarded by the Japanese vessel of war "Naniwa." Her papers having been examined, and the purpose of her voyage ascertained, she was ordered to follow the "Naniwa." The captain expressed his readiness to obey this order in presence of superior force; but the General commanding the Chinese troops on board refused to consent, or to permit the Europeans to leave the vessel. This position of affairs was communicated to the "Naniwa," and another boat was sent, but the officer, to whom explanations were given, did not board again owing to the threatening attitude of the Chinese. Signals were subsequently exchanged between the vessels, in the last of which the "Naniwa," though ordering the Europeans to quit, declined to send a boat for them, and shortly afterwards fired a torpedo and broadside into the "Kow-Shing," which sank almost immediately.

The Japanese official account given by the Minister for Foreign Affairs to Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Tôkiô (Inclosure in Paper D) states that the "Kow-Shing" was under convoy by the Chinese ship of war the "Tsao Kiang," and that while the "Naniwa" and the "Kow-Shing" were exchanging signals a Chinese vessel, the "Tsing Yuen," came up, and at short range discharged a torpedo at her, and that an engagement took place.

These statements are not borne out by the evidence of Captain Galsworthy and the other survivors.

On the receipt of your Reports of the 2nd and 3rd ultimo, a communication was addressed to the Japanese Minister (Paper E), stating that Her Majesty's Government had come to the conclusion that they must hold the Government of Japan responsible for any loss of British life and property resulting from the proceedings of the Japanese naval officers concerned.

Viscount Aoki, in reply (Paper F), formally declared that his Government had instructed him to give the assurance of their sincere desire to make every reparation in their power if the action of the Japanese naval officers were proved to have been in default.

The Indo-China Steam Navigation Company, in a letter dated the 19th instant (Paper G), say that they are in possession of sufficient data to formulate an approximate statement of their claim, and they put the amount at 80,000*l.*: 60,000*l.* for the loss of the steamer and loss of profit on her charter, the coals and stores on board being included, and 20,000*l.* as compensation for the surviving officers and members of the crew and for the families of those lost.

The charter-party of the vessel, as will be seen from the copy forwarded by Her Majesty's Minister at Peking (Inclosure 4 in Paper H), was signed on the 17th July. It provides that, in the event of hostilities breaking out between China and Japan, it was to be clearly understood and agreed that the ship should at once be dispatched to Shanghae, where the charter should terminate, subject to the condition that the charterer should have the alternative of purchasing outright the "Kow-Shing" for 190,000 dollars, Mexican, net, payable at Tien-tsin or Shanghae, a sum equivalent to about 19,000*l.*

I am to request that you will take these papers into your consideration, and that you will favour Lord Kimberley with your opinion as to whether the evidence now submitted leads you in any way to modify the view previously expressed by you that Her Majesty's Government are entitled under the circumstances of the case to claim full redress for the sinking of the British transport, and for any loss of life or property occasioned to British subjects, and, if not, whether, before making a formal demand, Her Majesty's Government should communicate the information in their possession to the Japanese Government, so as to give them an opportunity of showing mitigating circumstances.

Your Reports of the 2nd and 3rd ultimo, together with the papers previously submitted to you, are inclosed for convenience of reference.

I have, &c.
(Signed) FRANCIS BERTIE.

P.S.—I am also to transmit to you a Report of the proceedings of a Court of Inquiry held at Tien-tsin (Inclosure 2 in Paper I), and also a despatch (Paper K) from Mr. Wilkinson, Vice-Consul at Chemulpo, just received through the Board of Trade, summarizing the statement made before Her Majesty's Consul at Nagasaki.

We have perused and considered all the papers submitted to us, and are still of opinion that Her Majesty's Government may properly press the Japanese Government for redress in respect of the loss and damage occasioned by the sinking of the "Kow-Shing."

[Sir J. Rigby having in the meantime ceased to be Attorney-General by his acceptance of judicial office as Lord Justice of Appeal, the papers were resubmitted to Sir R. T. Reid, who had succeeded Sir J. Rigby as Attorney-General, and to Sir F. Lockwood, who had succeeded Sir R. T. Reid as Solicitor-General.]

In our opinion, so far as China is concerned, the facts disclose a liability on the part of China to make good the losses caused to British subjects and property by the destruction of the "Kow-Shing."

The Chinese troops took possession of the ship, and whether Japan is liable or not, the Chinese were partakers in causing the disaster, and we see no difficulty in saying that two nations might be liable in international law for the same injury, just as two individuals might be liable in municipal law.

Upon the question whether Japan is, in fact, liable to pay compensation, we are not able to arrive at a joint conclusion.

The Attorney-General regards the case as one in which, owing to the absence of any notification of war, a neutral vessel engaged on a lawful voyage had suddenly imposed upon her the duties of neutrality, which she could neither discharge nor avoid, and without any actual fault of her own was placed in a position where destruction was inevitable, and so was destroyed by a Japanese war-ship.

Granting that there was a paramount military necessity justifying the destruction of the vessel, the Attorney-General is unable to alter his former opinion that a right to compensation follows. But the case is a novel one, and from its novelty, as well as the diversity of opinion in regard to it, it obviously cannot be regarded as a clear case.

The Solicitor-General has come to the conclusion that the Japanese were entitled to act as they did. In his opinion, the "Kow-Shing," at the time she was fired upon by the Japanese man-of-war, had become in fact a Chinese transport. This condition of things arose from the European officers having lost all control over the ship, such control having passed into the hands of the Chinese officers. Having thus lost dominion over the ship, the officers of the ship were unable to avail themselves of the notice which was given; indeed they were forcibly prevented by the Chinese officials from so doing.

If it be material to ask who is to blame for this situation, it appears to the Solicitor-General that the only answer is: Those who entered into the charter to carry troops on the eve of the outbreak of a war to what was known would be the seat of war. A moment's reflection would surely have made it clear that, in the probable event of hostilities commencing during the voyage, the European officers would find themselves powerless to do otherwise than submit to the superior numbers which had been shipped on board the "Kow-Shing."

His Lordship would be glad to be favoured, at the same time, with any observations which you may be good enough to offer on the Memorandum prepared by Her Majesty's Acting Judge for Japan, which forms an inclosure in Mr. Trench's despatch.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Earl of Kimberley, the accompanying copy of a note from the Japanese Chargé d'Affaires, renewing the application of the Japanese Government for the release of the "Tatsuta," now under detention at Aden, and stating that the Japanese Government are prepared to send a Japanese officer and crew to take charge of her at that port.

I am to request that you will be good enough to favour his Lordship at your earliest convenience with any observations which you may have to offer on the various points raised in Mr. Uchida's note, and especially as to how far, if at all, the conclusions which you have previously expressed with reference to the case are modified by the considerations now put forward by the Japanese Chargé d'Affaires.

Mr. Bertie presents his compliments to the Law Officers of the Crown, and has the honour, by direction of the Earl of Kimberley, to transmit to them herewith, for their consideration in connection with the papers now before them, a draft of the reply which it is proposed to return to the note of the 11th instant from the Japanese Chargé d'Affaires relative to the case of the "Tatsuta."

Foreign Office, October 20, 1894.

Report.

The observations contained in the letter of the Japanese Chargé d'Affaires, dated the 11th October, do not in any way alter or affect the opinion we have formerly expressed.

We do not consider that the duties of Great Britain, as a neutral Power, arise from, or can be dated from, the issue of the Royal Proclamation. They arise from the usage of nations on the occurrence of war; and likewise the right of Great Britain to take necessary steps for the protection of her neutrality arises as soon as a state of war exists.

We also consider that the stringent provisions of "The Foreign Enlistment Act, 1870," are not the measure of British obligations to belligerent Powers. They go up to and beyond the international obligations of neutrals, and, so far as they exceed those obligations, are intended to arm the Executive with authority wide enough to cover any unforeseen emergency, or even any case of policy.

We are of opinion that the letter proposed to be sent by your Lordship (draft of which is herewith inclosed) may properly be sent, if your Lordship thinks fit, with the following qualification. We think it is advisable that the "Tatsuta" should not be allowed to quit Aden in a condition to commence hostilities, but that she proceed (as she would have if not detained) in charge of a minimum navigating crew—with an undertaking not to engage in hostilities, unless attacked, until after her arrival in some Japanese port. This precaution is suggested in view of the duty of neutrals not to permit armed expeditions to quit their territory, and the construction placed by writers of authority upon this obligation.

Sir, Foreign Office, October 31, 1894.

HER Majesty's Government have given their careful consideration to the views of the Japanese Government respecting the detention of the Japanese vessel "Tatsuta" at Aden, as expressed in your note of the 11th instant. They are of opinion that it would serve no useful purpose to continue the discussion of the complicated questions of law which have arisen in connection with this case, owing particularly to the master in charge of the vessel and the whole of the crew being British subjects, and there being no Japanese officer in command of her.

In view of the statement contained in your note, that the Japanese Government are prepared to send at once a duly commissioned Japanese officer and a sufficient Japanese crew to take charge of the "Tatsuta" on her voyage to Japan, Her Majesty's Government are ready to issue instructions to their officers at Aden for the delivery of the vessel to the authorized Agent of the Japanese Government upon his arrival at that port.

Her Majesty's Government presume that the "Tatsuta" will not be used for hostile operations until after she has been navigated to a Japanese port.

Draft Order in Council.

WHEREAS by the Extradition Acts, 1870 and 1873, it was amongst other things enacted that, where an arrangement has been made with any foreign State with respect to the surrender to such State of any fugitive criminals, Her Majesty may, by Order in Council, direct that the said Acts shall apply in the case of such foreign State; and that Her Majesty may, by the same or any subsequent Order, limit the operation of the Order, and restrict the same to fugitive criminals who are in or suspected of being in the part of Her Majesty's dominions specified in the Order, and render the operation thereof subject to such conditions, exceptions, and qualifications as may be deemed expedient; and that if, by any law made after the passing of the Act of 1870 by the Legislature of any British possession, provision is made for carrying into effect within such possession the surrender of fugitive criminals who are in or suspected of being in such British possession, Her Majesty may, by the Order in Council applying the said Acts in the case of any foreign State, or by any subsequent Order, suspend the operation within any such British possession of the said Acts, or of any part thereof, so far as it relates to such foreign State, and so long as such Law continues in force there, and no longer:

And whereas by an Act of the Parliament of Canada passed in 1886, and entitled "An Act respecting the Extradition of Fugitive Criminals," provision is made for carrying into effect within the Dominion the surrender of fugitive criminals:

And whereas by an Order of Her Majesty the Queen in Council, dated the 17th day of November, 1888, it was directed that the operation of the Extradition Acts, 1870 and 1873, should be suspended within the Dominion of Canada so long as the provisions of the said Act of the Parliament of Canada of 1886 should continue in force, and no longer:

And whereas a Treaty was concluded on the 16th day of December, 1892, between Her Majesty and the President of the Republic of Liberia, for the mutual extradition of fugitive criminals, which Treaty is in the terms following:—

And whereas the ratifications of the said Treaty were exchanged at London on the 31st day of January, 1894:

Now, therefore, Her Majesty, by and with the advice of her Privy Council, and in virtue of the authority committed to her by the said recited Acts, doth order, and it is hereby ordered, that from and after the * day of , 1894, the said Acts shall apply in the case of Liberia, and of the said Treaty with the Republic of Liberia.

Provided always, and it is hereby further ordered, that the operation of the said Extradition Acts, 1870 and 1873, shall be suspended within the Dominion of Canada so far as relates to Liberia and to the said Treaty, and so long as the provisions of the Canadian Act aforesaid of 1886 continue in force, and no longer.

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, September 8, 1894.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Earl of Kimberley, the papers noted in the accompanying list which relate to the question of the validity of marriages solemnized by clergymen of the Church of England in Madagascar.

Marriages in Madagascar by clergymen of Church of England.

* Date to be inserted by Council Office, and to be a date ten days after publication in "London Gazette."

1894

It will be seen that, in 1876, the Law Officers reported that they had no information as to the law of Madagascar, but they entertained no doubt that a marriage between British subjects celebrated in Madagascar by a clergyman of the Church of England was valid.

L.O.R. 1876 (Conf. 4028), p. 50.

The question has, however, been again raised in a correspondence between Mr. Sauzier, the Acting Consul at Tamatave, and the Bishop of Madagascar, in which the latter contends that the common law as to marriage, as it existed prior to Lord Hardwicke's Act, is unaffected by the recent legislation, so far as marriages in Madagascar are concerned.

In deciding this question, it will have to be considered whether Madagascar is a Christian or non-Christian country.

I am, therefore, to observe that a large portion of the Hovas and other tribes in the central districts of the island have adopted Christianity, which is also acknowledged and protected by the Government, and that there are believed to be about 450,000 Protestants and about 50,000 Roman Catholics, while the remaining three-fifths of the population are Pagans.

It cannot, however, be affirmed that there has been any such progress in the condition of Government and society since 1876 in Madagascar to entitle the country to be regarded as a civilized State. In these circumstances, Lord Kimberley will be obliged if you will take these papers into your consideration, and favour him with your opinion as to whether Madagascar, a quasi-Christian State, should be considered as coming within the category of "Mahommedan, Heathen, or un-civilized States," so far as the validity of marriages by priests in holy orders was concerned, and, if so whether a marriage between British subjects solemnized in Madagascar by a clergyman of the Church of England would be valid in contemplation of English law.

I am also to invite any general observations which you may have to offer on the matter.

I am, &c.

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

SIR PERCY ANDERSON presents his compliments to Her Majesty's Attorney- and Solicitor-General, and, with reference to his letter of the 8th ultimo, transmitting certain papers relative to the question of the validity of marriages solemnized by clergymen of the Church of England in Madagascar, begs, by direction of the Earl of Kimberley, to inclose in connection with this question a further despatch which has lately been received from the Acting Consul at Tamatave,* as well as a Minute by Mr. Davidson, Q.C., the legal adviser to this Office, which it is requested may be considered, together with the papers previously submitted to, and now before them for report.

Foreign Office, October 12, 1894.

Report.

In our opinion, upon the statements made in reference to Madagascar, that country should be considered as coming within the category of Mahommedan, Heathen, or uncivilized States, so far as the validity of marriages by ministers in holy orders is concerned. And that a marriage between British subjects solemnized in Madagascar by a clergyman of the Church of England would be valid in contemplation of English law.

We would, however, add that in all cases where it is at all possible it would be most advisable that, in addition to the religious ceremony, the marriage should be solemnized in the manner provided by "The Foreign Marriage Act, 1892," for the sake of record and of certainty; and also because proof of the validity of any marriage not so solemnized, and of the circumstances of Madagascar justifying the use of the common law religious rite of England, might be required by an English Court, and such evidence might be difficult and expensive to obtain. There is sufficient difference of opinion between jurists of authority upon the subject to make this precaution a point of extreme importance.

MEXICO.

No. 60.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Earl of Kimberley.—(Received April 17.)

Royal Courts of Justice, April 16, 1894.

My Lord,

WE were honoured with the Earl of Rosebery's commands signified in Mr. Bertie's letter of the 9th February last, stating that he was directed to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list, relative to the claims of Messrs. Walter Browning and John Prescott, British subjects, to compensation at the hands of the Government of Mexico on account of imprisonment and detention under the following circumstances, as set forth in Mr. Browning's letter of the 29th July, 1893, and the Memorandum by Sir Spenser St. John (Her Majesty's Minister in Mexico at the time of the occurrences).

Imprisonment of W. Browning and J. Prescott by Mexican Govt. Claims for compensation.

That Messrs. Browning and Prescott were owners of mining interests in the State of Chihuahua, and in discharging some of their mining hands gave them the usual certificates of good conduct, as they wished to proceed in search of work to the State of Sonora.

That, instead of proceeding to Sonora, however, some of them went to the scene of political riots at a distance of some 70 leagues from the mines, and in an entirely different direction from the district whither they had stated their intention to proceed in search of work.

That there one of them was arrested by the Commander of the military force sent to quell the riots, and was found to be in possession of a certificate of discharge of the character above described, which the General chose to regard in the light of a "safe-conduct."

That for that view there appeared to have been no sufficient ground, as the paper merely recommended the workman named in it as "a good worker and an honest man."

That the paper was, moreover, not found in the hands of the miner to whom it was given, but in those of another, who had obtained wrongful possession of it.

That on such evidence Mr. Browning, who had signed the certificate, was arrested on a charge of complicity in the riots, and of affording countenance and protection to the rioters.

That he demurred energetically to that treatment, and was handed over some days later by the military to the civil authorities, by whom he was committed to prison "as an accomplice in the offence of sedition," and detained for a period of forty-five days in all pending a full inquiry into the case.

That Mr. Prescott was also arrested, but, probably owing to his more conciliatory attitude, was released after ten days' detention.

That representations were at the time addressed to the Mexican Government by Sir Spenser St. John, and since by those Diplomatic officers who had succeeded him in charge of Her Majesty's Legation in Mexico, but that the long-promised explanation of the civil authorities had only lately been received.

That from that Report (see Mr. Trench's despatch No. 47 of the 8th December, 1893) it would be seen that on the 3rd July, forty-five days after Browning's arrest, the Judge declared that "there appearing against James Browning no further evidence of connection with the present inquiry than the paper of recommendation written by him, which is not legally a passport, and the data which served as a basis for declaring the said Browning formally imprisoned having disappeared, in accordance with Article 258 of the Penal Code, James Browning is ordered to be placed at liberty, on the understanding that he may be rearrested in case of necessity."

That in forwarding that Report Mr. Trench added that the Minister for Foreign Affairs admitted that "Browning's detention was unwarrantable."

That with respect to Mr. Prescott, as to whose case there would appear to have been no official inquiry, no evidence whatever was adduced, and his apparently arbitrary arrest would seem the more unjustifiable in view of his long distance from the scene of the riots, and the intrinsic improbability of his connection with them.

That the question then arose whether any, and, if so, what amount of compensation might properly be claimed from the Mexican Government by Her Majesty's Government on behalf of Messrs. Browning and Prescott.

That no definite amount of compensation had been claimed by the sufferers; but that they stated that, apart from their illegal detention, they lost by this act of the Mexican Government several thousand dollars' worth of tools, provisions, and rich ore, stolen during their enforced absence from their mines.

That it would be seen from Sir S. St. John's Memorandum of the 8th January that he considered both men fairly entitled to compensation for any losses which they might have incurred through their wrongful arrest, but he thought that the joint claim should not exceed 4,000 Mexican dollars, or 500*l*.

That a Memorandum by the Librarian of the Foreign Office dealing generally with the question, and giving a list of various cases of a similar nature which had formed the subject of Report by the Law Officers of the Crown between the years 1870 and 1886, was also inclosed for our information.

Mr. Bertie further requested that we would take the papers transmitted to us into our consideration, and give our opinion as to whether (1) the case was one in which compensation might properly be demanded by Her Majesty's Government from the Government of the Mexican Republic on behalf of both or either of the claimants, and (2) if our answer to the previous question should be in the affirmative, what amount of compensation might reasonably be demanded in each case.

We have taken the papers into our consideration, and have the honour to

Report—

That, in our opinion, there was no reasonable primâ facie case for the arrest and detention of the claimants, and Her Majesty's Government may fairly press for compensation.

Upon the question of the amount of compensation, we can only say that the sum (500*l*.) named seems to us to be very reasonable.

No. 61.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Earl of Kimberley.—(Received March 28.)

Royal Courts of Justice, March 28, 1894.

My Lord,

Netherlands' India Ordinance respecting pearl fisheries.

WE were honoured with the Earl of Rosebery's commands signified in Sir Edward Grey's letter of the 5th instant, transmitting to us the accompanying printed correspondence* respecting the pearl fisheries in the Netherlands East Indies, and stating that several questions were raised in this correspondence, but that those on which our opinion was now sought arose on the Netherlands India Ordinance No. 261 of the 5th October, 1893.

That Lord Rosebery's attention had been called to this Ordinance by the letter of the 1st ultimo from the Pearling and Trading Company.

That the Company wished his Lordship to protest to the Netherlands Government on the grounds stated in their letter, which amounted practically to the contention (a) that it was against the comity of nations to refuse access to ports for repairs and supplies, and (b) that the terms of the Ordinance amounted to such refusal, because it imposed on vessels found with pearl shells, &c., on board, the onus of proving that such pearl shells, &c., were fished outside territorial waters, and also that the Ordinance conferred the right of search within territorial limits.

That there existed between Great Britain and the Netherlands a Treaty which appeared to bear on this case, the Treaty, namely, of the 17th March, 1824, a copy of which was inclosed in Sir Edward Grey's letter. That Articles I, II, III, and IV of this Treaty granted general freedom of commerce and most-favoured-nation treatment, but that Article VII stated that—

"The Molucca Islands, and especially Amboyna, Banda, Ternate, and their immediate dependencies, are exempted from the operation of the Ist, IInd, IIIrd, and IVth Articles, until the Netherlands Government shall think fit to abandon the monopoly in spices; but if the said Government shall at any time previous to such abandonment of the monopoly allow the subjects of any Power, other than a native Asiatic Power, to carry on any commercial intercourse with the said islands, the subjects of Her Britannic Majesty shall be admitted to such intercourse upon a footing precisely similar."

Sir Edward Grey further stated that it was not known to what extent the monopoly in spices still existed, but that a Proclamation was issued by the Governor-General of Netherlands India on the 8th September, 1853, declaring the ports of Amboyna, Banda, and Ternate to be free ports. But that whether Articles I, II, III, and IV of the Treaty of 1824 were in force or not, its provisions were not referred to in the representations made by the Netherlands Chargé d'Affaires at this Court in regard to the proceedings of the Pearling and Trading Company given at pages 10 and 11 of the printed correspondence, and that such being the case, it would probably be more convenient to consider the terms of the Netherlands Ordinance apart from Treaty stipulations.

Sir Edward Grey therefore requested us to give our opinion as to—

Whether the terms of the Ordinance in question were contrary to the comity of nations, or were reasonably open to objection on the part of Her Majesty's Government on any other, and, if so, what specific grounds.

Sir Edward Grey at the same time requested that we would furnish the Foreign Office with any observations of a more general character which we thought might be of assistance in the conduct of the case.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and have the honour to

Report—

That, in our opinion, the terms of the Ordinance in question are in no way contrary to the comity of nations, nor is there anything in the Ordinance itself reasonably open to objection on the part of Her Majesty's Government.

If, in the enforcement of the Ordinance, any case of unfair or unequal treatment of British subjects should arise, it should be considered with reference to its special circumstances, and dealt with accordingly.

It is to be noted that the Ordinance, by its strict limitation to territorial waters, departs from the broad ground taken by the Resident in his communication of the 22nd March, 1893.

Annex.

Netherlands India Government Ordinance No. 261 of October 5, 1893.

(Translation.)

ARTICLE 1. If any persons not belonging to the indigenous population are found fishing for pearl shells, mother-of-pearl shells, or bêche-de-mer in the territorial waters of Netherlands India without permission from, or in the name of, the Governor-General, the master of the vessel used for the purpose, or his substitute, shall be liable to a fine of 10 fl. to 1,000 fl., or imprisonment from six days to two years in case of Europeans, and to a similar fine or rigorous imprisonment from six days to two years in case of natives and those assimilated with natives.

The implements with which the offence is committed, as well as the shells or bêche-de-mer fished in contravention of the Regulations, may be declared forfeited.

The vessel with which the offence is committed is liable for the fine and costs of proceedings, and the vessel may be seized and sold in case of non-payment.

Art. 2. By the expression "fishing for pearl shells, mother-of-pearl shells, and bêche-de mer" in this Ordinance is meant the obtaining of these articles out of the sea in whichever way or by whatever means or implements.

Art. 3. If a vessel not belonging to and not manned by persons belonging to the indigenous population, and not having the permit referred to in Article 1, be found within the territorial waters of Netherlands India with pearl shells, mother-of-pearl shells, or bêche-de-mer on board, or having on board implements for fishing for these products, the master or his substitute shall be considered as having infringed Article 1 of these Regulations unless he can give proofs to the contrary.

Art. 4. The Commanders of Dutch men-of-war, the masters of vessels of the Dutch colonial marine and of dispatch-boats, and persons acting under their authority, are empowered to detect transgressions of this Ordinance. The persons mentioned in the foregoing paragraphs are authorized, in order to maintain the enactments of this Ordinance, to search vessels the passengers or crew of which are suspected of committing or contemplating actions in contravention of this Ordinance as long as such vessels are within the territorial waters.

The Articles 2, 3, 4, and 5 of Ordinance of the 20th August, 1865 (Government Gazette No. 84) are applicable in connection with such search.

Art. 5. This Ordinance will come into force on the date of insertion in the Government Gazette of Netherlands India.

No. 62.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Earl of Kimberley.—(Received April 5.)

Royal Courts of Justice, April 3, 1894.

My Lord,

Detention of crew of "Costa Rica Packet" at Ternate.

WE were honoured with the Earl of Rosebery's commands signified in Sir H. Percy Anderson's letter of the 9th February last, stating that he was directed to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list respecting the case of the "Costa Rica Packet," in regard to which we reported on the 19th April and the 29th September last.

Claim for compensation.

That Sir H. Percy Anderson was to call our special attention to the Report and evidence communicated by Sir Saul Samuel on the 23rd January last, and in particular to the evidence at pages 23 and 24 respecting the measure of damages.

That Sir H. Percy Anderson was to request that we would take the matter into our consideration, and favour the Secretary of State with our opinion as to whether the further papers which came before us for the first time led us to modify, and, if so to what extent, the opinions expressed in our previous Reports.

We have also the honour to acknowledge the receipt of Mr. Bertie's letter of the 27th ultimo, stating that he was directed to transmit to us a despatch (Sir H. Rumbold's No. 19, Commercial, of the 19th March, 1894) which had recently been received from Her Majesty's Minister at the Hague with reference to Mr. Carpenter's claim.

That the despatch in question contained the answer of the Netherlands Government to a note which was addressed to them, in accordance with the opinion expressed in our Report of the 19th April, 1893.

That a copy of that note was inclosed in Sir H. Rumbold's despatch No. 31, Commercial, of the 20th May, 1893, which would be found among the papers relating to the case transmitted to us in Sir H. Percy Anderson's letter of the 9th February, 1894.

That the question submitted to us in that letter related more particularly to the claims of the owners and crew of the vessel to compensation for the interruption of her voyage, which resulted from the arrest of the master, but that the reply of the Netherlands Government affected those claims equally with that of Mr. Carpenter.

That Mr. Bertie was accordingly to request us to take the further despatch from Sir H. Rumbold into our consideration in connection with the papers previously transmitted to us.

In obedience to the Earl of Rosebery's commands, we have the honour to

Report—

That we have carefully considered the evidence given before the Select Committee of the Legislative Council of New South Wales and the Report of the Committee, and we find nothing which would cause us to depart from the opinions already given by us.

There is nothing to show that the treatment of Mr. Carpenter in this case in any way differed from that which he would have experienced if he had been a Dutch subject.

The Dutch law appears to allow of arrests in cases of plausible suspicion, and preliminary examinations of the accused and of witnesses of the nature which took place in Carpenter's case. There is in this nothing so contrary to the practice of civilized nations as to enable Her Majesty's Government to found thereon a claim for compensation.

The real mischief arose from the distance between the place where the warrant was issued and that at which it was executed.

The Resident at Ternate appears to have had no power, according to Dutch law, either to exercise any discretion as to executing the warrant, or to receive bail for the subsequent appearance of the accused.

It is of the greatest importance that Her Majesty's Government should not put forward any claims for compensation which they would not be prepared to entertain on behalf of foreigners; and, although a similar state of circumstances is not likely to occur in any settled part of Her Majesty's dominions, it is by no means unlikely that great inconvenience and loss may be suffered by the execution of process of law against foreigners, not rightfully accused, in places remote from the seat of any fixed Tribunal, and it would be dangerous to admit the principle that for such loss Her Majesty's Government should be held responsible.

Indeed, the difficulty of enunciating any principle upon which a claim for compensation for loss arising out of the application of the municipal law is so great, that it was only on the consideration of the very great carelessness in issuing the warrant against Carpenter, shown by an examination of the evidence on which it was issued, that we were able, not without hesitation, to advise that his claim to compensation for a reasonable amount should be pressed.

We cannot, on consideration of the evidence before the Committee, arrive at the conclusion that the Dutch authorities at Macassar are chargeable with anything more than the great carelessness above referred to; and, although we adhere in this particular case to the advice already given as to Carpenter's claim, we wish it to be clearly understood that we do not found that advice on any supposed right of Her Majesty's Government to question, in the case of British subjects, the sufficiency or expediency of the system of criminal law adopted by a friendly nation for the governance, within its dominions, of all persons alike.

As to the question of damages, we see no reason to depart from our previous opinion.

If the arrest of Carpenter had, in our opinion, borne the character, which some of the witnesses before the Committee appear to attribute to it, of a merely wanton attack upon a person entitled to British protection—amounting to a deliberate insult to the British flag—we certainly should not be disposed to limit, by any legal reasoning, the claim for damages. But, inasmuch as, in our view of the evidence, such an outrage is excluded, we must have regard to the ordinary legal and equitable doctrine, that only the direct consequences of a wrong-doing can be visited upon the offender. In this connection we may point out that, according to the evidence, the protest made at Ternate could be of no avail, as the Resident there had no authority to give effect to it.

On the whole, therefore, we must adhere to our opinion already given, that the alleged consequential losses arising from Carpenter's arrest are too remote, and cannot properly be claimed in the circumstances of this case.

We have also perused and considered the answer of the Netherlands Government to the claim put forward on behalf of Carpenter.

The grounds on which we recommended the claim to be put forward do not appear to us to be met.

If there had been reasonable, or even plausible, evidence of the offence charged, i.e., the taking of the cargo of the prow within 3 miles from the Island of Boeroe, the arguments put forward on behalf of the Netherlands Government would have had great weight. So far, however, as we can see, there was no allegation on the part of any witness that the prow was within the 3-mile limit when the cargo was taken, and, indeed, it must have been known from Palmer's evidence—uncontradicted, though not taken on oath—that the distance from land must have been much greater than 3 miles.

In the state of facts, we cannot consider the step of taking Carpenter from his ship a distance of 1,000 miles to have been warranted on any view, either of Dutch or of international law.

We have, &c.

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, July 23, 1894.

"Costa Rica Packet" case. Terms on which arbitration could be agreed to.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Earl of Kimberley, to transmit to you the accompanying despatches from Sir Horace Rumbold, Her Majesty's Minister at the Hague, respecting the case of the "Costa Rica Packet," which formed the subject of Reports from the then Law Officers of the Crown on the 3rd April last, as well as on the 19th April and 29th September, 1893. Printed copies of these are inclosed for convenience of reference.

I am also to inclose a letter from the Colonial Office, to which Department Sir Horace Rumbold's two last despatches were, in the first instance, referred. With regard to the penultimate paragraph of that letter, Lord Kimberley is of opinion—having regard to the uncompromising attitude assumed by the Netherland Government—that there are no grounds to warrant the belief that any further diplomatic representation, with the view to obtaining the moderate sum asked for by way of compensation to Mr. Carpenter, would be attended with a satisfactory result. It must also be borne in mind that, even were it conceded, such a settlement would fall far short of meeting the views of the Colony of New South Wales as to what, in their judgment, constitutes an adequate compensation for the hardship and loss sustained by the master, the crew, and the owners of the vessel.

In these circumstances, it seems to his Lordship, on grounds of general policy, that the preferable course is to proceed to consider the proposal of the Netherland Government to submit the question to arbitration, and the bases on which that proposal may properly be accepted.

The amount of compensation originally claimed on behalf of all concerned in this matter was 25,000*l.* The way in which that sum was arrived at is set out in the statement of claim on pp. 11 and 12 of the inclosed copy of the "Case of Captain Carpenter."

Acting in conformity with the views expressed in the Law Officers' Report of the 19th April, 1893, Her Majesty's Government waived the question of compensation for the crew and owners of the vessel, and confined themselves to preferring a request for 2,500*l.* for the master alone. The exact text of the note addressed to the Netherland Government on this point will be found in Sir H. Rumbold's despatch No. 31, Commercial, of the 20th May, 1893, inclosed.

The question now arises whether, having regard to what has passed, it would be open to Her Majesty's Government, in accepting arbitration on the case, to state that the larger claim of 25,000*l.* must be submitted for the consideration of the Arbitrator or Arbitral Tribunal.

On the one hand, the Government of New South Wales strongly urge the full claim, and, from their point of view, it would undoubtedly be more satisfactory that it should be taken as a basis for arbitration. But, on the other hand, it seems almost certain from the terms in which arbitration is suggested at the end of M. de Roëll's note to Sir H. Rumbold of the 15th June, that the Netherland Government will not accept that basis without demur. But Her Majesty's Government might, it is thought, reasonably contend that, on the evidence first brought before them, and with the view, if possible, of arriving at a speedy settlement, they had abstained from the putting forward the whole claim, and had only asked for a sum which was so moderate that they apprehended no demur would arise to its being accepted; and the Netherland Government might be informed that as they have refused to settle the question on these terms, and prefer that the case should be submitted to arbitration, the questions to be considered by Arbiters would be whether the contention of the Dutch Government is correct that no compensation at all is due, or whether the payment of the sum originally claimed, or some portion thereof, affords an equitable solution of the controversy.

It should be borne in mind from this point of view that since the date of Sir H. Rumbold's first despatch the Colony has reiterated with much emphasis the arguments in favour of the claim of the owners and crew, and has furnished a large mass of evidence to support those arguments.

At the same time it may be questioned whether, after having once expressly disclaimed the intention of advancing any claim for compensation for the owners and crew of the vessel, Her Majesty's Government would now be justified in putting forward the more extended claim for the consideration of the Arbitral Tribunal, laying themselves open to a charge of inconsistency which would deprive it of much of its moral force.

Lord Kimberley feels also the weight of the observations made in the Law Officers' Report of the 3rd April, 1894, as to the importance of not putting forward claims which Her Majesty's Government would not be prepared themselves to entertain on behalf of foreigners who may suffer inconvenience and loss from the execution of process of law in portions of Her Majesty's dominions remote from the seat of any fixed Tribunal.

Lord Kimberley would accordingly feel obliged if you would favour him with an opinion, at your early convenience: Firstly, whether, in the event of Her Majesty's Government deeming it right to accept the proposal for arbitration, they could properly stipulate that the whole of the original claim shall be submitted for the consideration of the Arbitrators; and, secondly, whether, and in what manner, such a stipulation could be made without exposing Her Majesty's Government to dangerous liability for similar claims in the manner pointed out in the Law Officers' Report above referred to.

It has been suggested that the best method of procedure would be to stipulate that, in the event of the matter being submitted to arbitration, it shall be open to the Government of the Colony to bring before the Tribunal all the facts and arguments which they may think proper subjects for consideration, and that the Arbitrator or Arbitral Tribunal shall be left free to pronounce upon the amount, if any, of compensation due, and the persons entitled to receive it, without any previous restriction.

Lord Kimberley would wish to be favoured with your opinion upon this suggestion, and with any general observations which you may have to offer on the case.

Report.

1. In the event of Her Majesty's Government deeming it right to accept the proposal for arbitration, they would not, as a matter of law, be precluded from stipulating that the whole of the original claim should be submitted for the consideration of the Arbitrators. Whether they should withdraw from the statement already made that they did not intend to press the claims of the owners and crew is a matter of policy. The fact of such a statement having been once made would, however, greatly prejudice the case before any Arbitrators, and might prevent the arbitration from satisfying the colonial feeling, and these considerations should not be lost sight of.

2. The putting forward of the larger claim in any manner would, in our opinion, form a precedent which might expose Her Majesty's Government to the danger of being held liable for similar claims.

The suggestion that, in the event of arbitration, it should be open to the Government of the Colony to bring forward the case of the owners and crew, does not seem to us one that ought to be adopted without careful consideration. Her Majesty's Government cannot avoid the responsibility toward the Dutch Government of deciding what claims ought to be put forward.

Foreign Office, November 5, 1894.

Gentlemen,

Extradition Treaty with Netherlands.

WITH reference to the Report which was furnished to the Earl of Rosebery by your predecessors on the 16th March, 1893 (see Paper A, pp. 21-23), I have now the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Earl of Kimberley, the accompanying copy of correspondence in print (Paper A) respecting the proposed new Extradition Treaty between Great Britain and the Netherlands, together with a copy of the draft Treaty (Paper B), containing the amendments agreed upon by the two Governments in the course of the negotiations.

I am to call your special attention to the revised list of extradition crimes given in Article II of the Treaty, and to the new provision contained in the penultimate paragraph of that Article; and I am to say that Lord Kimberley proposes, in order to meet as far as possible the views of the Netherland Government, as expressed in the notes from Baron Gevers (p. 29 of print) and Baron de Goltstein (p. 48), to suggest the addition to the first paragraph of Article II of the words "including such crimes when directed against the Sovereign, his heir, or any other person whomsoever, provided that the crime is not of a political character."

I am to request that you will take the inclosed papers into your consideration, and that you will favour Lord Kimberley with your opinion whether the draft Treaty, as now amended, may properly be submitted to the Netherland Government, and also whether the proposed addition to the first paragraph of Article II should be adopted.

I have, &c.
(Signed) FRANCIS BERTIE.

Report.

In our opinion, the draft Treaty may properly be submitted to the Netherland Government, subject to the following suggestions, which we submit to the consideration of your Lordship:—

It might be advisable to insert in Article II after the words "applied to" (p. 4, line 10) the following sentence, instead of the words suggested in your Lordship's letter:—

"Extradition is to be granted for each and all of the aforesaid crimes as well when they are directed against the Sovereign or his heir as when they are directed against other persons, provided in all cases that the crime is not of a political character."

The choice is really between different methods of drafting.

Article VII. The introduction of the words "during one month" appears to us undesirable. This gives a whole month during which an extradited person must have an opportunity of returning, e.g., from England to Holland. Yet if, after having had a fortnight's opportunity, he were indicted in England for some crime other than the crime for which he was extradited, the indictment might have to proceed, for section 19 of "The Extradition Act, 1870," provides he shall have an opportunity, which means a reasonable opportunity, but does not secure him a month's opportunity. In such a case he might be subject to prosecution contrary to the Treaty.

Article XI. The words "within the term of twenty days" appear to us undesirable. For in England, under "The Extradition Act, 1870," the Magistrate fixes the time for the production of the documents, &c. He might say, for example, that fourteen days were sufficient, or even less, if he thought the demand unjust. It seems to us preferable to say "within the term of twenty days, or such other time as may be fixed in accordance with the law of the country on which the demand is made."

Article XII. In paragraph 4, the words "or some other Minister of the Netherlands" do not correspond with the language of section 15 of the Act of 1870, which says, "some other Minister of State." We think the words "of State" should be inserted.

Article XVIII. Our criticism as to the words "twenty days" in Article XI applies to the "sixty days" in this Article.

The language of the last paragraph might be thought wide enough to extend to the United Kingdom, which is not intended. The words "for the purposes of this Article" might therefore be inserted after "shall."

Trial by martial law of Brit. subjects for insurrection against Nicaraguan Prov. Govt. in Mosquito Reserve. Instructions to Commander of H.M.S. "Mohawk."

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, August 9, 1894.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Bertie's letter of the 6th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us papers relating to the disturbed state of affairs existing in the Mosquito Reservation.

That in March last fresh disturbances arose there owing to the action of Nicaragua which had for some years past been encroaching on the Reserve. That it took the form of persuading some of the discontented Indians to sign a request for the incorporation of the Reserve with Nicaragua. That this afforded a pretext for armed interference, which culminated in the invasion of the Reserve, the ousting of the Mosquito Chief, and the establishment of a Provisional Government under General Lacayos.

That General Lacayos' attempt to administer the Reserve was opposed by the United States' citizens, who formed a considerable section of the trading community, as well as by British subjects established in the Reserve, and by the Mosquito Indians.

That, in the middle of July, the Mosquito Chief was restored to power and the Nicaraguans expelled, but that no particulars had been received as to how this had been effected.

That it was at the same time stated to Her Majesty's Minister accredited to the Government of Nicaragua that an insurrection of British subjects had occurred in the Reserve; that the Nicaraguan Government was determined to act energetically, and that the rebels would be subject to martial law.

That the Nicaraguan Government were then informed through Her Majesty's Minister that Her Majesty's Government would not uphold any proceedings of British subjects contrary to law, but that they must hold the Government of Nicaragua responsible if British subjects suffered any injuries owing to the illegal action of the Nicaraguan authorities.

That it would be seen, from the telegram from the officer commanding Her Majesty's ship "Mohawk" at Bluefields, that the Nicaraguan General Cabezas was at the Bluff, which was in the immediate vicinity of Bluefields, with troops, and that others were advancing from the interior, with the determination to assert the sovereignty of Nicaragua. That he stated that he thought he could prevent resistance on the part of the inhabitants, and he solicited instructions as to whether he should allow General Cabezas to try British subjects by martial law.

That the rights of Her Majesty's Government were, as we were aware, governed by the Treaty of Managua, concluded between this country and Nicaragua in 1860, of which Mr. Bertie inclosed a copy for convenience of reference, and that the position of Her Majesty's Government in regard to that Treaty formed the subject of a Report from our predecessors on the 11th July, 1893.

That Mr. Bertie was to request that we would take the papers into our immediate consideration, and favour your Lordship at our earliest convenience with our opinion as to the instructions which should be sent to the Commander of the "Mohawk" on the point raised by him in his telegram of the 5th instant.

We have considered the matter, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

That, in our opinion, the Commander of the "Mohawk" should be instructed not to interfere in any actual engagement, and to warn British subjects that if they continue fighting they must take the consequences, but that he should protect as far as he can any British subjects from any attempt of the Nicaraguan Commander to enforce against British subjects in his power any executions by way of martial law, that is to say, without regular legal trial by the ordinary Tribunals.

If any British subjects seek to escape from the application of martial law, they should have temporary protection.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Earl of Kimberley.—(Received May 15.)

Right of Persian Bank Mining Rights Corporation to submit claims against Persian Govt. to arbitration.

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, May 11, 1894.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Thomas Sanderson's letter of the 1st instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list relative to the question of the right of the Persian Bank Mining Rights Corporation to submit to arbitration their claims against the Persian Government.

That a Concession was granted by the Shah to Baron de Reuter in February 1889, conferring on him the right to establish a State Bank in Persia.

That Article 10 of the Concession provided for arbitration in case of a difference arising between the Persian Government and the Bank.

That Article 11 granted to the Bank the exclusive right of working certain mines throughout the Empire.

That an Appendix to the Concession was signed on the 27th July, 1889, under Article 9 of which the Bank was precluded from itself carrying out the mining operations mentioned in Article 11, but was empowered "to sell or cede all or any of the privileges, rights, and powers specified in that Article, such cession or sale to take effect in accordance with the terms of the Act of Concession," and subject to the approval of the Imperial Government.

That a Royal Charter of Incorporation was granted by Her Majesty to the Bank in August 1889.

That clause 6 of the Charter gave the Bank the right of promoting Companies for the purpose of carrying into effect Article 11 of the Concession and Article 9 of the Appendix.

That in virtue of the powers thus bestowed, the Bank, under an Agreement dated the 17th April, 1890, sold their mining rights to the Persian Bank Mining Rights Corporation, and that the cession received the sanction of the Persian Government.

That the Corporation desired to refer to arbitration the question whether the Shah and his Government had afforded the necessary protection to enable them to exercise the mining rights ceded to them by the Bank in accordance with the terms of the Act of Concession.

That they contended that they were entitled to the same right of arbitration as that granted to the Bank under Article 10 of the original Concession.

That your Lordship had informed the Corporation that, failing some special provision in the deed of transfer from the Bank to that body, to which the Persian Government had given their consent, it was doubtful whether the Corporation were entitled to claim arbitration under the provisions of the Concession to the Bank.

That the Corporation, however, still maintained their original contention with respect to their right to arbitration under Article 10, and were strenuously pressing Her Majesty's Government to make diplomatic representations to the Government of Persia in support of that view.

That in those circumstances, your Lordship desired to be favoured with our opinion on the legal aspect of the questions involved before making a final communication to the Corporation on the subject.

That in submitting the papers to us, Sir Thomas Sanderson was specially to call our attention to the fact, that Article 10 distinctly specified "differences between the Persian Government and the Bank."

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was to point out that the Agreement of the 17th April, 1890, between the Bank and the Corporation, contained no mention of the assent of the Persian Government to that transaction, and that the letter from the Amin-es-Sultan to the Bank of the 5th January, 1890, whilst mentioning Articles 11, 12, and 13 of the Concession, made no allusion to Article 10, which contained the arbitration clause.

That the fact that certain Articles were specifically referred to, while others were ignored, together with the fact that the Persian Government were informed merely that the Bank proposed to transfer its "droits miniers," made your Lordship hesitate to adopt the contention advanced on behalf of the Corporation.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion (1) as to whether Her Majesty's Government would be legally justified in giving their support to the claim to arbitration put forward by the Corporation; and (2) generally upon the case.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

That, in our opinion, Her Majesty's Government would not be legally justified in giving their support to the claim for arbitration put forward by the Corporation.

My Lord,

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Thomas Sanderson's letter of the 21st December last, stating that he was directed to transmit to us the draft of an Order in Council, applying the Extradition Acts 1870 and 1873, in the case of a Treaty and Protocol between Great Britain and Portugal, signed at Lisbon the 17th October, 1892, and the 30th November, 1892, respectively. Extradition Treaty with Portugal. Draft O. in C.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was to inclose letters from the Home, Colonial, and India Offices, showing that the terms of the draft Order in Council were concurred in by those Departments, and he was to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion whether the draft Order in its present shape might properly be laid before the Queen in Council for Her Majesty's approval.

That Sir Thomas Sanderson was to add that the draft Treaty between Great Britain and Portugal was transmitted to our predecessors for their consideration on the 25th November, 1891; and that he was to inclose the separate Reports made by them to the Marquis of Salisbury on the 21st January, 1892. L. O. R., 1892 (Conf. No. 6347, p. 53).

In obedience to your Lordship's commands, we have the honour to

WHEREAS by the Extradition Acts, 1870 and 1873, it was amongst other things enacted that, where an arrangement has been made with any foreign State with respect to the surrender to such State of any fugitive criminals, Her Majesty may, by Order in Council, direct that the said Acts shall apply in the case of such foreign State; and that Her Majesty may, by the same or any subsequent Order, limit the operation of the Order, and restrict the same to fugitive criminals who are in or suspected of being in the part of Her Majesty's dominions specified in the Order, and render the operation thereof subject to such conditions, exceptions, and qualifications as may be deemed expedient; and that if, by any law made after the passing of the Act of 1870 by the Legislature of any British possession, provision is made for carrying into effect within such possession the surrender of fugitive criminals who are in or suspected of being in such British possession, Her Majesty may, by the Order in Council applying the said Acts in the case of any foreign State, or by any subsequent Order, suspend the operation within any such British possession of the said Acts, or of any part thereof, so far as it relates to such foreign State, and so long as such law continues in force there, and no longer:

And whereas by an Act of the Parliament of Canada passed in 1886, and entitled "An Act respecting the Extradition of Fugitive Criminals," provision is made for carrying into effect within the Dominion the surrender of fugitive criminals:

And whereas by an Order of Her Majesty the Queen in Council, dated the 17th day of November, 1888, it was directed that the operation of the Extradition Acts, 1870 and 1873, should be suspended within the Dominion of Canada so long as the provision of the said Act of the Parliament of Canada of 1886 should continue in force, and no longer:

And whereas a Treaty was concluded on the 17th day of October, 1892, between Her Majesty and His Majesty the King of Portugal, for the mutual extradition of fugitive criminals, which Treaty is in the terms following:—

[The Treaty follows.]

And whereas the ratifications of the said Treaty and Protocol were exchanged at Lisbon on the 13th day of November, 1893:

Now, therefore, Her Majesty, by and with the advice of her Privy Council, and in virtue of the authority committed to her by the said recited Acts, doth order, and it is hereby ordered, that from and after the * day of , 18 , the said Acts shall apply in the case of Portugal, and of the said Treaty and Protocol with His Majesty the King of Portugal.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Earl of Kimberley.—(Received March 9.)

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, March 8, 1894.

Trans-African telegraph. British right to construct under Anglo-Portuguese Convention of 11th June, 1891.

WE were honoured with the Earl of Rosebery's commands signified in Sir Philip Currie's letter of the 11th December last, stating that he was directed to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list relative to a question which had arisen as to the interpretation of certain words in the Anglo-Portuguese Convention which was signed at Lisbon on the 11th June, 1891.

That the object of that Convention was to define the territories in East Africa within the dominion of Portugal, and the spheres of influence of that Power and of Great Britain, respectively, north and south of the Zambesi, and to make arrangements which would be mutually advantageous in respect to the territories under the influence of the two countries.

That one of the effects of the Convention was, to leave under the influence of Portugal a strip of territory between the north-eastern boundary of the British sphere south of the Zambesi, and the south-western boundary of that sphere north of the Zambesi.

That Article XI of the Convention was drawn up with the view of securing freedom of passage across the Zambesi, and the districts adjoining the right and left banks of that river mentioned in Article IV of that Convention, for each Power to its sphere lying north or south of that river.

That in the 5th paragraph of Article XI it was stated that "it is further understood that, in the above-named districts, each Power shall have the right, so far as may be reasonably required for the purpose of communication between territories under the influence of the same Power, to construct roads, railways, bridges, and telegraph lines across the district reserved to the other. The two Powers shall have the right of acquiring in these districts, on reasonable conditions, the land necessary for such objects, and shall receive all other requisite facilities."

By the 7th paragraph of the same Article: "Differences of opinion between the two Governments as to the execution of their respective obligations, incurred in accordance with the provisions of the preceding paragraph, shall be referred to the arbitration of two experts."

That in the month of July last the African Trans-Continental Telegraph Company, a British enterprise, notified to Her Majesty's Government their intention of constructing a telegraph line from the territory of the British South Africa Company south of the Zambesi to the British Central Africa Protectorate, and asked Her Majesty's Government to apply to the Portuguese Government, under Article XI of the Treaty of 1891, for facilities for the execution of that portion of it which was to pass through the Portuguese districts adjoining the Zambesi.

* Date to be inserted by Council Office, and to be a date ten days after publication in "London Gazette."

That the Portuguese Government replied that they had already granted a Concession for the construction of telegraph lines in territories including the districts in question to a Portuguese Company, who were prepared to undertake the work, and that nothing further could be expected of them. That doubts were, however, entertained in this country as to the financial capacity of the Portuguese Company to carry out the work with the necessary expedition, and that it was, moreover, considered imperative that the frequent confidential communications which would pass between the authorities in the British territories north and south of the Zambesi should pass through a British line.

That the Portuguese Government were again applied to to allow the African Trans-Continental Telegraph Company to construct the line. That they had, however, again refused, and based their refusal on the ground that as the Portuguese Company had declared its ability and readiness to make the line as soon as the terminal points were decided upon, Her Majesty's Government had no claim for further facilities, and that they could not reasonably require more for the purposes of inter-communication between the territories under their influence.

That it would thus be seen that the matter really turned upon what was the proper interpretation of the words in Article XI of the Convention, "as far as may reasonably be required for the purposes of communication between territories under the influence of the same Power," and how far the proposed connection by a Portuguese line could be said to supply the reasonable requirements stipulated for by Her Majesty's Government under that Article.

That our opinion was requested upon that question.

We were also honoured with a letter from Sir H. Percy Anderson, dated the 8th ultimo, inclosing a further communication from the British South Africa Company upon the subject.*

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and have the honour to

Report—

That, in our opinion, the proposed connection by a Portuguese line does not supply the reasonable requirements of Her Majesty's Government under Article XI of the Treaty, but that Her Majesty's Government have a right to require all facilities to be given for the construction of a line under British control and management.

Trans-African telegraph. Reference of obligations under Anglo-Portuguese Treaty of June 11, 1891, to arbitration.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Percy Anderson's letter of the 17th instant, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 8th instant, he was directed to return to us the Treaty with Portugal of the 11th June, 1891, and to ask our opinion in regard to a further point which had arisen in connection with the interpretation of that document.

That the Portuguese Minister had intimated that, in the opinion of his Government, it was agreed, under paragraph 7 of Article XI, that all differences of opinion between the two Governments as to the execution of their respective obligations under the 5th and 6th paragraphs of the Article should be referred to arbitration.

* British South Africa Company, January 29, 1894.

1894

That it appeared to your Lordship to be doubtful whether the words of the 7th paragraph were properly susceptible of so wide an interpretation.

That arbitration was provided for under that paragraph in case of differences of opinion as to the execution of obligations incurred in accordance with the provisions of the preceding paragraph.

That the immediately preceding paragraph was short and unimportant.

That the original Treaty had been examined, and it was found that whereas in the English text, in which the draft was drawn up and initialled by the negotiators, the 5th and 6th paragraphs were divided as in the print, in the Portuguese text they were united.

That your Lordship did not, however, propose to base an argument on that point, as it seemed clear that the object of the negotiators was to apply arbitration to the two paragraphs which, in the English version, had been accidentally divided.

But that the wording of the 7th paragraph appeared to lead to the inference that it was inserted not as a general arbitration clause, but as explanatory of the "arbitration hereinafter mentioned" to be resorted to in case of differences of opinion respecting railway regulations and laws.

That if that interpretation were correct, there was no provision for arbitration in regard to differences of opinion respecting telegraphic communication.

That there was, however, in Article XV, a special reference to arbitration in the latter case. That under it, Great Britain and Portugal engaged to facilitate telegraphic communication in their respective spheres; that in paragraph 4 the two Powers engaged to give every facility for the connection of telegraphic lines constructed in their respective spheres; and that paragraph 5 stated that "details in respect to such connection shall, if not settled by common consent, be referred to the arbitration of experts under the conditions presented in Article XI."

That your Lordship was disposed to consider that that engagement was not applicable to the case under discussion. That Article XI dealt with the contingency of connecting telegraphs in two spheres belonging to one of the Contracting Parties by a line constructed across intervening territory belonging to the other party. That Article XV provided for the connection of telegraph lines constructed in adjoining spheres of the two parties.

That the cases were essentially different, and that, in your Lordship's opinion, the latter Article had no bearing upon the point now under discussion.

That it was, however, quite possible that the Portuguese Government might take another view, and put forward a general claim to arbitration founded on Article XV as well as Article XI.

That Sir Percy Anderson was, therefore, to request that we would further take the provisions of those two Articles into our special consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion on the questions raised in the letter of reference with respect to their interpretation.

We have considered the matter, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

That, in our opinion, paragraph 7 (as to arbitration) of Article XI of the Treaty does apply to differences of opinion between the two Governments as to the execution of their respective obligations under the 5th and 6th paragraphs of the same Article of the Treaty (English version).

In our opinion, neither the provision as to arbitration at the end of paragraph 5 of Article XI, nor that at the end of Article XV, conflicts with this construction. Those provisions do not cover the same ground as paragraph 7 of Article XI.

We therefore think that the contention of the Portuguese Government, as expressed in the 2nd paragraph of the letter of the Secretary of State addressed to us, dated the 17th instant, is right.

Extradition Treaty with Roumania. Draft O. in C. to carry out.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Bertie's letter of the 23rd instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the draft of an Order in Council for the purpose of carrying into effect an Extradition Treaty between Great Britain and Roumania, which was signed at Bucharest on the 21st March, 1893, and of which the ratifications were exchanged on the 13th ultimo.

Mr. Bertie also inclosed letters from the Home, Colonial, and India Offices, stating that the terms of the draft Order in Council were concurred in by those Departments, and he requested that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether it might, in its present form, be laid before the Queen in Council for Her Majesty's approval.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have considered the matter, and have the honour to

Report—

That an Order in Council, in the terms of the draft initialled by us, may, in our opinion, properly be submitted to the Queen in Council for Her Majesty's approval.

DRAFT ORDER IN COUNCIL.

WHEREAS by "The Extradition Acts, 1870 and 1873," it was amongst other things enacted that, where an arrangement has been made with any foreign State with respect to the surrender to such State of any fugitive criminals, Her Majesty may, by Order in Council, direct that the said Acts shall apply in the case of such foreign State; and that Her Majesty may, by the same or any subsequent Order, limit the operation of the Order, and restrict the same to fugitive criminals who are in or suspected of being in the part of Her Majesty's dominions specified in the Order, and render the operation thereof subject to such conditions, exceptions, and qualifications as may be deemed expedient; and that if, by any law made after the passing of the Act of 1870 by the Legislature of any British possession, provision is made for carrying into effect within such possession the surrender of fugitive criminals who are in or suspected of being in such British possession, Her Majesty may, by the Order in Council applying the said Acts in the case of any foreign State, or by any subsequent Order, suspend the operation within any such British possession of the said Acts, or of any part thereof, so far as it relates to such foreign State, and so long as such law continues in force there and no longer:

And wheras by an Act of the Parliament of Canada passed in 1886, and entitled "An Act respecting the Extradition of Fugitive Criminals," provision is made for carrying into effect within the Dominion the surrender of fugitive criminals:

And whereas by an Order of Her Majesty the Queen in Council, dated the 17th day of November, 1888, it was directed that the operation of "The Extradition Acts, 1870 and 1873," should be suspended within the Dominion of Canada so long as the provision of the said Act of the Parliament of Canada of 1886 should continue in force and no longer:

And whereas a Treaty was concluded on the 21st day of March, 1893, between Her Majesty and His Majesty the King of Roumania for the mutual extradition of fugitive criminals, which Treaty is in the terms following:—

[Here follows the Treaty.]

And whereas the ratifications of the said Treaty and Protocol of the 21st day of March, 1893, were exchanged at Bucharest on the 13th day of March, 1894:

Now, therefore, Her Majesty, by and with the advice of her Privy Council, and in virtue of the authority committed to her by the said recited Acts, doth order, and it is hereby ordered, that from and after the * day of , 1894, the said Acts shall apply in the case of Roumania, and of the said Treaty and Protocol of the 21st March, 1893, and of the Protocol of the 13th March, 1894, with the King of Roumania.

Provided always, and it is hereby further ordered, that the operation of the said "Extradition Acts, 1870 and 1873," shall be suspended within the Dominion of Canada so far as relates to Roumania, and to the said Treaty and Protocols, and so long as the provisions of the Canadian Act aforesaid of 1886 continue in force, and no longer.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Earl of Kimberley.—(Received May 3.)

Claim against Russian Govt. for compensation for seizure of sealing-vessel "Arctic."

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, May 1, 1894.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Bertie's letter of the 16th ultimo, stating that he was directed to transmit to us the papers relating to a claim for compensation by Mr. Pyne, the master of the British sealing-schooner "Arctic," against the Russian Government for the alleged unlawful seizure of his vessel off the Commander Islands, in the North Pacific, on the 3rd August, 1893, and the consequent loss inflicted upon him by his being prevented from hunting during the remaining portion of the seal-fishing season, a loss which he estimated at 16,200 dollars.

That the "Arctic" having been sent for trial to Yokohama, under the provisions of the Sealing Agreement with Russia of the 4th July, 1893, proceedings were instituted, on behalf of the Crown, in Her Majesty's Court for Japan, upon the charge of contravening "The Seal Fishery (North Pacific) Act, 1893," and that on the 8th December last Judgment dismissing the case, as well as the counter-claim for damages which had been put forward by the defendant, was pronounced.

That the alleged position of the vessel at the time of seizure inside the prohibited zone round Copper Island was in dispute, and that Her Majesty's Judge, while accepting the position assigned to the "Arctic" by the Russian authorities, absolved the schooner on the ground that no act of hunting or fishing while within that zone was proved against her.

That Mr. de Bunsen expressed some hesitation in forwarding the claim, but, in deference to the opinion of Mr. Mowat, Her Majesty's Judge, and to the precedents quoted by him where somewhat similar claims for loss in respect of "probable prospective catch" had been entertained, and in one instance presented by Her Majesty's Government, he had not felt justified in declining to submit Captain Pyne's claim to the Secretary of State.

Mr. Bertie further stated that he was to request that we would take the papers transmitted to us into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether the case was one in which compensation might properly be demanded by Her Majesty's Government from that of Russia, and, if so, what amount might reasonably be claimed on Mr. Pyne's behalf; or (2) whether Her Majesty's Government should decline to support the claim in any way, even by presenting it to the Russian Government.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands, we have taken the papers into our consideration, and have the honour to

Report—

That the case is not one in which compensation can properly be demanded by Her Majesty's Government from that of Russia, and that Her Majesty's Government should decline to support the claim in any way, even by presenting it to the Russian Government.

It was found as a fact by the Judge of Her Majesty's Court for Japan that the "Arctic" was within the prohibited zone at the time of her arrest, and Mr. Pyne himself, as appears from his letter of the 29th January, 1894, does not dispute this fact. It was also proved that she had seal-skins on board. This being so, there was a primâ facie case against her within section 1, subsection (6) of "The Seal Fishery (North Pacific) Act, 1893," sufficient to justify the action of the Russian officer under that Act, though the evidence given at the trial was sufficient, in the opinion of the Judge, to rebut the presumption.

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, May 17, 1894.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Earl of Kimberley, the papers noted in the accompanying list, which relate to the case of the British auxiliary steam-schooner "Worlock," of Victoria, British Columbia, which was deprived of her papers, gear, &c., by the Russian authorities at Petropaulovsk in September last, and ordered to proceed to Yokohama to be dealt with by Her Majesty's Consul there.

It will be seen from the accompanying despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires in Japan (Mr. de Bunsen's No. 129 of the 2nd December, 1893, Paper A), and from the protocol of inspection drawn up by the Russian authorities at Petropaulovsk, of which copy is therein inclosed, that the "Worlock" left Columbia on the 10th June, 1893, for the purpose, as stated by the master, of sealing along the American coast and in the Pacific Ocean; that, in consequence of a breakage of her engine, she only reached Sand Point on the 28th July, the master having decided to go and seal outside the prohibited zone round the Commander Islands; that, in view of the necessity of further repairs and refitting, he there obtained a trade certificate for taking to Petropaulovsk (which is situated within the prohibited zone hereinafter mentioned, and where the "Worlock" arrived on the 5th September) a cargo which he specified as consisting of eight guns and other gear for sealing and fishing, and salt for the preservation of skins.

In view of the character of the alleged cargo, the Russian authorities held the certificate to be irregular, and obtained merely for the purpose of enabling the vessel to visit those waters, with, as they inferred, the intention of refitting and of subsequently engaging in the otter fishing in the Russian territorial waters on the coasts of Kamschatka and of the Commander Islands.

They therefore seized her papers and gear, but instead of bringing the case before their own Courts for a breach of Russian municipal law, as it was presumably within their competence to do, they proceeded to deal with the case as if it constituted a breach of the then recent Sealing Agreement concluded between Great Britain and Russia of May 1893 (Paper B).

* Date to be inserted by Council Office, and to be a date ten days after publication in "London Gazette."

1894

This Agreement provides for the prohibition of killing, taking, or hunting seals within zones of 10 and 30 miles respectively round portions of the Russian coasts and islands in the North Pacific.

It was enforced, so far as this country is concerned, by an Order in Council of the 4th July, 1893 (Paper C), which applied the provisions of "The Seal Fishery (North Pacific) Act, 1893" (Paper D), within the limits specified in the Agreement.

In obedience to the orders of the Russian authorities, the "Worlock" proceeded to Yokohama under a temporary certificate, and reported herself to Her Majesty's Consul there, to whom her papers, gear, and the protocol of the proceedings at Petropaulovsk were handed by the Russian Consul.

Her Majesty's Consul, after careful consideration in consultation with the Crown Prosecutor, came to the conclusion that, as the protocol disclosed no evidence that the master of the "Worlock" had hunted or attempted to take seals within the limits prescribed in the above-mentioned Agreement, proceedings, if taken in Her Majesty's Court for Japan, would assuredly fail. He did not, therefore, feel justified in submitting the case to the Court, and he accordingly released the vessel, and returned to the master her papers and gear.

The facts of the case have formed the subject of strong comment on the part of the Canadian Government, as will be seen from the Colonial Office letter of the 8th May, 1894 (Paper E).

They maintain that there is no evidence of a breach of the Anglo-Russian Agreement; they point out that the "Worlock" had taken no seals, but openly entered the Russsian port of Petropaulovsk with a clearance, seeking repairs, fuel, and water, in the enjoyment of rights for this object specially reserved under Article VI of the Agreement, and they urge that, in view of the danger to British shipping of such interference on the part of the Russian authorities, a strong representation should be addressed to that Government on the subject.

The question therefore arises whether, in all the circumstances of the case, Her Majesty's Government are justified in making such a representation as that desired by the Dominion Government, or whether they ought to refuse so to do.

Should you be of the former opinion, Lord Kimberley would be glad to be informed upon what specific grounds a representation to the general effect desired might, from a legal point of view, most advantageously be based.

Should you, on the other hand, incline to the latter view, his Lordship would wish to be favoured with your suggestions as to the reasons which might most properly be assigned in support of a refusal to intervene in the matter.

I am to request that you will take the papers transmitted herewith into your consideration, and that you will favour the Earl of Kimberley with your opinion on the questions specially submitted in this letter, as well as with any observations of a more general character which you may be disposed to offer on the case.

I am, &c.

Report.

In our opinion, Her Majesty's Government would not be justified in making such a representation as that desired by the Dominion Government, and that they ought to refuse to do so.

Among the reasons which might properly be assigned in support of the refusal to intervene in the matter, the following appear to us to be the most important:—

Under sub-section 4 of the 1st section of "The Seal Fishery (North Pacific) Act, 1893," a ship, or any portion of her equipment, may be detained if, in the judgment of the naval officer, the ship is preparing to be used in contravention of the Act, and, under sub-section 6 of the same section, the fact of the ship being found having on board fishing and shooting implements within the specified waters is sufficient to constitute a primâ facie case against her. The signed protocol, the accuracy of which is not impeached by the master, contains what appears to us a very suspicious statement of facts on the part of the master, and shows, among other things, that the log-book was not in order, that an unsatisfactory account was given of the two nets, that there was no apparent object of legitimate trading, and that the master himself proposed to go to Yokohama, though his reason for going there appears not to be satisfactory. If, in addition, the statement, in the opinion of the Commission, that it appears from the ship's documents that her coming to Petropaulovsk was already decided upon in Victoria is to be taken as accurate, there would be a further strong reason for suspecting the whole story told by the master. That story is not of such a nature that the Russian authorities were bound to accept it.

We may add, though only as a warning to Her Majesty's Government, that it may be questionable whether the action of Her Majesty's Consul at Yokohama in not bringing the vessel to trial was in strict accordance with clause 3 of M. Chichkine's letter of the 10th May, 1893.

We consider the circumstances of this case so exceptional that the apprehensions of the Canadian Privy Council of danger arising from it to legitimate British enterprise in the Pacific are not well founded.

Marriage of Mr. A. L. Carbonell at Zurich.

My Lord,

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Bertie's letter of the 6th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Berne, requesting to be supplied with certain information required by the authorities at Zurich in connection with the proposed marriage at that place of Arthur L. Carbonell, a British subject, together with a further despatch from Her Majesty's Minister inclosing the documents relating to the case.

That your Lordship proposed to reply to Mr. St. John's inquiries in the terms of the accompanying draft, but that before doing so your Lordship would be glad to have our opinion as to whether they were right and proper under the circumstances, and, if not, in what respects they might advantageously be modified.

Mr. Bertie further requested that we would at the same time favour your Lordship with any general observations which might occur to us in connection with the case upon a consideration of the papers.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands, we have considered the matter, and have the honour to

Sir,

I HAVE had under my consideration your despatch No. 2, Treaty, of the 6th ultimo, requesting to be furnished with certain information required by the authorities at Zurich in connection with the proposed marriage at that place of Arthur L. Carbonell, a British subject.

The Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs possesses no authority to declare the law of England with reference to any particular case. This can only be done by a competent legal Tribunal sitting judicially for its determination. In the present instance, I am advised that, although it appears on the whole probable that an English Court would uphold the validity of the Decree of Divorce should this question come before it for decision, the matter is not one upon which a very confident opinion can reasonably be expressed on the materials and papers which have been submitted to me.

The original papers inclosed in your despatch No. 3, Treaty, of the 20th ultimo are returned herewith Administration of estate of Abdul Messih.

WE were honoured with the Earl of Rosebery's commands signified in Sir Percy Anderson's letter of the 5th instant, transmitting to us a copy of a letter from Messrs. Witham, Lambert, and Roskell,* asking for permission to see the original or a copy of a note addressed by the Ottoman Minister for Foreign Affairs to Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople on the 24th January, 1886; and stating,

That that application was made with reference to the administration of the estate of Anton Youssouf Abdul Messih, an Ottoman subject, and a member of the Chaldean Catholic community, who claimed to be within the Ottoman dominions, a British protected person.

That the case had been from time to time a subject of correspondence with the Foreign Office, chiefly in connection with a claim of the Chaldean Catholic Patriarch to exclusive jurisdiction in regard to the estates of deceased Ottoman subjects (whether British-protected persons or not), belonging to the Chaldean Catholic community.

That certain of the issues involved in the matter had already come before the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, a full report of whose Judgment would be found in vol. xiii of the Law Reports, Appeal Cases at pp. 431-445. That a copy of the Award of Sir Henry Fawcett, who was then Judge of Her Majesty's Supreme Consular Court for the Ottoman Dominions, but who had sat on that occasion by consent, in the capacity of Arbitrator to decide certain questions arising out of a suit which had been previously pending before his Court, was also inclosed.

Sir Percy Anderson further stated that Lord Rosebery did not suppose that we should find it necessary to refer to these decisions, or to be informed as to the particular point which was about to come before the Judicial Committee, and with regard to which his Lordship had no further information than was contained in Messrs. Witham and Co's. letter. Nor did his Lordship apprehend that any objection could be held to exist in this as in some cases, to allowing the solicitors to one of the parties to peruse, and, if desired, to be furnished with a copy of the document in question; and further to refer to it, or to an admitted copy of it before the Judicial Committee should that Tribunal permit.

That, at the same time, his Lordship before giving his assent to the request of the solicitors, desired to be furnished with our opinion as to whether it might reasonably and properly be complied with under the circumstances.

We have considered the matter, and in obedience to Lord Rosebery's commands, have the honour to

Report—

That in our opinion there is no reason in this particular case why the request of the solicitors to be allowed to see the despatch, or a copy of the despatch dated the 24th January, 1886, should not be complied with on the assumption that there is nothing in it of a confidential nature.

Whether it can be used before the Judicial Committee or not will be a question for the Committee, but we see no reason why objection should be taken to its being tendered, or why a copy should not be furnished for that purpose.

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen,

Foreign Office, June 6, 1894.

Detention of newspapers &c., at British Post Office at Constantinople.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Earl of Kimberley, to request that his Lordship may be favoured with your opinion on a question which has recently arisen in consequence of requests from the Turkish Government for the detention of certain postal packets by the British Post Office at Constantinople.

That Office is not the subject of any express Treaty stipulation, but was established in 1857, shortly after the close of the Crimean war, and has since been maintained on the ground that Great Britain is entitled under Treaties between her and the Porte to the same privileges as are enjoyed by other countries. As far as can be ascertained, the only Treaty provision which specifically alludes to postal facilities is contained in Article LXXVI of the Treaty of Commerce between Russia and Turkey of the 21st June, 1783, which is as follows:—

> "Article LXXVI. Pour faciliter le commerce des sujets respectifs, ainsi que la correspondance réciproque, la Sublime Porte s'engage de pourvoir aux moyens de la célérité, sûreté, et commodité de la poste et des courriers Russes, qui vont et viennent aux frontières de la Russie. C'est à quoi la Cour Impériale de Russie s'engage pareillement de son côté."

In the following year a Treaty of Commerce was concluded between Austria and Turkey which contains the following Article:—

> "Article V. The Sublime Porte declares further that, in accordance with the Commercial Treaties of Belgrade and of Passarowitz, and in view of the good understanding existing between the two Governments, the Government of Austria is entitled to claim for its subjects, without exception, the same privileges, advantages, and favours which are now enjoyed, or may hereafter be enjoyed, by other Frankish nations, and particularly by the French, the English, the Dutch, and the Russians, or by any other still more favoured nation."

In virtue of this stipulation an Austrian Post Office was established at Constantinople, and a French Post Office was subsequently instituted there under Article I of the Treaty of Commerce between France and Turkey of the 25th November, 1838, which accords to French subjects and ships all rights, privileges, and immunities granted by the Sublime Porte to the ships and subjects of any other foreign Power. A German Post Office was established in 1876.

* February 28, 1894.

All these Post Offices are maintained to the present day. It appears from a despatch recently received from Her Majesty's Ambassador that the Russian Post Office is managed by the Russian Steam-ship Company, and is under the Russian Consulate.

In 1884 a Circular note was addressed by the Porte to the Great Powers announcing its intention to take the postal service in Turkey into its own hands, claiming the withdrawal of the foreign Post Offices, and proposing as a first step that the land services maintained by some of the Powers in the Ottoman dominions should be at once suppressed. The Representatives of the Great Powers at Constantinople addressed notes to the Porte in reply, refusing to recognize its right to suppress the foreign postal services except after agreement come to with the Powers for their withdrawal. Discussions of considerable length ensued, in which the Austrian Embassy took a leading part, and contended that no modification of the existing system would be allowed until it was shown that the Porte had made adequate arrangements for conducting the service with proper efficiency and regularity; and eventually the subject dropped, though there is a constant tendency on the part of the Turkish Government to revive it whenever opportunity offers.

The British Post Office at Constantinople is not situate at the Embassy, but in a separate building. It is under the control of a Postmaster, who is appointed by Her Majesty's Postmaster-General, and who is for all purposes an officer of the British Post Office. His salary is charged on the Post Office Votes; he is liable to dismissal by the Postmaster-General; and, on the other hand, enjoys all such privileges and emoluments, including the right to pension, as are enjoyed by officers of the Post Office in the United Kingdom. The same remarks apply to the Postmaster's principal assistants. The office, therefore, forms no part of the Embassy, and is of course in no respect entitled to diplomatic immunities.

Letters passing from this country to Turkey travel through the various Continental countries in closed mails under the charge of the several Postal Administrations, and when they reach the frontier of Turkey are handed to Turkish officials, who convey them to Constantinople, and there deliver them to an officer of the British Post Office.

It may be assumed that the object of establishing a British Post Office was to secure a more regular delivery of correspondence to British merchants and residents at Constantinople. Originally, the office was in the nature of a "poste restante," and there was no delivery except to callers; but, owing to the inconvenient accumulation of postal matter thus arising, deliveries were after a time instituted, and letters are now, if not called for, delivered by messengers attached to the British Post Office in the same manner as in England.

From time to time the Turkish Government has objected to the circulation through the British Post Office of newspapers containing matter alleged to be prejudicial to the peace and good government of the country. In 1862 the Law Officers of the Crown were consulted by Lord John Russell, the then Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, as to the course which the Government would be justified in taking in consequence of a request from the Porte to prevent the distribution by the British Post Office in Constantinople of a newspaper called the "British Star," published in London, and said to contain incitements to revolt. The Law Officers, in advising, stated that they understood the existence of a British Post Office at Constantinople to be a matter of mere permission on the part of the Turkish Government, and not of Treaty stipulation; they thought, therefore, that the rights of the British Government and of British residents were of a very precarious character, and very far from such as could be insisted upon against the reasonable wishes of the Porte, and they were of opinion that the Postmaster-General, with the sanction of the Government, would be perfectly justified in directing the British Postmaster at Constantinople, under the circumstances, to stop the papers in question. They added that they thought it would be better merely to stop the papers and not to hand them over to an officer of the Porte, as the latter course might furnish means of proof or accusation against the particular individuals to whom the papers might happen to be addressed; and they thought that the Porte could not in reason or in law insist upon the papers being delivered to their officer. Copies of this opinion and of the correspondence on the subject which was laid before Parliament are inclosed herewith. (Papers A and B.)

The course suggested by the Law Officers has since been followed in numerous cases where the Porte has objected to the circulation of newspapers through the British Post Office.

The communication from the Porte has usually taken the form of a note addressed to the several Embassies concerned, stating that the introduction of a certain newspaper into the Ottoman dominions has been forbidden, and requesting that orders may be given to the Post Offices of their respective countries not to distribute it.

In July 1881 Lord Granville, the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, suggested to the Postmaster-General that on the receipt of such requests Her Majesty's Ambassador should be authorized to order the stoppage of newspapers at the British Post Office on his own authority, but to report every such instance to Her Majesty's Government.

This suggestion was agreed to, and instructions were given to the British Post Office Agents in Turkey to act upon any orders which they might receive from Her Majesty's Ambassador on this subject. (Paper C inclosed.)

These instructions have remained in force up to the present time. But only newspapers passing by newspaper post, and consequently liable to be opened and examined under the ordinary Regulations, have hitherto been so stopped.

In May 1892, however, complaints were received from the Porte respecting the distribution through the British Post Office of a newspaper called the "Turquie Libre," which was secretly printed in this country on thin paper and forwarded in closed envelopes.

It was suggested by the Marquis of Salisbury (then Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs) to the Postmaster-General that as the Porte stated that the envelopes were easily to be recognized, instructions might be given to the Postmaster at Constantinople to hand over to the Turkish Post Office for distribution those envelopes which answered to the description given by the Turkish authorities.

The Postmaster-General, after consulting the Solicitor to the Post Office, replied that such a course would be very damaging to the credit of the British Post Office, and that in order lawfully to give orders for the detention of closed envelopes containing the publication in question, it would be necessary that he should be furnished with a warrant from the Secretary of State.

After a short interval the complaints of the Porte were renewed, and reference was made to Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople, who reported that the envelopes could not be identified with any certainty. No further steps were therefore taken.

The material portions of this correspondence are inclosed herewith. (Papers D to J inclusive.)

Both on this occasion and in reply to an application made in December last for the stoppage of a pamphlet entitled "La Turquie sous Abdul Hamid," Sir Clare Ford (then Her Majesty's Ambassador) stated verbally that requests for stopping or tampering with closed envelopes could not be complied with. These statements were made as expressions of his personal view, and not as the result of instructions from Her Majesty's Government; but they received the Secretary of State's approval.

In September last a Circular note verbale was received from the Porte complaining of the introduction through the foreign Post Offices of articles liable to duty, and of obnoxious newspapers and publications, and proposing either that a Turkish official should be present at the opening and closing of the mail-bags, or that the mail-bags should be examined at the Turkish Custom-house on their arrival in the Ottoman dominions.

To this Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires was instructed to reply that Her Majesty's Government could not agree to any Turkish intervention beyond the procedure already adopted with regard to the Parcel Post, which seemed to offer every guarantee that could be required against the evasion of customs duties.

The present reference to you arises out of the following circumstances.

During the course of the last month serious remonstrances have been received from the Turkish Government respecting a paper called the "Hurriet," which is printed in England in the Turkish character, and forwarded through the British Post Office for distribution in Constantinople. The paper is written in a spirit of great hostility to the Turkish Government, and contains a number of personal attacks upon the Sultan, many of them of a libellous character, and such as would naturally cause great annoyance and might be regarded as incitements to sedition when levelled at an autocratic Sovereign, whose two immediate predecessors were both deposed, one being still, by many persons, believed to have been assassinated. Translated extracts from the "Hurriet" will be found among the inclosures to this letter. (Papers K, 1, 2, 3, and 4.)

The nature of the remonstrances received from the Turkish Ambassador at this Court on the subject of this paper will be gathered from a telegram sent to his Excellency by the Sultan's personal direction, and communicated by him to Lord

Rosebery (Paper L), and by an account of representations made by Rustem Pasha in conversation at the Foreign Office (Paper M).

Urgent representations were at the same time made by the Grand Vizier and Minister for Foreign Affairs to Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople, in consequence of which Sir P. Currie visited the British Post Office, and finding that the envelopes containing this newspaper were easily recognizable, addressed a written request to the Acting Postmaster to detain them.

The latter referred to the Postmaster-General for instructions, and was directed, in reply, to detain the paper, if not inclosed in letters.

Sir P. Currie then requested the Acting Postmaster to make a different arrangement as follows:—

That the closed envelopes believed to contain copies of the "Hurriet" and addressed to Turkish officials should be handed to the Turkish Post Office for delivery (such being the usual practice with ordinary letters so addressed), and that those addressed to local newspapers and to private firms or persons should be retained in the Postmaster's custody, the addressees being privately informed of their receipt, and requested if they wished to obtain them to send to the Post Office. That if the addressees called for them, the Postmaster should hand the envelopes to them and, ask them to be good enough to inform him if he was right in his belief that they contained the "Hurriet."

These requests will be found in Sir P. Currie's despatch No. 178 of the 18th April, as modified by his telegram of the 22nd April. (Papers S and T.)

The Postmaster-General objected to this measure as amounting to a detention of letters in contravention of his obligations under the Statutes and the declarations made by him and his officers; and stated that, in order to deal with the closed envelopes containing the "Hurriet" newspaper, he must be furnished with a warrant from a Secretary of State. (Paper W.)

Lord Kimberley considered himself justified under the circumstances in issuing such a warrant, which he has furnished in a letter to the Postmaster-General, explaining his grounds for that action. (Papers X and Y.)

The Postmaster-General has thereupon given instructions to the Acting Postmaster at Constantinople to detain any closed packets which by their appearance and other circumstances he has grounds for identifying as containing the "Hurriet," and to return them to the General Post Office. (Paper Z.)

In reply to a case submitted to them by the Solicitor to the Treasury at the instance of the Secretary of State for the Home Department, the late Law Officers of the Crown advised that the Acts 2 & 3 Vict., cap. 12, sec. 12, and 32 & 33 Vict., cap. 24, sec. 1, have been infringed by the omission of the printer of the newspaper to print thereon his name and address; that the paper was actually published in England within the legal meaning of publication, and that to knowingly publish the paper without the printer's name likewise constituted an offence under the Statutes. (Paper A^1.)

The English firm which had printed the "Hurriet" has engaged not to print any fresh issues, and it may be hoped that no further question in regard to this newspaper will arise.

But it is possible that at any moment some similar request may be received from the Turkish Government, under circumstances perhaps of greater difficulty, and Lord Kimberley thinks it very desirable that the Postmaster-General and he should be fortified with your opinion as to the course which they shall pursue, and the principles of law by which they should be governed.

The Solicitor to the Post Office has furnished the following statement of the bearing of the English Statute Law upon the matter:—

"By section 10 of 'The Post Office Management Act, 1837' (1 Vict., cap. 33), it is enacted that 'no person hereafter appointed shall be capable of holding the office of Postmaster-General, or of being an officer of the Post Office, unless such person shall have first made and subscribed before a Justice of the Peace the declaration contained in the Schedule annexed to the Act.'

"The declaration contained in the Schedule is to the following effect:—

"'I,   , do solemnly and sincerely declare that I will not wittingly, or willingly, open or delay, or cause or suffer to be opened or delayed, contrary to my duty, any letter or any thing sent by the post, which shall come into my hands, or custody, by reason of my employment relating to the Post Office, except by the consent of the person or persons to whom the same shall be directed, or by an express warrant in writing, under the hand of one of the Principal Secretaries of State, for that purpose, or except in such cases where the party or parties to whom such letter, or any thing sent by the post, shall be directed, and who is, or are, chargeable with the payment of the postage thereof, shall refuse or neglect to pay the same; and except such letters or any thing sent by the post, as shall be returned for want of true directions, or when the party or parties to whom the same shall be directed cannot be found; and that I will not in any way embezzle any such letter or any thing sent by the post as aforesaid; and I make this solemn declaration conscientiously intending to fulfil and obey the same, and by virtue of the provisions of an Act passed in the first year of the reign of Her Majesty Queen Victoria, intituled "An Act for the Management and Regulation of the Post Office."

"'This declaration was made before me, at   in the   of   , the   day of   , 18   .'

"By section 25 of 'The Post Office Offences Act, 1837,' it is enacted that 'every person employed by or under the Post Office, who shall, contrary to his duty, open, or procure or suffer to be opened, a post letter, or shall wilfully detain, or delay, or procure, or suffer to be detained or delayed, a post letter, shall in England and Ireland be guilty of a misdemeanour, and in Scotland of a crime and offence: Provided that nothing contained in the section shall extend to the opening or detaining or delaying of a post letter returned for want of a true direction, or by reason that the person to whom the same was directed is dead or cannot be found, or has refused the same, or has refused or neglected to pay the postage thereon, nor to the opening or detaining or delaying of a post letter in obedience to an express warrant in writing under the hand (in Great Britain) of one of the Principal Secretaries of State, and in Ireland under the hand and seal of the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland.'

"A 'post letter' is defined by 'The Post Office Protection Act, 1884,' section 19, to mean a postal packet as defined by the Act (that is, shortly, any missive sent by the post) from the time of its being delivered to a Post Office to the time of its being delivered to the person to whom it is addressed. And the expression used in the 25th section of the Post Office Offences Act—'every person employed by or under the Post Office'—is defined by section 47 of the same Act to mean every person employed in any business of the Post Office according to the interpretation given to 'officer of the Post Office,' and that expression is interpreted to include the Postmaster-General. Hence, the enactment applies to the Postmaster-General as well as to his officers.

"Having regard to these enactments, the Postmaster-General contends that he is bound to observe the inviolability of correspondence committed to his care wherever he is engaged in Post Office business, whether in the United Kingdom or elsewhere, and that every officer employed in the British Post Office at Constantinople is as firmly bound to observe the provisions of the Post Office Acts on this and on all other subjects as though he were performing his duties in the United Kingdom.

"In the Postmaster-General's view there is only one way in which the opening and detention of letters can be legally authorized, and that is by warrant of a Secretary of State.

"The power exercised by the Secretaries of State to open and detain letters conveyed by the post has existed from the earliest times, and seems to have been in its origin in the nature of a condition tacitly imposed by the Crown upon the conveyance by its officers and servants of the letters of subjects. In the Ordinance of the Protectorate passed in 1657 (Scobell, p. 511), which may be said to have established the General Post Office, it is recited that the erecting and settling of one General Post Office 'hath been and is the best means not only to maintain a certain and constant intercourse of trade and commerce betwixt all the said places to the great benefit of the people of these nations, but also to convey the public despatches, and to discover and prevent many dangerous and wicked designs which have been and are daily continued against the peace and welfare of this Commonwealth, the intelligence whereof cannot well be communicated but by letter of escript.' In subsequent documents relating to the Post Office, of the time of the Stuarts (though not in all of such documents), the right of the Secretaries of State to open and detain letters is referred to; and in the consolidating Statutes of 9 Anne, cap. 10, the right is expressly recognized, the penalty otherwise imposed for opening, detaining, or delaying letters being excused in the case of 'an express warrant in writing under the hand of one of the Principal Secretaries of State for every such opening, detaining, or delaying.'

"This Act remained in force until the passing of the several consolidating Post Office Acts of the first year of the present reign, from which quotations have already been made. It will thus be seen that, while the Crown has, since the first establishment of the Post Office, claimed a certain right of opening and detaining letters, that right has never been exercised by the Postmaster-General, but by one of the Principal Secretaries of State as directly representing the Crown.

"It will be observed that the enactments of 1837, to which reference has been made, extend not only to closed letters, but to every missive conveyed by the post.

"There is, however, a distinction.

"The Postal Union Convention (Article XVI (5)) reserves to the Government of every country of the Union the right to refuse to convey over its territory, or to deliver, articles enjoying the advantage of reduced rates of postage in regard to which the Laws, Ordinances, or Decrees which regulate the conditions of publication or circulation in such country have not been complied with.

"The articles referred to are, in fact, those which are sent by open post; and it may be that, by the clause in question, the Turkish Government would be justified in refusing to carry by open post newspapers which it considered prejudicial to the interests of its country,—although the Article seems to relate rather to the form of publication and the conditions of circulation than to the contents of the documents referred to.

"However this may be, the Article indicates that a distinction is to be drawn between closed letters and other mail matter, and, by reserving to each Government the right to stop the second description of mail-matter only implies that closed letters are to pass inviolate.

"Article XXI of the Convention provides that, except where there is an express stipulation, the Convention does not justify any weakening of the Laws of any one of the contracting countries.

"The first Postal Union Convention was made at Berne in 1874, and the Post Office Act of 1875 (38 Vict., cap. 22) was passed to enable effect to be given to the provisions of the Convention. By this Act (section 2) power is conferred upon the Treasury by Warrant to make such Regulations as may seem to them necessary for carrying into effect any arrangement between Her Majesty and any foreign country with reference to the conveyance by post of any postal packets; and, by section 4, it is provided that all postal packets shall be posted, forwarded, conveyed, and delivered, subject to such Regulations, conditions, prohibitions, and restrictions respecting the time and mode of posting, and delivery, and of the payment of rates, postage, and other sums chargeable under the Act, or under any Warrant made under the Act, and respecting stamps, covers, forms, dimensions, maximum weights, inclosures, use of packets (other than letters) for making communications, and otherwise, as the Treasury may from time to time by Warrant, made on the representation of the Postmaster-General, direct. Any postal packet posted or sent in contravention of any Warrant may be detained by the Postmaster-General, opened and returned to the senders, or forwarded to its place of destination, charged in either case with such rates of postage as the Postmaster-General, with the consent of the Treasury, shall from time to time direct. (See 'Post Office Act, 1875,' section 4, and 'Post Office Duties) Act, 1847' (10 & 11 Vict., cap. 85), section 10.)

"Under the authority conferred upon the Treasury by this Act, a Treasury Warrant was made on the 30th June, 1892 ('The Foreign and Colonial Post Warrant, 1892'), by which it is provided, amongst other things (Article 19), that: 'There shall not be posted or conveyed or delivered by post under this Warrant any postal packet containing any article which, by the laws of the country or place in which the packet is posted, or to which the packet is addressed, it is unlawful to send by post. Any such packet, if posted or tendered for conveyance by post, may be detained, and either returned and given up to the sender thereof, or dealt with or disposed of in such other manner as may be authorized by the Postmaster-General.'

"Under this Warrant the Postmaster-General has considered that he is entitled, consistently with the provisions of the Acts of 1837, to stop a newspaper going by the open post when he has been duly informed by the Turkish Government that it is unlawful to send such paper by post in Turkey, the examination of open packets in the post being part of the ordinary duties of the Post Office. Similarly, if a closed letter accidentally becomes unsealed or open in the post, and is noticed by an official of the Post Office to contain a prohibited newspaper or other prohibited article, the Postmaster-General would be authorized to detain it.

"There are, indeed, various provisions of the Post Office Acts (see particularly section 20 of 'The Post Office Act, 1870,' 33 & 34 Vict., cap. 79, and section 4 of 'The Post Office (Protection) Act, 1884,' 47 & 48 Vict., cap. 76) prohibiting generally the conveyance by post of various articles.

"In accordance with the Act of 1884, the warrants relating both to the inland and to the foreign and colonial post prohibit the transmission of certain articles, and certain rules on the subject are published in the 'Post Office Guide.'

"But there is no authority in any of such enactments or Regulations to open any closed packet, and all the rules laid down must be read as subject to the qualification that the Postmaster-General becomes aware, either from the fact that the packet is sent by the open post, or, in the case of the letter post, from the statement of the sender or the accidental opening of the packet, that the forbidden articles are present.

"The Postmaster-General has always held that it is contrary to his duty and to the duty of any officer of the Post Office, under the enactments of 1837, to open any closed letter on the chance or suspicion of its containing a forbidden document, and that, speaking generally, he is not at liberty to open or detain any closed letter, except under the authority of a warrant of the Secretary of State.

"As supporting this view it may be useful to refer to the provisions of the Penny Postage Act (3 & 4 Vict., cap. 96) with reference to contraband goods. By section 65 of that Act the Postmaster-General or any of his officers is authorized to detain any post letter suspected to contain contraband goods, and to forward the same to the Commissioner of Customs, who, in the presence of the person to whom the same may be addressed, or, in his absence in the case of non-attendance after notice, may open and examine the same, and, if contraband goods are discovered, may retain the letter and its contents.

"It will be seen (1) that even for the protection of the Customs it required a statutory enactment to authorize the detention of a letter; and (2) that such enactment does not authorize the opening of the letter by the Postmaster-General, but by the Government Department assumed to be specially interested."

Accepting the above as a complete statement of the provisions of English Statute law applicable to the case, Lord Kimberley still entertains grave doubt whether the Statutes referred to and the declarations made by the Postmaster-General and his officers can be held to bind them to deliver in a foreign country (according to the usual course of the post) at the residence of the addressee a closed packet which is suspected to contain a publication contrary to the law of that country and calculated to disturb order and public security, and which on that ground the Postmaster-General and his officers have been formally requested not to deliver. The officers of the Postmaster-General in Turkey are under the same obligations as other foreign residents to respect the law and Police Regulations of that country, and are, moreover, in certain cases amenable to the Turkish Tribunals in respect of breaches of the criminal law of that country committed by them against Turkish subjects.

As Lord Kimberley understands the matter, every Statute must, as far as its language permits, be so interpreted and applied as not to be inconsistent with the comity of nations, and with the established rules and exceptions recognized by international law.

Parliament can no doubt legislate in respect of, and cast statutory duties upon, British subjects when beyond the actual limits of the Queen's dominions; but there is a general presumption of the strongest kind that the Legislature, when so doing, does not intend to make obligatory on such British subjects any act which would in any particular foreign country where it might be performed constitute a breach of the municipal law there prevailing.

In the case of the Ottoman dominions, moreover (as of other countries where Her Majesty possesses extra-territorial jurisdiction over British subjects), English law, both Statute and other, is administrable solely under the provisions of Orders in Council which in express terms recognize the general principles above adverted to, and provide that English law shall be applied, and that Her Majesty's jurisdiction shall be exercised according to the provisions of such Orders in Council, and not otherwise (see more particularly "Ottoman Order in Council, 1873," Articles 5 and 6—marked passages).

Under such circumstances it seems to his Lordship that omission to deliver such a packet does not constitute a breach of English law as applicable to British subjects in Turkey, and that notice to the addressee that it lies at the Post Office and can be opened there is a sufficient fulfilment of the Postmaster's statutory duties.

To the Postmaster-General it appears that his position is not governed by the considerations of law applicable to the status of private British subjects in foreign countries; that he is acting in Turkey not as an ordinary subject of the Crown, but as Her Majesty's Postmaster-General; and that, when acting in that capacity, he can only act subject to the Laws and Regulations applicable to the execution of his office. The assent of the Turkish Government to the establishment of a branch of the British Post Office at Constantinople necessarily carries with it, in the Postmaster-General's view, the right to conduct that Post Office in accordance with the Municipal Postal Laws of the United Kingdom.

Lord Kimberley, on the other hand, cannot help feeling doubts whether this last conclusion can be said to flow either necessarily or legitimately from the premisses, or whether it could be successfully maintained in diplomatic discussion. The consent of the Porte to the maintenance of the British Post Office at Constantinople is not recorded in any formal written document, and the Porte can at any time demand its withdrawal unless it be conducted on principles similar to those observed by the Post Offices of other countries.

Two further despatches have recently been received from Her Majesty's Ambassador, in one of which his Excellency explains his action in the present case; in the other he forwards a Memorandum of the course pursued by the French, Austrian, and Russian Post Offices in regard to newspapers forbidden by the Porte. (Papers B* and C*.)

Lord Kimberley thinks it highly expedient that nothing should be done to cause a departure from the present practice, by which all requests on the part of the Turkish Government with regard to the British Post Office are addressed to Her Majesty's Ambassador in the first instance, in order that he, and if necessary Her Majesty's Government, should have the opportunity of judging whether the request is a reasonable one before instructions are given to the Post Office.

Whether those instructions are given by the Ambassador, and subsequently approved by Her Majesty's Government, or whether they form the subject of a request from the Secretary of State to the Postmaster-General, and whether in the latter case the request is conveyed in a letter or in the more formal shape of a warrant, appear to Lord Kimberley to be matters of administrative detail, in regard to which the requirements of English law must, of course, take precedence of considerations of mere convenience.

But it might, under certain circumstances, prove embarrassing that there should be no alternative middle course between allowing forbidden publications to be distributed (according to the usual course of the post) in closed packets, and directing that such closed packets shall be stopped under warrant. And for obvious reasons, it is desirable to mark as far as is possible the fact that the detention or non-delivery of such packets is an act of compliance with the law of Turkey rather than a measure of State policy for the purpose of pleasing the Turkish Government; such compliance being, of course, an act of international comity, and not involving an admission that the Postmaster-General in the execution of his office is regulated by the law of Turkey.

I am accordingly to request that you will take this letter and the accompanying papers into your consideration, and will favour Lord Kimberley with your opinion—

1. Whether the course hitherto pursued with regard to the detention of forbidden newspapers sent in open bands through the British Post Office has been right and proper.

2. Whether the course pursued in the present instance in regard to the detention under a warrant of the Secretary of State of closed packets which are believed on sufficient grounds to contain the "Hurriet" is correct, and in accordance with English law and constitutional practice.

3. Whether the Postmaster-General has been correctly advised that he and his officers cannot without a warrant from the Secretary of State refrain from delivering by messenger in Turkey (according to the usual course of the post) closed packets which they have reasonable grounds for believing to contain publications of a seditious or libellous character forbidden by the law of Turkey; whether, in fact, such a course constitutes an "opening, detaining, or delaying," which can only be resorted to in virtue of such a warrant.

4. Whether there is any middle course available between distributing such packets (according to the usual course of the post) and seizing them under a Secretary of State's warrant.

Lord Kimberley will also be glad to be favoured with any general observations and suggestions which you may have to offer on the matter.

I have, &c.

Report.

We are of opinion—

1. That the course hitherto pursued with regard to the detention of forbidden newspapers sent in open bands through the British Post Office has been right and proper.

2. That the course pursued in the present instance in regard to the detention under a warrant of the Secretary of State of closed packets which are believed, on sufficient grounds, to contain the "Hurriet," is correct and in accordance with English law and constitutional practice.

The Turkish Government is entitled to object to the introduction, through a foreign Post Office, of matter contrary to the Turkish Law, and it would be a departure from international usage and propriety for a foreign Power to allow its Post Office within Turkey to be used for purposes contrary to the law of Turkey. A Secretary of State is empowered to prevent such a practice by warrant.

3. That the Postmaster-General has been correctly advised that in Constantinople he is acting as Her Majesty's Postmaster-General, and, in that capacity, can only act under the Laws and Regulations applicable to his office; but we are of opinion that, in the contention of the Postmaster-General, sufficient importance is not attached to the principle that the Municipal Law of the country ought to be respected.

We think that there is much ground for the opinion that all necessary powers are already given by the Treasury Warrant of the 30th June, 1892, and that such opening, detaining, and delaying, as is mentioned in question 3, might be justified under that warrant, as well as under a warrant from the Secretary of State, but to avoid any doubt on this point, we suggest that the course recommended in the next paragraph of this Report be adopted.

4. That there is a middle course available between distributing such packets, according to the usual course of the post, and seizing them under a Secretary of State's warrant.

It is competent to the Treasury under "The Post Office Act, 1875," sec. 4, to issue a warrant directing that all postal packets posted, forwarded, or conveyed for delivery in Turkey shall be delivered subject to the condition that, if the Postmaster-General or his officers believe they contain inclosures which it is unlawful to send by post in Turkey, the person to whom they are addressed shall open them in the presence of such officer, and satisfy him that they do not contain such prohibited matter.

We do not consider that there is any other observation or suggestion which we can usefully make.

No. 76.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Earl of Rosebery.—(Received January 19.)

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, January 18, 1894.

Illegal seizure of "Howard Holbrook" by Newfoundland authorities. Claim of U.S. citizens Oakes and Foster.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Bertie's letter of the 1st January, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers relating to the claim of Messrs. Oakes and Foster, citizens of the United States, on account of the illegal seizure of their fishing schooner, the "Howard Holbrook," by the Colonial authorities of Newfoundland.

That previous correspondence on this matter had been referred to our predecessors, and reported on by them on the 17th March, 1892.

That, upon receipt of their Report, the Governor of Newfoundland was informed that the Law Officers of the Crown had advised that the action of the Newfoundland authorities did entitle the owners and master of the "Howard Holbrook" to compensation, and he was requested again to bring the case before his Ministers, and urge upon them the desirability of admitting the liability of the Government of Newfoundland to make reasonable compensation, the amount of which might be left to be arranged diplomatically between Her Majesty's Government and the Government of the United States.

That Sir Terence O'Brien was further asked to furnish Her Majesty's Government with any criticisms which his Ministers might have to offer on the claim presented by Messrs. Oakes and Foster, and also with a statement of the amount which they would consider, in all the circumstances, adequate compensation for the loss sustained by the owners, and for the imprisonment of the master.

That after considerable delay a reply was received from the Government of Newfoundland, forwarding an extract from a letter from the Attorney-General of the Colony, to the effect that he adhered to the opinion he had already given as to the non-liability of the Government of Newfoundland for the claim preferred against them, and calling in question the damages alleged to have been sustained.

That to this letter your Lordship had taken very strong objection on the grounds explained in a letter to the Colonial Office on the 17th December, 1892.

That two despatches were accordingly addressed on the subject to the Governor of Newfoundland by the Secretary of State for the Colonies, of which copies were inclosed.

That in a letter from the Colonial Office, dated the 25th February, 1893, further explanations received from the Attorney-General of the Colony of Newfoundland in regard to the opinions he had expressed would be found.

That on the 20th May the Colonial Office had forwarded to the Foreign Office a despatch received from the Governor of Newfoundland, inclosing a Report made by Judge Prowse at the request of the Attorney-General of that Colony.

That in his Report, Judge Prowse refuted the statements made in the case, and showed reason for reducing the claim of the owners of the "Howard Holbrook" for compensation, which he considered should only be paid, if at all, under protest.

That the facts which had thus come to light, and to which attention had been particularly drawn in Judge Prowse's detailed Report, appeared to present certain portions of the case in an aspect somewhat different from that which it bore when originally submitted to our predecessors, though it might be doubted whether the new matter contained in these more recent papers would have caused them to modify the substance of their Report of the 17th March, 1892, or would lead us to dissent from its general tenour.

That it appeared to your Lordship, as at present advised, that the Judgment of the Stipendiary Magistrate of which the claimants complained was very probably erroneous on grounds other and entirely distinct from those mentioned in the decision of the Court of Appeal reversing his Judgment, and that, therefore, it might not be necessary to consider with any very great minuteness the strictures, whether ill- or well-founded, which had been offered by Judge Prowse on that decision.

That at the same time, there was no reason to doubt that the action of the Stipendiary Magistrate with reference to the case was perfectly bonâ fide, and under those circumstances it would seem that, as matter of strict law, the decision of the Court of First Instance, even although it was admittedly erroneous in itself, and was also subsequently set aside upon appeal according to due and proper course of law, did not suffice to found any claim for compensation as of right from the country whose Tribunals had committed the error.

That such a decision might, however, very well afford ground upon which to base a moral claim, which Her Majesty's Government would be disposed to recognize, for reasonable compensation, as an act of grace.

That it would be observed that the Report of the late Law Officers in no way conflicts with this view, and, indeed, the opinion expressed by them, that it was "desirable that the amount of such compensation should be settled by the direct action of Her Majesty's Government without recourse to legal proceedings," tended to indicate that in their view also the action of the Newfoundland authorities gave the owners and master of the "Howard Holbrook" a moral claim to compensation as an act of grace, rather than a legal claim thereto as matter of right.

That your Lordship would be glad to know whether the views expressed in Mr. Bertie's letter met with our concurrence, and we were also requested, in taking the papers into our consideration, to favour your Lordship with our opinion generally upon the present aspect of the case, and as to the course to be now pursued with regard to it by Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Bertie further requested us to furnish your Lordship with such more detailed observations and criticisms on the correspondence generally, and on Judge Prowse's Report in particular, as we thought might be of assistance to your Lordship in dealing with the matter.

We have taken the papers into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

That the offence with which the master of the "Howard Holbrook" ought to have been charged was having in his possession a quantity of bait fish for the purpose of exportation without a licence. (Section 1, subsections (2) and (5) of the Act of 1889, cap. 6.)

The information was for having more than allowed by the licence, and the conviction is for an offence in the latter form.

We are of opinion that the latter description of the offence was substantially correct, but Mr. Justice Little seems to have come to the conclusion that because a fee was charged for the licence (which was apparently unauthorized), and because there was no proclamation under Section 4 of the Act of 1889, cap. 6, that no offence against the Act was committed. In other words, that, under the licence in fact granted, the master might take any quantity of fish he liked, and for any purpose he liked, without infringing the Act.

We cannot agree in this view. But it is obvious that the Newfoundland authorities are themselves to blame for the complication which has arisen. If they had followed the 4th and 5th (amongst other) Sections of the Act of 1889, there would have been no difficulty, and the affidavit contemplated by Section 5 would have fixed the purpose for which the bait fish were required, and the proclamation under Section 4 would have fixed the quantities proper to be had for the purpose of exportation.

Mr. Justice Little further decided that the conviction was bad, because it adjudged penalties not authorized by the Statute. We think that in this respect Mr. Justice Little was right, and that the conviction was properly quashed.

Although, therefore, we are unable to agree in Mr. Justice Little's view of what may be called the merits of the case, we think the conviction by the Magistrate was in the respect indicated erroneous.

But as to the merits of Mr. Justice Little's Judgment, it is to be borne in mind that it stands as the Judgment of a Judge of the Superior Court, from which, as we understand, there is no appeal.

In these circumstances, although it is not to be taken that every unsuccessful prosecution entitles the person prosecuted to compensation, we do not desire, at this stage of the proceedings, to contravene the view of our predecessors, that the case is one in which it may be desirable to pay moderate compensation.

We think our predecessors in office had not before them the facts as fully as we have, and assuming those facts to be as set out in the Report of Judge Prowse, and in the accompanying papers, we think the conduct of the master of the "Howard Holbrook" highly reprehensible.

There seems to be no doubt that the bait was intended for exportation, that he knew that he was receiving a much larger quantity than the terms of the licence permitted—that he bribed an officer of the Government in order to obtain such quantity—and that he resorted to contrivance to conceal the fact.

Assuming that moderate compensation is to be given, we think that the criticisms of Judge Prowse upon the claim are well-founded, and that the figures he suggests would represent ample compensation.

We think it not improbable that our predecessors, if they had had all the facts before them, might have thought that no compensation should have been paid, and if the case came before us for the first time that would have been our own view; but having regard to the irregularities on the part of the Newfoundland authorities, we think the better course is that above suggested, but care should be taken not to admit that compensation is given as matter of right.

The amount paid for the licence ought to be returned.

We have, &c.

No. 77.

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, March 8, 1894.

Seizure of "Coquitlan" for breach of U.S. revenue laws.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Earl of Rosebery, the further papers noted in the accompanying list which relate to the seizure of the British ship "Coquitlan" at Port Etches in 1892, for an alleged breach of the United States' revenue laws.

The case has already received the consideration of yourselves or of your predecessors in office on four occasions, and the Reports then given on the questions raised are inclosed. (See Papers A, B, C, and D.) The papers which accompanied the references on each occasion are also sent herewith in case you should find it necessary further to consult any of them, and they have been placed for convenience of reference in a separate bag.

The last occasion upon which you reported on this subject was the 18th March, 1893, and upon the 24th April of the same year a note was presented by Her Majesty's Ambassador at Washington to the United States' Government, following generally the terms recommended in your Report. A copy of this note is inclosed in Sir J. Pauncefote's despatch No. 109 of the 4th May (Paper E).

On the 20th September the Colonial Office forwarded a Petition from the owners' solicitor, suggesting that if an adverse decision were given in the United States' Court, the United States' Government might be approached with a view to obtain the imposition of a personal penalty on the master in place of the forfeiture of the vessel.

Such a course was, however, considered inexpedient at that time, as it might have been construed as tantamount to an admission that the vessel had committed an offence cognizable in the United States' Courts; but Sir J. Pauncefote was authorized, in the event of the vessel being condemned and her forfeiture decreed, to apply for a mitigation of the penalty as desired by the owners, but without prejudice to the diplomatic claim for redress which had been already made.

The case meanwhile pursued its natural course, and was in due time tried at Sitka, in the district Court of Alaska, where Judgment was recorded against the vessel in November last, and the owners, in discharge of their obligation under the bail bonds into which they had entered, offered to deliver the vessel to the United States' authorities. This was reported to Lord Rosebery by the Secretary of State for the Colonies, and at his instance Her Majesty's Ambassador at Washington was informed of the facts, and instructed, by telegraph (Paper marked F), to endeavour to stop the sale of the vessel and to procure her return to her owners pending a diplomatic settlement of the question.

The owners were at the same time warned, through the Canadian Government, not to lose their right of appeal against the Judgment of the Court.

In reply to Sir J. Pauncefote, reported in his despatch No. 231 (Paper G), that he had, on receipt of the telegraphic instructions above referred to, reminded the United States' Government that he had received no reply to his communication of the 24th April, and had pressed strongly that the vessel should be delivered back to her owners pending the result of the diplomatic discussion. He had, moreover, added that there was no dispute about the facts, and that he felt sure Mr. Gresham would conclude after examination that there could be no dispute about the law. Mr. Gresham, on his part, had expressed regret at the delay which had taken place in answering the note of the 24th April, and had promised an early decision. He (Mr. Gresham) concurred in the desirability of preventing any action such as the sale of a ship, but thought it would be very satisfactory if the owners would appeal to the Supreme Court with a view of obtaining a Judgment which would accelerate the action of the Executive, and would be conclusive for the future in all cases of a similar kind.

A copy of the Judgment of the Court at Sitka is inclosed in the Colonial Office letter of the 21st December (Paper H).

It will be seen that the Decree for the forfeiture of the ship is based on the finding that she had violated certain provisions of the United States' Customs Act in transferring cargo within the 12-mile limit (so-called) of the coast without having reported or having paid customs duty at a port of entry; but it will be also seen that the Judgment admits that the transhipment of the skins, &c., took place outside the 3-mile limit.

Her Majesty's Government have from the outset protested against any claim on the part of the United States to bring foreign vessels within the jurisdiction of their municipal law by reason of anything done outside the limit of 3 miles from the coast. It therefore appears impossible for them to recognize the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of the United States, to which an appeal would lie, in matters occurring beyond this limit.

Sir J. Pauncefote was instructed to speak to Mr. Gresham in this sense, and reported fully his action in so doing in his despatch No. 9 of the 15th January, 1894 (Paper I).

Sir J. Pauncefote represented the hardship of forcing the owners to continue costly and lengthy litigation to vindicate so well-established a principle of international law as the above in regard to maritime jurisdiction.

Mr. Gresham replied that it did not lie in his power to remove the case from the consideration of the Court of Appeal.

The international question would, he said, remain intact, and the appeal would proceed without prejudice to either country.

Mr. Gresham added, in a subsequent note, that the application of the owners to surrender the ship in discharge of that bond had been refused, and that they had prosecuted an appeal to the Circuit Court, which was now pending, and was set down for hearing in April next. He further stated that the United States' Attorney-General was unwilling to confess error upon the record, and thus terminate the judicial proceedings. Mr. Gresham therefore suggested that the international question should be allowed to rest until the determination of the appeal, when its consideration could be resumed.

Sir J. Pauncefote reported that he saw little prospect of shaking this decision.

Although the owners complained through the Canadian Government of the unnecessary expense of an appeal, steps were taken to warn them of the importance of preserving their right of appeal.

The Canadian Government reported, however, that the owners were not prepared to appeal on their own responsibility, and that the date for appeal expired on the 14th February.

It will be seen from the inclosure in the Colonial Office letter of the 17th instant (Paper J), that the owners did take the necessary steps to preserve their appeal, but expressed the hope that an understanding would be reached which would not necessitate the further continuance of costly litigation; and also that the Judgment would be stayed and the vessel released.

A despatch from the Governor-General of Canada, embodying the views of his Ministers on the subject at greater length, will be found in the Colonial Office letter of the 1st March (Paper L).

It will be further seen from that letter that the Canadian Government inquired whether Her Majesty's Government required the owners of the "Coquitlan" to exhaust the remedies provided by the United States' Courts.

Thence arises the first question upon which your opinion is solicited, viz., whether it is practicable or expedient that Her Majesty's Government should require the owners to proceed with the appeal.

In the second paragraph of the Colonial Office letter, it is pointed out that the position taken up by Her Majesty's Government on the advice of the Law Officers of the Crown was, as set forth in Sir J. Pauncefote's note to Mr. Gresham of the 24th April last (Paper E), "that where a seizure takes place outside the 3-mile limit of a British vessel engaged in an attempt to break the revenue laws of another country they would not complain of the capture," that being the principle upon which, in the interests of the comity of nations, the Hovering Acts and similar legislation by other countries had been tacitly acquiesced in.

Lord Ripon gathers from the opinion expressed in your Report of the 18th March, that the provisions of the Hovering Acts are not to be regarded as a substantive part of municipal law binding on the ships of all nations coming within the specified area, but that their application is only to be recognized in cases where a vessel is engaged in proceedings preliminary or auxiliary to an offence to be consummated within the jurisdiction, and that a nation is under no obligation to recognize seizures of its vessels made in pursuance of such laws for acts begun and completed outside the 3-mile limit, and having no connection with or relation to anything done or to be done in the territory or within the acknowledged territorial jurisdiction of the nation making such seizure.

Lord Rosebery would be glad to learn whether this is a correct interpretation of your Report on this point.

The Judgment of the United States' Court in the case of the "Coquitlan" proceeds on the assumption that the provisions of the United States' Hovering Acts are substantially and entirely binding on foreign vessels, and admits, as already pointed out, that the alleged offence was committed between 3 and 7 miles from the shore, and that the goods transhipped were not intended to be landed, or dealt with in any way, within the territory or jurisdiction of the United States.

In these circumstances Lord Ripon, though, with a view of meeting the wishes of the United States, he would be glad if the owners would prosecute the appeal, sees no ground upon which Her Majesty's Government should require them to do so.

Lord Rosebery would desire to be informed whether you concur in the views expressed by Lord Ripon upon this point.

In the seventh paragraph of the Colonial Office letter, it is further pointed out that, as is admitted by Judge Truitt in his decision, "the United States at that time was asserting an absolute ownership over the fur-seals born and reared on the Pribyloff Islands, which composed the herd which the vessel involved in this case was hunting," and the action of the United States' authorities in seizing the "Coquitlan" would probably never have been taken but for their desire to maintain and prosecute that claim in every possible way by hampering the proceedings of the pelagic sealers who were infringing the alleged rights of the United States.

That question has, it is added, now been closed by the decision of the Behring Sea Arbitration Tribunal, and it appears to Lord Ripon somewhat ungracious on the part of the United States to refuse to come to a friendly settlement of this case until the owners have been put to the further expense of prosecuting the appeal to the Supreme Court, the decision of which can, it is admitted, have no effect on the international grounds upon which Her Majesty's Government maintain that the seizure was illegal, and which seem a proper subject for diplomatic discussion, and not within the competence of the Municipal Tribunal, which is bound to administer the law as it stands.

Upon this last point the attention of the Secretary of State has recently been drawn to a passage in the "American Law Review," vol. xxv, No. 4, July-August 1891, pp. 638 and 639, on "The Behring Sea Question and the American Supreme Court," in which the position appears to be correctly and clearly summarized (see pamphlet marked K).

The Secretary of State for the Colonies therefore suggests that Her Majesty's Ambassador at Washington should be instructed to make a further representation to the Government of the United States, pointing out that the decision of the appeal cannot in any way affect the grounds upon which Her Majesty's Government have from the first protested against the seizure of the vessel, and that in view of the connection of the original seizure with the now abandoned claim of the United States, it is inconsistent with the generosity which may be expected from a great Power like the United States to delay remedying an act of injustice, and to insist on those who have already suffered so heavily by that act maintaining further a costly and useless litigation.

Lord Rosebery would be glad to be favoured with your opinion as to the propriety of instructing Sir J. Pauncefote in this sense.

I am accordingly to request that you will take the papers transmitted herewith into your early consideration, and that you will favour Lord Rosebery with your opinion on the questions specially submitted in this letter, as well as with any observations of a more general nature which you may have to offer on the present aspect of the case.

I have, &c.

Report.

That if in this case the Judgment of condemnation had been founded only on the transhipment of cargo outside the 3-mile limit, we should have thought that no useful end could be obtained by requiring an appeal to be brought. We find, however, that condemnation has also been decreed for breach of a section (No. 3109), against which no objection can be brought on international grounds, and if that ground of condemnation can be supported, the question of jurisdiction, which has been the subject of diplomatic representation, would not arise. We think, therefore, that there is reasonable cause why the United States' Government should insist upon the owners of the "Coquitlan" proceeding with their appeal.

The interpretation put by Lord Ripon on our Report of the 18th March, 1893, is in accordance with our meaning.

No. 78.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Earl of Kimberley.—(Received April 14.)

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, April 13, 1894.

Claim of Mr. H. Paxton on United States through exclusion of "Wanderer" from Behring Sea in 1887 and 1889.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Percy Anderson's letter of the 10th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the paper* relating to the claim of Mr. Henry Paxton, a Canadian British subject residing at Victoria, British Columbia, managing owner of the sealing-schooner "Wanderer," against the United States' authorities, for damages alleged to have been sustained by him through his abandonment in 1887 and 1889 of his voyages in pursuit of seals, under fear of seizure by the United States' cruizers if found within the waters of the Behring Sea.

That it appeared from the statement of claim annexed to the Colonial Office letter, that in the early part of the years 1887 and 1889 the owner fitted out his vessel for the season's sealing, and duly cleared at Her Majesty's Customs at the port of Victoria, British Columbia, for that purpose; that she pursued her voyage in and through the North Pacific Ocean towards Behring Sea, but that hearing of the seizures by the United States' revenue officers of other vessels in Behring Sea, and consequently fearing the seizure of his own vessel and cargo, and the arrest and imprisonment of himself and crew, he abandoned the venture and returned to the port of Victoria.

That the claim advanced was for 12,600 dollars for damages caused by the exclusion of the "Wanderer" from Behring Sea in the years 1887 and 1889.

That your Lordship was disposed to think that the United States' Government would probably, and perhaps rightly, decline to entertain the claim, but that in view of the possibility of other claims of a similar nature being advanced in other quarters, Sir Percy Anderson was to request that we would take the papers into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether the case was one in which compensation might properly be demanded by Her Majesty's Government from the Government of the United States on behalf of the claimant, and, if so, what amount might reasonably be claimed; and (2), if not, whether Her Majesty's Government should decline to support the claim in any way, even by presenting it to the Government of the United States.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands, we have considered the matter, and have the honour to

Report—

That the case is not one in which compensation may properly be demanded by Her Majesty's Government, and, in our opinion, Her Majesty's Government should decline to support it in any way.

"Coquitlan," Should an appeal be instituted at public cost?

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, June 22, 1894.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Bertie's letter of the 9th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list relative to the case of the "Coquitlan," upon which the then Law Officers reported on the 16th March last.

That, in view of their opinion that there was reasonable cause why the United States' Government should insist upon the owners of the "Coquitlan" proceeding with the appeal, and of the fact that Her Majesty's Government could scarcely compel the owners to prosecute the appeal at their own expense, it was felt that some arrangement should be come to by which the owners might be relieved from further personal pecuniary risk with regard to it.

That the views of the Secretary of State for the Colonies were therefore requested on this point.

That the Marquis of Ripon had intimated his willingness, if the Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury would consent to half the cost of the appeal being borne by Imperial funds, to urge the Canadian Government to pay the other moiety; and that this proposal was submitted to their Lordships in the inclosed letter of the 11th May.

That the Board of Treasury, however, in their letter of the 24th May, demurred to this proposal, and, on grounds which were fully set forth therein, expressed doubt as to the expediency of prosecuting the appeal.

That they suggested that the determination to appeal or not should depend on whether the Law Officers of the Crown held that there was a strong probability of success on the second of the two counts on which the vessel was condemned, viz., for a breach of section 3109 of the United States' Customs Act; and they considered that if there was, the owners of the "Coquitlan" might be expected to make the appeal at their own charge, while, if there was not, neither they nor Her Majesty's Government, nor the Government of the Dominion, would, so far as their Lordships could see, gain anything by the appeal.

That having regard to the views expressed by the Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury, which were, moreover, shared by the Colonial Office, that the decision to appeal or not should depend on our opinion as to the probability of success upon the second count, your Lordship desired to re-submit the case to us with special reference to this paticular point.

That Mr. Bertie was therefore to request that we would take the papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether there was sufficient probability of success on the second count to warrant the prosecution of the appeal at the public cost, should the owners maintain their refusal to proceed with it at their own expense, and also with any general observations which we might have to offer on the case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken the matter into our consideration, and have the honour to

Report—

That, in our opinion, the conviction under section 3109 was not justified by the facts as known to us, and an appeal from the condemnation under that section, if Judgment could be obtained thereon separately, ought to succeed.

We think, however, that to obtain Judgment it would be necessary to appeal generally, and that it might be very difficult to obtain a separate Judgment as to the condemnation under clause 3109.

On the whole, we do not think that there is such sufficient probability of attaining the object of an appeal as would warrant the prosecution of the appeal at the public cost.

We have, &c.

Annex.

BEHRING SEA AWARD ACT, 1894.

Draft Order in Council.

WHEREAS by "The Behring Sea Award Act, 1894," it is enacted that Her Majesty the Queen in Council may make Orders for carrying into effect the provisions of the Behring Sea Arbitration Award set out in the first Schedule to that Act, and therein referred to as the scheduled provisions:

And whereas by Article 3 of "The Behring Sea Award Order in Council, 1894," Her Majesty ordered that until arrangements for giving further effect to Articles 4 and 7 of the said scheduled provisions should have been made between Her Majesty and the Government of the United States, the provisions contained in that Article should have effect:

And whereas arrangements have been made for giving further effect to the said Articles, and for regulating during the present year the fishing for fur-seals in accordance with the said scheduled provisions; and it is expedient that effect should be given to those arrangements by an Order in Council under the said Act:

Now, therefore, &c.:—

1. On the application of the owner of any British sailing-vessel intended to be employed in fur-seal fishing under the provisions of the recited Act, a Secretary of State may, if satisfactory evidence as required by the said Article 7 has been given by such owner of the fitness of the men to be employed by him on the said vessel in the said fishing, grant a special licence in the form in the Schedule hereto, authorizing that vessel for the present year to fish for fur-seals during the period in the manner and in the waters in which fur-seal fishing is allowed by the recited Act; and the said special licence, when so granted, shall be carried on board the said vessel at all times while so employed.

2. Every British sailing-vessel provided with a special licence under this Order or the recited Order, or which, under the recited Order, is deemed to have been so provided, shall show under her national colours a flag, not less than 4 feet square, of two equal triangular pieces, yellow and black, joined from the right-hand upper corner of the fly to the left-hand lower corner of the luff, the part above and to the left to be black, and the part to the right and below to be yellow.

3. If, in the case of any vessel, there is any contravention of these Regulations, the Secretary of State, whether any penalty has been recovered under the recited Act or not, may revoke the special licence.

4. Article 3 of the recited Order is hereby repealed, without prejudice, however, to any authorization given thereunder.

5. This Order may be cited as "The Behring Sea Award Order in Council (No. 2), 1894," and the recited Order and this Order may together be cited as "The Behring Sea Award Orders in Council, 1894."

And the Right Honourable the Earl of Kimberley, K.G., and the Most Honourable the Marquis of Ripon, K.G., two of Her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, and the Lords of the Admiralty, are to give the necessary directions herein as to them respectively appertain.

SCHEDULE.

FORM OF SPECIAL LICENCE.

Behring Sea Award Act, 1894; Behring Sea Award Orders in Council, 1894.

Special Licence.

Whereas the British sailing-vessel is intended to be employed during the present year in fishing for fur-seals under the provisions of "The Behring Sea Award Act, 1894:"

And whereas A.B., the owner [or A.B. and others, owners] of the said vessel, have given satisfactory evidence of the fitness of the men who are to be employed on board the said vessel in the said fishing:

Now, therefore, in pursuance of the above-mentioned Act and Orders in Council, I hereby authorize the said vessel for the present year to be employed in fur-seal fishing during the period of time in the manner and in the waters in which fur-seal fishing is allowed by the above-mentioned Act.

This special licence is subject to revocation in case of any contravention of the above-mentioned Act or Orders in Council.

Given under my hand, this day of , 1894.

No. 81.

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, August 3, 1894.

Proposed Convention for settlement of Behring Sea claims of Brit. subjects.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Earl of Kimberley, the papers quoted in the accompanying list, which relate to a proposed Convention for the settlement of the Behring Sea claims brought forward by British subjects, which, by mutual arrangement between Her Majesty's Government and that of the United States, were to be satisfied as soon as the arrangements for giving effect to the Award of the Behring Sea Arbitration Tribunal had been completed.

This condition having been fulfilled, it was arranged that Her Majesty's Ambassador should conduct the negotiations for the Convention at Washington, and on the 19th June last he forwarded a rough draft of a Convention for the settlement of these claims (Paper A).

This draft was referred to Her Majesty's Secretary of State for the Colonies, who at once communicated by telegraph with the Canadian Government on the subject.

The result of these communications will be found in the letter from the Colonial Office of the 4th ultimo (Paper B), and from this communication it will be seen that the Canadian Government considered the draft Convention acceptable except as to the proposal for the deduction from the claims for the expenses of the Commission.

In the meanwhile, Mr. Gresham had prepared a counter-draft of Convention, based on the original draft of Sir Julian Pauncefote. This will be found inclosed in his Excellency's despatch No. 155 of the 17th ultimo (Paper C).

This counter-draft contains variations of a more or less important character. Alterations occur in the third and fourth recitals, which Sir J. Pauncefote thinks do not appear open to objection.

Article I varies the terms of the corresponding Article of Sir J. Pauncefote's draft, but not the substance.

Article III provides that no compensation shall be paid if it be proved that the vessel was wholly or in part the actual property of a citizen of the United States.

Sir J. Pauncefote criticizes these alterations at length in his despatch above referred to, and also deals with the United States' view with regard to the expenses of the Commission.

Further despatches from Her Majesty's Ambassador, Nos. 154, 159, and 161 of the 17th, 20th, and 24th ultimo, are also inclosed (Papers D, E, and F), explaining additional alterations which it has been found necessary to make in various Articles of the Convention.

On the 24th and 27th ultimo the Colonial Office (Papers G and H) forwarded telegrams from the Governor-General of Canada remonstrating against the proposed change in the fourth recital of the draft Convention, and also against the qualification which it is proposed to insert at the end of the IIIrd Article.

The whole correspondence having been referred to Her Majesty's Secretary of State for the Colonies, a letter was received from the Colonial Office on the 1st instant (Paper I) stating that, with regard to the modification of the fourth recital proposed in Mr. Gresham's counter-draft, Lord Ripon presumes that it is not the intention of the United States to raise any questions as to their liability beyond those distinctly reserved in the first paragraph of the Finding of Facts annexed to the decision of the Tribunal, viz., the amount of damages and the question of the nationality of the owner of the vessel, which were withdrawn from the Tribunal by consent. He thinks it would be well, however, to prevent any question being raised, that the points which are left to be determined by the Commission to be appointed under the proposed Convention should be distinctly specified, and he accordingly suggests that the reservations mentioned in the first paragraph of the Finding of Facts should be inserted in the Recital.

A copy of the Recital, with the suggested amendments underlined, is inclosed.

With regard to the further amendment suggested in this Recital and in Article I, the Colonial Office state that it appears to Lord Ripon that the word "subject" might exclude persons bonâ fide domiciled and carrying on business within the British Empire, but not naturalized British subjects, and he presumes that Lord Kimberley will agree with him that such persons are to some extent entitled to the protection of Great Britain, except possibly so far as the Power of which they are subjects is concerned. This position has constantly been taken up by the United States in the case of persons domiciled though not naturalized in that country, and Lord Ripon does not conceive that it is likely to be contested by them. The words "in Behring Sea" in this Recital and Article I would exclude the case of the "Pathfinder," referred to in the note to the Finding of Facts.

With regard to Article III of the counter-draft, Lord Ripon is of opinion that it is no part of the duty of Her Majesty's Government to obtain compensation for citizens of the United States, but he sees no reason why the whole of a claim should be rejected on the ground that a citizen of the United States may have been partially interested in the vessel or venture, and he suggests, therefore, that if the United States' Government cannot be induced to abandon altogether, as Sir J. Pauncefote thinks possible, the addition made by Mr. Gresham to Article III of the draft Convention, it should be modified as shown in the inclosed copy.

The papers inclosed in the penultimate paragraph of the letter from the Colonial Office are inclosed for convenience of reference (Paper J).

A telegram (Paper K) just received from Sir J. Pauncefote, recording a conversation with Mr. Gresham with regard to the amendments, is also inclosed.

I am to request that you will take the papers transmitted herewith into your consideration, and that you will favour Lord Kimberley with your opinion as to whether the Convention, as amended, is such as can properly be concluded, and would provide for the consideration of all the claims which Her Majesty's Government are entitled to put forward in virtue of the decision of the Arbitration Tribunal and the Finding of Facts. His Lordship would also be glad to be favoured with any general observations which you may have to offer on the case.

I have, &c.

Report.

In our opinion, and having regard specially to the last telegram (K) from Sir Julian Pauncefote, it is not necessary or desirable to introduce into the Recital the words suggested in the draft sent to us and underlined, beginning: "i.e., in so far as regards," and ending "not considered by the Tribunal."

In regard to the words "by British subjects in Behring Sea" appearing in the draft of Recital, and the words "of British subjects for injuries sustained by them in Behring Sea," we think these words ought to be omitted.

In our opinion no claims can be put forward before the Commission which are not of the class contemplated by the Treaty and the Award and findings of the Tribunal of Arbitration, and this is effected by the language of Sir Julian Pauncefote's original draft. It may be doubtful whether the words "by British subjects" and "of British subjects," objected to by Lord Ripon, would not limit the reference. The words "in Behring Sea" are also objectionable, because they would exclude such cases as the "Pathfinder," referred to in the Finding of Facts and other cases.

In regard to Article III, we understand from telegram (K) that Mr. Gresham is willing to have words, in accordance with the first paragraph of the Finding of Facts, substituted for those previously proposed by him, and to leave it to the Commission to say what ought to be done in regard to cases of vessels owned wholly or in part by citizens of the United States. We consider that the proposal of Mr. Gresham should be accepted.

We have appended words which appear to us to carry out Mr. Gresham's proposal as we understand it, and which would be substituted for the last part of Article III:—

"But the said Commissioners shall determine whether any and what compensation shall be awarded for the search, seizure, detention, or condemnation of any vessel, or of property on board thereof or appurtenant thereto, where such vessel was wholly or in part the actual property of a citizen of the United States."

No. 1. [Colonial Office.]

[February 14, 1895.]

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquess of Ripon.

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, February 14, 1895.

Exercise of legal jurisdiction in protected territories adjacent to Gold Coast Colony.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Robert Meade's letter of the 26th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to ask our consideration of the accompanying correspondence relating to the exercise of legal jurisdiction in the protected territories adjacent to the Gold Coast Colony.

Sir Robert Meade also transmitted two Reports relating to the Protectorate of the Gambia, dated the 14th March and the 13th April, 1894, and requested that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion whether it would be proper for your Lordship to address to the Governor a despatch in the terms of the draft inclosed in his letter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken the papers into our consideration, and have the honour to

Report—

That, in our opinion, it would be proper for your Lordship to address to the Governor a despatch in the terms of the draft inclosed, and which we have initialled.

The legal position asserted in that draft appears to us to be sound at the present day, though it is a departure from some opinions of our predecessors. See Reports of Law Officers of the 11th December, 1884; 10th August, 1885; 21st April, 1886; 29th June, 1887; 20th April, 1888; and 30th April, 1891.

We believe it has been the view of Germany and France that the existence of a Protectorate in an uncivilized country imports the right to assume whatever jurisdiction over all persons may be needed for its effectual exercise. This view has been combated by Her Majesty's Government as late as 1888 in a despatch to the German Government, and the British contention appears to have been that in regard to natives the jurisdiction of the Protecting Power depended upon the express terms of the Treaty with the native Sovereign, and in regard to civilized foreigners on the consent of their own Sovereign.

We consider, however, that this country has within the last ten years been assimilating its practice to that of Germany and France, as pointed out by Mr. Hall ("Foreign Jurisdiction of the British Crown," Part III, cap. 3), and that the view of those nations is the true view. Accordingly we have thought it right, while agreeing in the terms of the inclosed despatch, to draw attention to the fact that it constitutes an acceptance of a legal doctrine not hitherto unequivocally accepted by Great Britain.

We have, &c.

Draft of Despatch to Governor Sir B. Griffith.

(Confidential.)

Downing Street, January , 1895.

Sir,

I RECEIVED in due course Mr. Hodgson's Confidential despatch of the 14th February last on the subject of Her Majesty's jurisdiction in the protected territory of Kwahu. Similar questions were at the time under consideration with reference to other parts of Africa, notably to Matabeleland, in which the power of the Ruling Chief Lobengula had recently been broken by force of arms, and the death of that Chief had followed. I accordingly deferred the answer to Mr. Hodgson's despatch, which I regret has since unfortunately been overlooked.

2. The result of the events in Matabeleland was to leave that country without a native Ruler, the country was under Her Majesty's protection, it was in the hands of a British Company, and no authority existed except that of British officers; it was therefore necessary that Her Majesty should take measures to make her protection effective in the interests of all persons within the country, and for that purpose should provide by Order in Council for the administration of the country while not assuming the sovereignty of it. This has accordingly been done by Order in Council, dated the 18th July, 1894, of which a copy is inclosed for your information, and the administration of affairs is by it delegated to the British South Africa Company.

3. The principle which governs these cases is that the existence of a Protectorate in an uncivilized country carries with it a right on the part of the Protecting Power to exercise within that country such authority and jurisdiction, in short, such of the attributes of sovereignty as are required for the due discharge of the duties of a Protector both for the purpose not only of protecting the natives from the subjects of civilized Powers, and such subjects from the natives and from each other, but also for protecting the natives from the grosser forms of ill-treatment and oppression by their Rulers, as from the raids of slave-dealers and marauders. It then becomes a question of fact, what are the powers which in any particular case it is proper for the Protector to assert?

4. This principle has become more fully recognized during the recent development of affairs in Africa, and applying it to the question raised by the Chief Justice in the case transmitted in your Confidential despatch of the 10th February, 1893, I do not, on further consideration, feel satisfied with the answer which I returned in my Confidential despatch of the 30th May, 1893. It is true that the Treaty with Kwahu does not in express terms confer legal jurisdiction, but it creates a Protectorate, and one of the results of that Protectorate is that Her Majesty acquired the right of establishing Courts of Justice within its borders, and of administering justice so far as circumstances may render it desirable that she should do so.

5. As I pointed out in my Confidential despatch of the 19th October, 1893, the combined effect of the Order in Council of the 6th August, 1874, and of section 12 of the Supreme Court Ordinance of 1876, has been to vest in the Supreme Court all the civil and criminal jurisdiction exercisable by Her Majesty in the Protectorate; and it appears to me that it would have been more correct to answer the question of the Chief Justice by saying that the Supreme Court does possess civil and criminal jurisdiction in Kwahu. And, indeed, my despatch of the 19th October, 1893, pointed to the same conclusion. But the existence of this jurisdiction does not necessarily oust the jurisdiction of the Native Courts, though I should hope that the purer administration of the British Court will, in time, of itself supplant the methods of the Native Courts, of which Mr. Phillips draws so black a picture in his Report which Mr. Hodgson transmitted in his Confidential despatch of the 3rd February, 1894.

6. How far it may be judicious in any given cases for the Court to decline to exercise its jurisdiction is another matter. As regards the subjects of civilized States there can be no question, for no other Court is capable of dealing with them. As regards the natives, the exercise of jurisdiction by the Supreme Court, or by Commissioners under the Supreme Court Ordinance, must depend upon circumstances; but the policy of the Government and of the Courts should be to assert jurisdiction whenever it is possible to do so, and to encourage the natives in every way to seek redress in the British Courts. If, therefore, natives apply to a Court for summonses, they should, I consider, be granted, unless there are special circumstances which render such a course undesirable in any given case—as in the case of Abram v. Abankwa, where the King specially desired that the matter should be settled by native jurisdiction.

7. In the case of the murderer Esono, to which Mr. Hodgson refers in the despatch under acknowledgment, I feel no doubt that the case was properly tried in the Supreme Court; the accused was sent down by the King with a request that he might be tried, and, under such circumstances, the Court could hardly have refused to exercise its jurisdiction.

8. I agree in thinking that it would be desirable to extend the Native Jurisdiction Ordinance to Kwahu, if it were possible to do so with effect. But in the present condition of the country I do not feel satisfied that the King and his Chiefs would be willing to accept its provisions, especially those of section 18, which would have the effect of depriving them of their existing jurisdiction; and it is obviously undesirable to endeavour to apply that Ordinance to a territory before that territory is ready to receive it. You should, however, keep the subject in view, in the hope that circumstances may alter, and that its introduction may become practicable and effective.

9. In conclusion, I have to inform you that the draft of this despatch has been submitted to and approved by the Law Officers of the Crown.

I am, &c.

Gentlemen,

Foreign Office, March 27, 1895.

Claims of Captain Chaddock against Transvaal and Portuguese Govts. relative to his discovery of mouth of Limpopo.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Earl of Kimberley, the papers noted in the accompanying list, relating to certain claims which have been made by Captain G. A. Chaddock against the Transvaal and Portuguese Governments, as well as against the British South Africa Company, in connection with his alleged discovery of a channel admitting the access of deep-draught vessels across the bar at the mouth of the River Limpopo on the East Coast of Africa.

The claims are five in number, and will be found set forth at length on p. 17 of Inclosure No. 1 in Messrs. Layton and Springmann's letter of the 12th ultimo.

From the terms of the letter itself it appears that Claim No. 2, viz., that against the British South Africa Company, is likely to be amicably settled, and it is therefore unnecessary to refer further to it.

Claim No. 4 arises out of a verbal Concession alleged to have been granted by Omzeila, Chief of Gazaland, in April 1884. In the absence of any written evidence, Lord Kimberley is not disposed to discuss the question of its validity; consequently, Claim No. 5, which arises out of the alleged Concession, can equally be dismissed.

The claims numbered 1 and 3 remain to be dealt with.

With regard to the former, Captain Chaddock contends:—

(a.) That he was the discoverer of the penetrability of the Limpopo from the sea.

(b.) That he communicated this secret in the strictest confidence to the Transvaal Government.

(c.) That they, without either his knowledge or consent, revealed the secret to the Portuguese Government.

(d.) And lastly, that this secret was of great importance and benefit to both Governments.

The opinion of Dr. Tristram, Q.C., was taken by the claimant on these points, and will be found at p. 23 of Inclosure No. 1 in Messrs. Layton and Springmann's letter.

Captain Chaddock is advised that, being without a legal remedy to redress his wrong, he should apply to Her Majesty's Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs to take such steps as his Lordship may deem necessary with a view to inducing the Portuguese and Transvaal Governments to give him redress, and, failing their doing so, to take steps to secure the claim being submitted to arbitration.

Dr. Tristram's opinion in regard to the third item of claim, namely, that for a pecuniary recognition for the discovery of the access to the Limpopo, is given on pp. 25 and 26, and is to the effect that, though the facts do not in law entitle Captain Chaddock to compensation for his expenditure and meritorious services, yet that the principle which obtains among civilized nations of making considerable payments to discoverers when their discoveries have conduced to the material benefit of their country would apply to discoveries relating to rivers in like manner as to discoveries relating to known but unexplored regions.

I am to request that you will take the papers transmitted herewith into your consideration, and will favour Lord Kimberley with your opinion as to whether Captain Chaddock has successfully established his case under Claim No. 1 either against the Transvaal Government or the Portuguese Government, or both; and whether, if so, it should form a subject for diplomatic intervention on the part of Her Majesty's Government, or whether he should be left to seek his remedy in the ordinary Courts of Law of the countries in question.

I am further to inquire whether, in your opinion, Her Majesty's Government would be justified in appealing to the Portuguese Government in support of Captain Chaddock's claim under No. 3 to a reward for his discoveries on the Limpopo.

I am to inclose a Memorandum which will show the circumstances in which Captain Chaddock has already appealed to Her Majesty's Government in connection with other points arising out of his visit to the Limpopo, and the reasons for which it was decided that the support of Her Majesty's Government could not be afforded him; together with copies of two Treaties which bear on the subject, viz., the Additional Convention between Great Britain and Portugal for the prevention of the Slave Trade of the 28th July, 1817, and the Treaty between Great Britain and Portugal defining their respective spheres of influence in Africa of the 11th June, 1891.

In the first of these it will be seen that the territory possessed by the Crown of Portugal on the East Coast of Africa south of the Equator is recognized as comprising that lying between Cape Delgado and the Bay of Lourenço Marques. The Limpopo is situated within this territory.

In Article XII of the second Treaty—that of 1891—the sovereignty of Portugal over the Limpopo is expressly admitted.

I am to add that Lord Kimberley will be glad to be favoured with any observations which you may desire to offer, in addition to your opinion upon the points specifically submitted in this letter on the papers generally.

I am, &c.

Report.

1. In our opinion there is evidence that the Transvaal Government, contrary to their undertaking, disclosed to the Portuguese Government the secret which had been confided to them by Captain Chaddock.

We doubt whether, if that evidence were sifted, it would prove sufficient to maintain a claim for damages in a British Court, assuming that such Court had jurisdiction in the case; but, if reliable, it is a matter for the Transvaal Courts, who, according to Captain Chaddock's legal advisers in the Transvaal, have jurisdiction to determine it. We do not consider that the apprehension of injustice at the hands of these Courts warrants any diplomatic intervention on the part of Her Majesty's Government, and we think that Captain Chaddock should be left to his legal remedy in the Transvaal.

We do not see any ground of claim against the Portuguese Government for utilizing, if they did utilize, the information imparted to them by the Transvaal Government. It cannot be assumed that they were conscious parties to any breach of faith, and it was natural and legitimate on their part to take advantage of the passage which was disclosed to them.

2. That there is no claim of right on the part of a discoverer to a reward for his discovery.

Governments to whom the labours of a private person have proved beneficial may, and no doubt do at times, bestow rewards as a matter of favour and bounty. It appears probable that Captain Chaddock did make an useful discovery, but we do not consider that Her Majesty's Government would be justified in advancing any claim on his behalf against any Government, though, if it were thought fit, the merits of Captain Chaddock in this matter might be recommended to the favourable consideration of Portugal.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, May 23, 1895.

Navigation of Niger by French gun-boat "Ardent."

I HAVE the honour, by the direction of the Earl of Kimberley, to submit to you the following observations in regard to the visit of the French gun-vessel "Ardent," in December last, to the River Niger, where she still remains.

The position of the River Niger as regards freedom of navigation is laid down in the General Act of the Berlin Conference of the 26th February, 1885 (Paper A), to which Great Britain, France, and other European Powers, with the United States of America, were parties.

It is stated in the preamble of that Act that among the objects which the Powers had in view was the wish "to assure to all nations the advantages of free navigation on the two chief rivers of Africa flowing into the Atlantic Ocean." These rivers were the Congo and the Niger.

The General Act accordingly contains Acts of Navigation for these rivers. That for the Niger is thus described in Article 5 of the preamble to the General Act:—

"An Act of Navigation for the Niger, which, while likewise having regard to local circumstances, extends to this river and its affluents the same principles as set forth in Articles CVIII and CXVI of the Final Act of the Congress of Vienna" (see Paper B).

The Act of Navigation for the Niger is contained in Chapter V of the General Act, Articles XXVI to XXXIII inclusive.

Article XXVI commences by stating that "The navigation of the Niger, without excepting any of its branches and outlets, is and shall remain entirely free for the merchant-ships of all nations equally, whether with cargo or in ballast, for the transportation of goods and passengers. It shall be regulated by the provisions of this Act of Navigation, and by the Rules to be made in pursuance of this Act."

It will be observed that the stipulation is confined to merchant-vessels, and that no allusion is made to national ships.

Articles XXX and XXXI contain the acceptance by Great Britain and France, in their respective portions of the river, of the obligations imposed by the Act in regard to the maintenance of free navigation and the protection of traders.

The position of affairs in the River Niger at the present moment is given at length in the accompanying Memorandum by Sir C. Hill (Paper C), to which a map is attached.

It will, however, be sufficient for the purposes of this reference to state that Great Britain holds both banks of the whole of the lower course of the river, while France has territories on its upper banks, between which and the British Protectorate the navigation from the mouth is stopped by rapids; and has access, by an Agreement with Germany, of which no official recognition has yet been notified by this country, to the upper waters of the Benué, an affluent of the main river, at Bifara, where, however, no station has as yet been established. Bifara is only accessible by boats of very shallow draught.

On the 11th June, 1885, the accompanying Notice (Paper D) was circulated to the Parties to the Berlin Act, by which the Protectorate of Her Majesty was declared over the districts in the Gulf of Guinea therein referred to. They are shown in the map attached to Paper C.

The facts as to the "Ardent" are as follows:—

On the 6th December the Niger Company wrote to say that a French gun-boat, the "Ardent," had passed up the Forcados branch of the Niger and got stranded at Aboh (see map in Paper C).

On the following day Lord Dufferin was instructed, by telegraph, to ascertain from the French Government if the vessel's proceedings were authorized.

And on the 13th he reported that the Commander of the vessel had entered the Niger without permission, and would be severely blamed.

Instructions were sent that the vessel was to redescend the river, and on these terms the Niger Company consented to lend every assistance.

This was, however, refused by the officer in command, and it was not till he received definite orders from the senior officer of the "Mésange" that he consented to recognize the Company's officials. Meantime, Her Majesty's ship "Barrosa" proceeded to his assistance. It was the opinion of Commander Marx, R.N., that with the means at his disposal he could get the vessel into deep water; but the French officer refused to have the ship moved, alleging that he considered her safer as she lay, and the vessel remains where she was. It is, however, right to say that there has never been enough water to enable her to leave the river.

On the 23rd January Lord Dufferin reported that M. Faure had referred to the action of the Commander of the "Ardent" as not only unauthorized, but even contrary to discipline.

On the 10th February, 1895, Lord Dufferin conveyed the thanks of the French Government for the assistance rendered by Her Majesty's Government, and the Company has received the thanks of the French Government for their help.

Paper E consists of a Memorandum drawn up in this Office respecting the general principles of international law regarding the freedom of navigation of rivers by merchant-vessels, and also the right of national ships to avail themselves of stipulations for freedom of navigation.

I am to request that you will take the papers transmitted herewith into your consideration, and that you will favour the Earl of Kimberley, at your earliest convenience, with your opinion as to the position which Her Majesty's Government would, from a legal standpoint, be justified in maintaining in case of a contention on the part of the French Government that the "Ardent" is entitled to enter the Niger without the assent of Great Britain as the Riverain Power.

I am, &c.

Report.

From a legal standpoint Her Majesty's Government would be entitled to maintain that the "Ardent," being a war-ship, is not at liberty to enter the Niger without the assent of Great Britain. Trading-vessels of foreign Powers may unquestionably navigate this river by virtue of the Berlin Act, but that Act is wholly limited to commercial navigation, and there is in our judgment no warrant in international law for a claim on the part of France to send war-ships into the rivers of another Power, even though those rivers be the only access by water to French possessions.

In this case there are two peculiar features. The first is that, as we understand the facts, it is impossible, because of the existence of rapids, for the "Ardent" to reach French possessions by way of the Niger, which would make any claim on the part of that vessel still more untenable. The second is that the riparian territories through which the Niger flows south of the French possessions are in part, if not wholly, under the Protectorate of Great Britain, and therefore not in a full sense British dominions. We do not, however, consider that this fact makes any difference for the purpose in hand. A Protectorate, especially in uncivilized countries, involves a right in the Protecting Power to exercise whatever military or naval authority may be needed for preventing foreign intrusion. And the Berlin Act, in Article XXX, recognizes in Great Britain a right to make conditions for the navigation of rivers in her protected territories, even as regards commerce.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, June 4, 1895.

Proceedings of French vessel "Faji" in Niger.

IN connection with my letter of the 23rd ultimo with reference to the case of the "Ardent," I have the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Earl of Kimberley, the accompanying papers, which relate to the entrance into the Forcados branch of the River Niger of a steam-launch named the "Faji," and of the subsequent proceedings which have taken place with regard to her.

It appears from Inclosure 2 in the Niger Company's letter of the 22nd ultimo (Paper A) that the "Faji," together with a barge owned by Messrs. Witt and Busch, of Lagos, had been chartered by M. Weyer, Lieutenant of the "Ardent," to carry stores to that vessel in the Niger.

When Mr. McTaggart, the senior Executive officer of the Royal Niger Company, first sighted the "Faji" on the 17th March she was above the Company's guard-ship at Gana Gana, having passed it without calling. The officer on board the "Faji" was informed by Mr. McTaggart that it was necessary she should report herself to the guard-ship, and the "Faji" then turned round and anchored off the guard-ship, hoisting the French flag as she did so.

An officer from the guard-ship was sent on board the "Faji" to ask that the latter's clearance papers from Gana Gana might be sent to the guard-ship. Shortly afterwards M. Weyer came on board the guard-ship, and stated that he had no clearance papers, and had not cleared at Gana Gana. He refused to produce his invoices, but showed his charter-party with Messrs. Witt and Busch, and protested against being stopped, remarking that "the Niger was as free as the British Channel."

An officer and pilot were placed on board the "Faji" by Mr. McTaggart, and she was taken down to Gana Gana and anchored there.

A letter was written to M. Weyer by Mr. McTaggart giving him notice that, in accordance with the regulations of the Company, the "Faji" and barge were to remain in arrest at Gana Gana until their release was ordered.

From Inclosure 3 in Paper (A) it will be seen that, during the absence of Mr. McTaggart, Captain d'Agoult, the Commander of the "Ardent," brought a force down from that vessel, and in spite of written protests from the Customs authorities at Gana Gana, got up steam on the "Faji" and broke her arrest.

On being sighted below that station by Mr. McTaggart on his return on the night of the 3rd April, the "Faji" was hailed, but no reply was returned from her. At daylight Captain d'Agoult hove anchor on the "Faji," and proceeded on his way in spite of the protests of the Niger authorities, who, however, in consequence of their desire to avoid international complications, refrained from employing their superior force to stop her.

The reference which was addressed to you from this Department on the 23rd ultimo, relating to the case of the "Ardent," dealt with the rights of national ships belonging to Powers other than the Protecting Power in the riverain waters of a Protectorate, but the Memorandum which was therein inclosed deals also with the general question of the right of a merchant-vessel in a river open to freedom of navigation to disregard the Regulations of the Riverain Power.

As regards the special question of the Niger, I am to inclose, for your information, the Protocols of the Berlin Conference (Paper B).

On p. 139 and the following pages is the Report of the Commission appointed by the Conference which examined the draft of the Act of Navigation of the Niger. The Report explains the principles on which that Act was drawn. I am to call special attention to the preamble on p. 139, to the remarks on Article II of the Congo Navigation Act on p. 140, and to the passages specially dealing with the Niger Act on pp. 149 to 151.

I am further to inclose Regulations of the Company (Paper C), which affect the question of the stoppage of the "Faji."

Regulation No. XI of 1886 refers to vessels entering at Akassa, which is near the mouth of the Nun branch, one of the two great outlet branches of the Niger. Regulation No. XXXVII, 1892, provides for the alternative of vessels entering and clearing at Gana Gana, near the mouth of the other great outlet known as the Forcados branch, up which, as has been stated, the "Faji" entered.

In regard to these Regulations, I am to inclose an extract from the French newspaper "Le Temps" (Paper D), in which, while the facts are in the main admitted, it is argued that the arrest of the vessel was inconsistent with the stipulations of the XXVIIth Article of the Berlin Act that the navigation should not be exposed to any "relâche forcée."

In reference to this contention, which it is advisable to consider, as it may eventually be adopted by the French Government, I am to observe that the first paragraph of Article XXVII says that the navigation shall not be subjected to any restriction or charge ("redevance") based merely on the fact of navigation, and that the second paragraph provides that it shall not be subjected to any "obligation" on account of (among other causes) "relâche forcée."

I am to call attention to the fact that in the preamble to the Act it is stated that the principles applied to the navigation of the Niger are the same as those recorded in Articles 108 to 116 of the Final Act of the Vienna Congress of 1815 (see Paper (B), p. 151), and that Article 114 of that Act stipulates that there shall nowhere be established duties on account of "relâche forcée."

The inference would appear to be that "obligation" in the Berlin Act is synonymous with "droits" in the Final Act of Vienna, and that the only restriction imposed by either Act on the Riverain Power is that it may not impose duties for "relâche forcée" in one of its harbours or ports of entry. It should be observed that the words "relâche forcée" have been variously rendered in the English versions of the different Acts. At p. 152 of Paper (B) the quotation from the translation of Article 14 of the Vienna Act gives the meaning as "forced harbour duties." At p. 140 of the same paper the translation of the draft Article II of the Berlin Act, which was being dealt with by the Commission, is "entry in distress"; whilst in the translation at p. 311 of the Article as finally adopted in the General Act, the words are translated by "compulsory entry into port." The more correct interpretation is believed to be "entry in distress." It has been ascertained that the phrase is in common use in French charter-parties and in French policies of insurance, where it follows such words as "tempête, naufrage, échouement, abordage." Littré's "Dictionary" gives:—

"Relâche: Terme de marine, séjour momentané qu'on fait dans un port où l'on entre forcé par la tempête, par des avaries, ou par le besoin qu'a l'équipage de prendre du repos, de renouveler ses vivres ou de s'approvisionner d'eau."

I am to point out that in the present case of the "Faji" the right to freedom of transit, which has never been disputed by the Niger Company, and is provided for in its Regulation No. XL, was not raised, as neither the vessel nor its cargo were in transit.

I am to request that you will take the papers transmitted herewith into your consideration, and that you will favour the Earl of Kimberley at your earliest convenience with your opinion (1) as to whether the officer in charge of the "Faji" was justified in disregarding the Regulations for the navigation of the river which have been issued by the Royal Niger Company; and (2) whether there is anything in those Regulations inconsistent with the engagements entered into by this country at the Berlin Conference either as regards vessels entering the river in transit or as regards those not in transit. I am also to invite your opinion (3) as to the action of the Commander of the "Ardent" in releasing the "Faji" by force; and (4) further to ask for any general observations which you may have to offer on the case.

I have, &c.

Report.

1. In our opinion, the officer in charge of the "Faji" was not justified in disregarding the Regulations for the navigation of the river which have been issued by the Royal Niger Company.

The "Faji" was not entitled to any privileges beyond those common to trading vessels of all nations, and as such was bound to clear at Gana Gana and to produce invoices.

The fact that she was carrying stores to the "Ardent" did not enlarge her rights, for the "Ardent" was not entitled to enter the Niger without permission, and, even if such permission had been granted to the "Ardent," it would not have of itself conferred upon vessels chartered to supply her any exemption from compliance with the river Regulations. Compliance with these Regulations was necessary to enable the Niger Company's officers to ascertain her destination and character.

2. That we cannot perceive in those Regulations anything inconsistent with the engagements entered into by this country at the Berlin Conference, either as regards vessels entering the river in transit or as regards those not in transit.

We understand by the provision relating to "relâche forcée" that no vessel entering the Niger from stress of weather or other necessity shall pay any duty or impost for thus seeking refuge. This provision corresponds in substance and is closely similar in expression to Article 114 of the Vienna Act and Article XIV of the Berlin Act relating to the Congo.

We do not know why there is any difference in the wording, but the sense appears the same.

3. That the action of the Commander of the "Ardent" in releasing the "Faji" by force was unjustifiable. Even supposing that he might urge the plea of a necessity to obtain supplies (a necessity which could not have arisen but for his own illegal act in entering the river), there was no unconditional refusal by Mr. McTaggart to allow the "Faji" to proceed, but merely a demand for compliance with lawful Regulations, and it was the duty of the Commander of the "Ardent" to procure obedience to those Regulations instead of defying them. His action was wholly indefensible.

4. In the papers sent to us upon this occasion, it appears that vessels can navigate the Niger, or its affluents, to points beyond the British Protectorate. If that be so, the inference of fact, which we drew from the materials submitted to us when considering the case of the "Ardent," viz., that rapids would prevent her from ascending beyond the British Protectorate, may be an erroneous inference.

Extra-territorial jurisdiction in Congo Free State.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you herewith, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, the accompanying papers which relate to the question of the exercise of Her Majesty's extra-territorial jurisdiction within the territories of the Congo Free State.

By the provisions of the Convention between this country and the Congo State of the 16th December, 1884, of which a copy is annexed (Inclosure A), Consular jurisdiction over the persons and property of British subjects was specifically reserved by Her Majesty's Government. In 1890, however, it was urged by the Congo Government that a complete system of criminal, civil, and commercial justice had been established, and was then in full working order, and it was asked that, under these circumstances, and with a view to obviate similar claims on the part of other Powers, Her Majesty's Government would not press their claims to the maintenance of extra-territorial jurisdiction.

Some discussion followed on the subject, which is alluded to in the inclosed Memorandum (Inclosure B), with the result that on the 23rd April, 1890, Her Majesty's Minister at Brussels was instructed to inform the Congo State Government that Her Majesty's Government had decided not to exercise extra-territorial rights, though they did not abandon their right to resort to them should circumstances render it, in their opinion, necessary to do so. The British Consul in the Congo was accordingly informed that no Order in Council would be issued "at present" under the Foreign Jurisdiction Acts providing for the exercise of British civil and criminal jurisdiction in the Congo State, and that he should confine himself to the exercise of ordinary Consular duties, unless he should receive instructions to the contrary.

In the course of last year Her Majesty's Government had reason to complain of the manner in which justice was administered in the Congo Free State. Natives of the British West African Colonies who had been engaged as labourers for service on the Congo Railway in the course of construction, had, on their arrival in the Congo, been compelled against their will to serve as soldiers, and sent into the interior on military expeditions. They were in more than one instance cruelly treated, and were unable to obtain redress.

Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Brussels was, in consequence, instructed to remind the State authorities verbally in a despatch, of which a copy is inclosed (Inclosure C), that the right of Her Majesty's Government to claim extra-territoriality for British subjects was not withdrawn, but suspended, and that complaints had been received of undue harshness on the part of local Tribunals, which might, if they gained publicity, give rise to pressure for the annulment of the existing arrangement.

The information recently received respecting the execution of the British subject Charles Stokes shows such grave acts of injustice that Her Majesty's Government feel that it will now be incumbent on them to cancel the arrangement made in 1890, by which jurisdiction over British subjects was provisionally conceded to the Tribunals of the Congo Free State.

I am therefore to request that you will take the papers submitted to you herewith into your consideration, and that you will favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion as to the terms in which notice should be given to the Government of the Congo Free State of the intention of Her Majesty to resume therein the exercise of her extra-territorial jurisdiction.

In our opinion the notice to the Congo Government should refer to the terms of the Treaty of the 16th December, 1884, especially the Vth and VIth Articles, should state that Her Majesty's Government considers it expedient that the rights of extra-territorial jurisdiction thereby conferred should be brought into exercise, and should notify the Congo Government that Her Majesty's Government proposes now to take the steps necessary for this purpose.

We do not think it necessary to refer to the communications by which the exercise of these rights has been hitherto suspended.

Draft Postal Convention with Austria-Hungary. Amendments of Treasury Solicitor.

I HAVE the honour to inform you, by direction of the Earl of Kimberley, that his Lordship consulted the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury as to the modifications which should be introduced into the draft Postal Convention between Great Britain and Austria-Hungary in order to carry out the suggestions contained in your Report of the 12th December last.

The correspondence between the two Departments will be found at pp. 39 and 40 of the inclosed print (Paper A), and I am to request that you will be so good as to inform Lord Kimberley whether you concur in the alterations in Articles I and VI which have been suggested by the Treasury Solicitor, and are shown in italics in the accompanying Annex.

I am, however, to state, with reference to the proposed modification of Article I, sub-Article 7 (b), that, in his Lordship's opinion, it would be advisable to follow the exact wording of section 3 (2) (b) of "The Mail Ships Act, 1891," as regards the security to be given by Austro-Hungarian ships in British waters, and to ask the Austro-Hungarian Government to suggest an alternative wording to meet the case of British ships in Austro-Hungarian waters.

Report.

We concur in the alterations in Articles I and VI which have been suggested by the Treasury Solicitor and are shown in italics in the accompanying Annex, subject to the following observations:—

1. Article I (6), line 3.—We would suggest the insertion of the word "respectively" after the word "Austria-Hungary."

2. Article I (7) [b].—We consider that your Lordship's view might be carried out with advantage.

The point of our previous criticism was that, unless some alternative wording were inserted to meet the case of British ships in Austro-Hungarian waters, the securities to be deposited in Austria-Hungary would have to be British Government securities, which might not be acceptable in the view of the former State.

Annex.

Draft of proposed Postal Convention with Austria-Hungary, showing Modifications suggested by the Treasury Solicitor.

ARTICLE I.

2. Passengers on such packets who may not desire to go on shore during the vessel's stay in a port of either State may not be on any account taken from on board, except in the manner provided in this Article.

3. The local authorities may claim the expulsion from on board of persons wanted in pursuance of a regular warrant for any crimes or offences who may have taken refuge or embarked in mail-boats, and, in case of necessity, searches may be carried out on board such vessels by the competent authorities. The individuals in question shall then be handed over to them.

4. It is, however, agreed that the authorities shall not proceed on board at a port of either State where there is a Consulate or Vice-Consulate of the other State unless they have previously given notice at least one hour before the search to the Consulate or Vice-Consulate, in order that the Consul or Vice-Consul or his delegate may be present at the searches in question. The letter giving notice shall be addressed to the Consul or Vice-Consul, and shall state the exact hour of the intended search, and if the agents neglect either to appear in person or to be represented, the proceedings shall go on in their absence.

5. The execution of such measures shall not delay the departure of the vessel for more than an hour after the time of departure fixed in the time-tables of the Company, which must be duly communicated by the respective Companies to the authorities of each port of call.

6. The present Article shall not apply to packets intrusted with a mail service, and belonging to Companies or individuals subsidized by either State, until the High Court of the United Kingdom and a competent Court of Austria-Hungary have fixed the nature and amount of the security to be placed under the control of the respective Courts by the said Companies or individuals for the purposes of this Convention, and until a bond has been entered into, once for all, by the said Companies or individuals to satisfy, after due hearing and definite decision, the legal consequences of any liability incurred either by the captains of their packets or by the Companies or individuals themselves.

7. The aforesaid bond must be guaranteed either—

(a.) By the personal security of a surety accompanied by an adequate real security given by the surety to the amount fixed by the Court; or

(b.) By the payment or transfer into Court of cash or of securities of the Government of either State ~~the United Kingdom~~. Such payment or transfer into Court is to abide the law ~~of the country~~ relating to it of the country in which the payment or transfer is made, and to be to such amount as may be fixed by the Court.

ARTICLE II.

The packets of the two Administrations shall be at liberty to take on board, or land at the ports of the two countries at which they touch, whether regularly or accidentally, specie and gold and silver bullion, as well as passengers, of whatever nation they may be, with their wearing apparel or baggage, on condition that the captains of those packets shall submit to the Sanitary, Police, and Customs Regulations of those ports concerning the arrival and departure of travellers and merchandize.

ARTICLE III.

The packets of the two Administrations may enter and leave the ports of the two States at any hour of the day or night. They may also, if they think proper, without anchoring, embark or disembark the mails and passengers, in the roads or at the entrance of the harbours, so long as they observe the Regulations referred to in the preceding Article.

ARTICLE IV.

Whenever a packet carrying mails shall be compelled to put into any port of either of the two States other than that at which such packet ought to touch, the Administration on whose territory the said mails shall be landed shall use the most certain and expeditious means of forwarding them to their destination.

ARTICLE V.

In case of war between the two nations, the packets of the two Administrations shall continue their navigation, without impediment or molestation, until a notification is made on the part of either of the two Governments of the discontinuance of postal communications, in which case they shall be permitted to return freely, and under special protection, to their respective ports.

ARTICLE VI.

The captains of the packets engaged in the conveyance of the respective mails of the two Administrations are forbidden to take charge of any letter not included in those mails, with the exception, however, of despatches of their Governments, and of any letters which may be exempted by law from the exclusive privilege of conveyance vested in either Administration. They must take care that no letters are conveyed illegally by the crews or passengers, and they must give information in the proper quarter of any infringement which may be committed in this respect.

ARTICLE VII.

The Post Offices of Great Britain and Austria-Hungary shall determine by mutual agreement, in accordance with the conditions laid down in the Postal Union Convention of Vienna of the 4th July, 1891, the matters of detail connected with the execution of the present Convention, as well as all other arrangements deemed necessary for regulating the postal relations between the two countries.

ARTICLE VIII.

The Postal Administrations of the two countries are authorized to determine, by mutual consent, the conditions of the conveyance, by Austro-Hungarian services, of the mails to and from British Colonies not comprised in the Postal Union, as well as the conditions of the conveyance, by British services, of the mails of Austro-Hungarian origin destined for those Colonies, or passing in transit through their territories.

The same Administrations may also fix, by mutual consent, the rates of postage applicable to correspondence exchanged between Austria-Hungary on one side, and British Colonies not comprised in the Postal Union on the other side.

ARTICLE IX.

The present Convention shall be carried into effect as soon as possible, and it shall continue in force until one of the two Contracting Parties shall have announced to the other, one year in advance, its intention to terminate it.

ARTICLE X.

The stipulations of the present Convention shall be applicable to all the Colonies and possessions of Her Britannic Majesty, excepting to those hereinafter named, that is to say, except to—

India.
The Dominion of Canada.
Newfoundland.
The Cape.
Natal.
New South Wales.
Victoria.
Queensland.

Provided always that the stipulations of the present Convention shall be made applicable to any of the above-named Colonies or possessions on whose behalf notice to that effect shall have been given by Her Britannic Majesty's Representative at Vienna to the Government of Austria-Hungary within one year from the date of the signature of the present Convention.

ARTICLE XI.

The present Convention shall be ratified, and the ratifications shall be exchanged as soon as possible.

In witness whereof, the Undersigned have signed the present Convention, and have affixed thereto the seal of their arms.

Vexatious quarantine on "Twickenham." Claim of Messrs. Watts and Co. against Brazil.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, April 10, 1895.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Earl of Kimberley, to transmit to you the papers, noted on the accompanying list, respecting the claim put forward by Messrs. Watts, Watts, and Co. against the Brazilian Government on account of the treatment of the steam-ship "Twickenham."

The circumstances of the case are set out in the inclosure in the letter of the 13th ultimo from the above-mentioned firm, and are briefly as follows:—

The "Twickenham" left La Plata in the Argentine Republic on the 19th December last with a deck cargo of cattle for Rio de Janeiro, and arrived on the 25th of that month at the Brazilian quarantine station of Ilha Grande, where the quarantine authorities informed the master that the ship must perform eight days' quarantine. On the 30th, before the expiration of the eight days, a member of the crew was taken ill with symptoms of cholera, but recovered. On the 3rd January he is stated by the master to have had a "relapse," and to have died of "chills." Others of the crew appear to have been ailing with diarrhœaoid symptoms, and on the 17th January the cook died of cholera.

It thus appears that choleraic illness existed on board before the eight days quarantine had expired, and, in a country enforcing quarantine as a method of excluding all infection, the existence of the disease on board would be a valid reason for prolonging the duration of quarantine beyond the eight days originally imposed. This being so, it seems possible that no claim can with propriety be made on the Brazilian Government on account of the detention of the "Twickenham" beyond the 2nd January. The fact that no actual deaths from cholera had occurred up to that date would be immaterial, as the infection would be carried by the sick.

It appears, however, that the treatment of the "Twickenham" during the detention at the quarantine station, as set forth in the master's diary inclosed in the letter of the 13th ultimo from Messrs. Watts, Watts, and Co., was most inhuman, and may be held to be such as to warrant a claim being preferred on the Brazilian Government.

A quarantine station must certainly be considered as a place where ships detained can receive all necessary supplies, together with medical and other attention.

In the present case, however, no medical officer came on board the ship; no facilities were afforded for the treatment of the sick, either on board or in any hospital on shore; the cattle were not taken off the ship, and their presence on board for a prolonged period created most unhealthy conditions for the crew; from the 7th to the 14th January no food was supplied for the cattle, although the signal asking for food was flying all the time, and when the quarantine officials were, on two several occasions, asked to take a letter or telegram from the ship, they refused to do so, thus cutting her off from all communication with the consignees and others.

On the 27th January the cattle were taken off the ship after she had been at Ilha Grande thirty-four days.

I am to request you to take into consideration the papers transmitted with this letter, and to favour Lord Kimberley with your opinion as to whether any claim may and should be made against the Brazilian Government on behalf of Messrs. Watts, Watts, and Co., either (1) on account of the detention of the "Twickenham" beyond the period of eight days, or (2) on account of the treatment received at the quarantine station.

Should your answer to either question be in the affirmative, I am further to request you to favour his Lordship with an indication of the amount which should, in your opinion, be demanded, and of the basis of computation; and also with a statement of the grounds on which the claim may be most effectually urged on the Brazilian Government.

Finally, I am to ask that you will also favour Lord Kimberley with any general observations which may occur to you on the perusal of the papers now submitted, and which you think may be of assistance to his Lordship in dealing with the case.

I have, &c.

Report.

1. In our opinion, a claim should be made against the Brazilian Government on behalf of Messrs. Watts, Watts, and Co. on account of the detention of the "Twickenham," coupled with the treatment received at the quarantine station.

The statement of the captain is not very clear, but from all the documents we gather that this vessel was badly used.

2. That, under the circumstances, we consider the sum of 1,000*l.* would be a proper sum to claim. The case does not admit of a precise computation of damages. They cover the loss by detention of the ship, and compensation for the treatment of those on board. Probably 30*l.* a-day for twenty days would be a proper demurrage charge; the balance would represent compensation, which we presume would, if recovered, be distributable among the sufferers, or their relatives, at the discretion of Her Majesty's Government, for we do not suppose it would be desired to enable the owners to make a profit on the sufferings of the crew.

In naming this sum, we assume (what appears to be the case, though not explicitly stated) that the ship was not allowed to quit the port, or was unable to obtain the supplies necessary to enable her to quit it.

3. That we think the claim may be most effectually urged upon the ground that the treatment of this vessel was opposed to the practice of civilized nations, which, whether requiring quarantine or not, give medical relief and allow vessels to be supplied with necessary stores, as well as to communicate with the representatives of their country.

In this case, the health of her crew was still further endangered by a refusal to allow her to land her cargo of cattle.

It is quite true that there was ground to suspect cholera, which, in a quarantine country, might justify some extension of the eight days detention, but it is reasonable to suppose that the chances of a choleraic outbreak were aggravated, and that detention prolonged by the usage to which the ship was exposed.

If the port authorities neglect the duties of humanity, and illness follows, it is fair to impute the illness, in part at all events, to the neglect, though it is of course impossible to demonstrate that the one was the consequence of the other. Otherwise conduct of the most reprehensible character would pass with complete impunity.

British occupation of Trinidad Island.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, correspondence relating to the Island of Trinidad (South Atlantic), which was formally taken possession of in the name of Her Majesty, at the beginning of the present year, "as being uninhabited and not belonging to any Power."

I am also to inclose, for your consideration, in connection with this correspondence, the draft of a despatch which his Lordship proposes to address to Her Majesty's Minister at Rio de Janeiro, stating the grounds on which the annexation of the island by Her Majesty is justified and maintained.

I am to call your special attention to my Memorandum of the 5th August, 1895, which is the first paper in the collection, marked (A), and to the correspondence with the Portuguese Government in 1782 (pp. 18–22).

Lord Salisbury would be glad to be favoured, at your earliest convenience, with your opinion as to whether the doctrine and arguments contained in the draft despatch are tenable according to international law, or, if not, to what extent and in what respects you consider that they may advantageously be modified; and his Lordship would also be glad, at the same time, to be furnished with such general observations as you think may be useful to him in dealing with the case.

I have, &c.

(B.) General correspondence.
(C.) Draft to Mr. Phipps.

Report.

In our opinion the right of the British Government to Trinidad depends upon the fact that the island was unoccupied, and belonged to the territory of no State when possession was recently taken by the British Government.

It does not appear to us that much reliance can be placed upon the occupation of the island by Britain in the eighteenth century. On the remonstrance of Portugal the British force was withdrawn, and the island was garrisoned for a series of years by Portuguese troops. This would appear to have amounted to an admission by Great Britain of the Portuguese title to the island, followed by an effective occupation of the island by Portugal.

We would suggest that the passage on p. 7 of the draft despatch might, with advantage, be modified. The Brazilian case is not that the British title acquired in 1700 was lost by disuse, but that the British Government by their conduct in 1792 admitted that no title had been acquired by them.

The strength of the British case, in our opinion, rests, firstly, on the fact that there never has been any occupation of any sort of the island by Brazil, and that there is nothing to show that any title which Portugal had, passed to Brazil; and secondly, that the absence of any occupation by either Portugal or Brazil since 1795 is sufficient to show an abandonment of any territorial rights which existed before that date.

We would suggest that the first of these points should be brought out in the despatch.

There is, in our opinion, little to be added to the treatment of the second of these two points in the draft despatch. We would only observe that the passage cited from Vattel relates rather to the manner in which territory may be acquired than to the cessation of possession necessary to constitute abandonment of territory which has been acquired, and we would suggest that the citation of the passage from Hall should be made from the fourth edition, published this year, where the subject of abandonment is treated at pp. 120 and 121. The case of Santa Lucia, which is cited by Hall at p. 121, is very much in point, and perhaps reference might be made directly to that case in the despatch. The views stated in the despatch on this point appear to us to be in accordance with international law, and, having regard to the very great length of time since there was any occupation of the island, and its great distance from the coast of Brazil, it appears to us that there is strong ground for contending that it was abandoned. The occasional visits of Brazilian men-of-war count for nothing, as there were precisely similar visits by men-of-war of other nations. The alleged proposal to survey the island was never carried out, and the alleged Concessions were never acted upon. The question is not, in our opinion, merely whether the Portuguese or Brazilian Government expressly formed the intention of abandoning the island, but whether their conduct was not such that abandonment must be presumed to have taken place so as to confer a title on the British Government by occupation.

Draft of Despatch to Mr. Phipps, as submitted to Law Officers, and showing Amendments suggested by them.

Sir, Foreign Office, November , 1895.

THE interview I had with the Brazilian Minister on the 16th August led me to hope that a friendly solution of the difficulty which had arisen between Great Britain and Brazil in respect to the Island of Trinidad would not be difficult to find. The object of Her Majesty's Government in taking possession of the island was to facilitate the telegraphic communication of the world, and if that object could be equally well assured in any other manner they were willing to allow formal rights, which in other respects were of little or no practical value to fall into abeyance. But your despatch No. 140 of the 15th September holds out little hope that, in their present mood, the Brazilian Government will be willing to come to any arrangement on these terms.

It may be well, therefore, that I should state to you, for your guidance in any further conversations which may take place upon the question, the view which Her Majesty's Government take of their title to the Island of Trinidad.

It was represented to Her Majesty's late advisers that a Bill had been proposed by the Brazilian Government enabling them to take over compulsorily the cables laid along the Brazilian coast by the Western and Brazilian Telegraph Company. The Brazilian Government already raises a large contribution upon the messages which pass to the other States of South America over the cables which lie in the territorial waters along their coasts. This burden upon telegraphic communication would be capable of very considerable aggravation if the cables were compulsorily taken over by the Government. It was therefore proposed by the Telegraph Construction Company to make an alternative line from the Cape de Verde Islands by Ascension to Monte Video, which would bring the rest of South America into connection with Europe without passing through Brazil. But in order to lay such a cable it was necessary to use as a landing-place the uninhabited Island of Trinidad, situated some 700 miles from the Brazilian coast.

It was accordingly taken possession of under the orders of my predecessor in January last by Commander Foley, "as being uninhabited and not belonging to any Power;" and every proper formality was observed for the purpose of duly asserting the sovereign rights in the island which were vested from that time forth in Her Britannic Majesty.

The previous history of the island shows that for brief periods it has been occupied for scientific or for military purposes. It is believed to have been discovered by the pilot, Martin Vaz, in 1503; but there is no record of the fact of its discovery, nor of its having been taken possession of in the name of any power. In 1700 Dr. Halley visited it for astronomical purposes, and formally took possession of it in the name of His Britannic Majesty. In 1781 we find it occupied by an English force apparently for purposes connected with the war with Spain. We have records that the Portuguese Government objected to this occupation in 1782, claiming the island as their own. It was consequently evacuated under the orders of Lord Grantham, who apparently did not claim any British right over the island, but admitted that "it was contrary to Treaty that the coasts should be used for the purpose to which objection was taken." Later on in 1785 a small Portuguese garrison was found there by La Pérouse, and appears to have remained till 1795. Since that date the island has not been occupied by Portugal or Brazil, or any other Power, and it has remained for a century quite uninhabited. In 1825 the independence of Brazil was recognized under Treaty by Portugal; but the Island of Trinidad is not mentioned in that Treaty as part of the territory to be severed from Portugal. It is said, however, to have been referred to since that time as a dependency of Brazil in certain public documents.

The claim which is now made to the island by the Republic of Brazil depends on the validity which is held to attach to a mere paper occupation of the island divested of any pretension to actual use or habitation.

It should be borne in mind in discussing this question that Her Majesty's late Government did not found their right to annex the island upon the occupation of it by Dr. Halley or upon the priority of his title to the title subsequently acquired by the Portuguese.

The annexation directed by the Earl of Kimberley was, under his instructions, based by Commander Foley solely upon the fact that the island was "uninhabited and not belonging to any Power." Any title which may have existed at any previous period had been effaced by long disuse, and the island was at the disposal of any Power which might think fit to take it. All discussions which turn upon the character and intention of the various occupations of which the island was the subject during the eighteenth century are in a great measure irrelevant to the present controversy, and do not affect the claims on which Her Majesty's Government have acted. Whether the occupation of the island by Great Britain and Portugal during the last century did or did not confer upon them, or either of them, a valid sovereignty at the time, there is no doubt that it has been uninhabited, unoccupied, and ungoverned for 100 years previous to the present year, and therefore any sovereignty to which it may have been subject in the last century has lapsed.

The language of jurists is clear that a mere paper occupation, devoid of all effective character, will not preserve a claim to sovereignty over an indefinite number of years; and modern writers speak more emphatically in that sense than their predecessors.

The following passage from the fourth edition of Hall's "International Law" lays down the doctrine upon the subject which is generally accepted in the present day:—

"When an occupied territory is definitively abandoned, either voluntarily or in consequence of expulsion by savages or by a Power which does not attempt to set up a title for itself by conquest, the right to its possession is lost, and it remains open to occupation by other States than that which originally occupied it. But when occupation has not only been duly effected, but has been maintained for some time, abandonment is not immediately supposed to be definitive. If it has been voluntary, the title of the occupant may be kept alive by acts, such as the assertion of claim by inscriptions, which would be insufficient to confirm the mere act of taking possession; and even where the abandonment is complete, an intention to return must be presumed during a reasonable time. If it has been involuntary, the question whether the absence of the possessors shall or shall not extinguish their title depends upon whether the circumstances attendant upon and following the withdrawal suggest the intention, or give grounds for reasonable hope, of return. Where intention in this case is relied upon, it is evident that, as abandonment was caused by the superior strength of others who might interfere with return, a stronger proof of effective intention must be afforded them on an occasion of voluntary abandonment, and that the effect of a mere claim, based upon the former possession, if valid at all, will soon cease."

The most recent International Act bearing upon this subject—the Act of Berlin in 1885—formally requires from every Power claiming any portion of the coast of Africa that it shall govern effectively the territory which it claims. But apart from these broad considerations of general law, the case of Trinidad is marked by a very special feature. It is an island which could not support any considerable community of men, if it could support any; and by its situation and the character of its coast, it would be useless either for naval or military purposes. But from the progress of knowledge and enterprise in our time it has derived a novel and unique value. It is the only spot of the earth which can be used as a landing-place for a telegraphic cable south of the equator, crossing the Atlantic from the old world to the new. A telegraph wire laid direct over so long a distance without a break, as from Ascension to Monte Video, would need to be of a size which would make the enterprise on financial, if not on technical, grounds impracticable. Where by natural conditions the commodity and interests of vast populations depend upon a spot of the earth's surface being put to the use for which it has a special and singular aptitude, it is straining the right of sovereignty very far to say that the owners of this spot of earth shall have a right to forbid its use, and to withdraw it from the service of mankind.

* We think that this passage should be omitted or materially modified.—R. E. W., R. B. F.

It is true that without the help of Trinidad telegrams can avoid the monopoly of Brazil by taking a long and costly circuit through the United States. The injury threatened by the effort of Brazil to bar the use of the island as a telegraphic landing-place is certainly lessened by this consideration, but it still is grave enough to weigh heavily with Her Majesty's Government when they are asked to promote it by abandoning the possession to which on other grounds they believe this country to have a legitimate right.

Her Majesty's Government have made no claim with regard to the Island of Trinidad except to be allowed to devote it to the furtherance of communication between the two continents, in the manner for which by a happy accident of nature it is specially fitted. They have offered to surrender it to Brazil for every other purpose, and to withdraw any claims possessed by this country, if its free application to telegraphic purposes can be secured. The Brazilian Government profess to be prevented from granting any lease upon these terms by an Agreement concluded with the Western Telegraph Company in 1893. As they have by a recent Act of the Chambers and the Senate taken power to purchase compulsorily the rights of this very Company, the obstacle to the erection of a telegraphic station on the island does not seem to be insuperable. A more cogent objection is to be found in the fact that any cables which might be laid through Trinidad would destroy the monopoly of telegraphic communication with Argentina, Chile, Uruguay, and Paraguay, which Brazil practically enjoys.

We can see no consideration of justice or expediency which should induce us to promote the telegraphic policy of Brazil by surrendering the just title of Great Britain in this case. But, as the validity of that title, however clearly established in our view, is strongly resisted by the Government of Brazil, and as the circumstances attaching to its possession are in some respects unusual, Her Majesty's Government are willing, in deference to the wishes of an ally with whom they have long had many ties of commerce and of friendship, to submit the question of title to Arbitration, if the two Governments can agree upon a satisfactory Arbiter.

Annex 2.

Despatch from the Marquess of Salisbury to Mr. Phipps, as finally settled.

(No. 92.)

Foreign Office, November 18, 1895.

Sir,

THE interview I had with the Brazilian Minister on the 16th August led me to hope that a friendly solution of the difficulty which had arisen between Great Britain and Brazil in respect to the Island of Trinidad would not be difficult to find. The object of Her Majesty's Government in taking possession of the island was to facilitate the telegraphic communication of the world, and if that object could be equally well assured in any other manner, they were willing to allow formal rights, which in other respects were of little or no practical value, to fall into abeyance. But the communications I have received from you since that time hold out little hope that, in their present mood, the Brazilian Government will be willing to come to any arrangement on these terms.

It may be well, therefore, that I should state to you, for your guidance in any further conversations which may take place upon the question, the view which Her Majesty's Government take of their title to the Island of Trinidad.

It was represented to Her Majesty's late Advisers that a Bill had been proposed by the Brazilian Government, enabling them to take over compulsorily the cables laid along the Brazilian coast by the Western and Brazilian Telegraph Company. The Brazilian Government would thus have practically exclusive control over the messages which pass to the other States of South America. It was therefore proposed by the Telegraph Construction Company to make an alternative line from the Cape de Verde Islands by Ascension to Monte Video, which would bring the rest of South America into connection with Europe without passing through Brazil. But in order to lay such a cable it was necessary to use as a landing-place the uninhabited Island of Trinidad, situated some 700 miles from the Brazilian coast.

It was accordingly taken possession of under the orders of my predecessor in January last by Commander Foley, "as being uninhabited, and not belonging to any Power;" and every proper formality was observed for the purpose of duly asserting the sovereign rights in the island, which were vested from that time forth in Her Britannic Majesty.

The previous history of the island shows that for brief periods it has been occupied for scientific or for military purposes. It is believed to have been discovered by the pilot, Martin Vaz, in 1503; but there is no record of the fact of its discovery, nor of its having been taken possession of in the name of any Power. In 1700 Dr. Halley visited it for astronomical purposes, and formally took possession of it in the name of His Britannic Majesty. In 1781 we find it occupied by an English force, apparently for purposes connected with the war with Spain. We have records that the Portuguese Government objected to this occupation in 1782, claiming the island as their own, and it was, consequently, evacuated, under the orders of Lord Grantham, who apparently did not claim any British right over the island, but admitted that "it was contrary to Treaty that the coasts should be used for the purpose to which objection was taken." Later on, in 1785, a Portuguese garrison of 200 men was found there by La Pérouse, and appears to have remained till 1795. Since that date the island has not been occupied by Portugal or Brazil, or any other Power, and it has remained for a century quite uninhabited. In 1825 the independence of Brazil was recognized under Treaty by Portugal, but the Island of Trinidad is not mentioned in that Treaty as part of the territory to be severed from Portugal. It is said, however to have been referred to both before and since that time as a dependency of Brazil in certain public documents.

The claim which is now made to the island by the Republic of Brazil depends on the validity which is held to attach to a mere paper occupation of the island, divested of any pretension to actual use or habitation.

It should be borne in mind, in discussing this question, that Her Majesty's late Government did not found their right to annex the island upon the occupation of it by Dr. Halley, or upon the priority of his title to the title subsequently acquired by the Portuguese. The annexation directed by the Earl of Kimberley was, under his instructions, based by Commander Foley solely upon the fact that the island was "uninhabited, and not belonging to any Power." It was held that any title which may have existed at any previous period had been effaced by long disuse, and the island was at the disposal of any Power which might think fit to take it. All discussions which turn upon the character and intention of the various occupations of which the island was the subject during the eighteenth century are in a great measure irrelevant to the present controversy, and do not affect the claims on which Her Majesty's Government have acted. Whether the occupation of the island by Great Britain and Portugal during the last century did or did not confer upon them, or either of them, a valid sovereignty at the time, there is no doubt that it has been uninhabited, unoccupied, and ungoverned for 100 years previous to the present year, and therefore any sovereignty to which it may have been subject in the last century was looked upon as having lapsed.

The language of jurists is clear that a mere paper occupation, devoid of all effective character, will not preserve a claim to sovereignty over an indefinite number of years, and modern writers speak more emphatically in that sense than their predecessors.

The case most closely analogous to that of Trinidad is the case of the Island of Santa Lucia. It was certainly in the effective occupation of French colonists in the year 1667, if not to a later date. In the year 1713 the Signatories of the Treaty of Utrecht decided that it was a "neutral," or unoccupied, island. The interval which must elapse before continued omission to exercise the rights of ownership can be held to constitute the abandonment of a right previously established will, of course, differ widely, according to the circumstances of each case. But in proportion as the facilities for communication have been extended, the significance of such omissions has been increased, and the lapse of time within which they must be held to denote abandonment has rather tended to diminish. Mr. Hall (4th edition, p. 120) observes:—

> "When occupation has not only been duly effected, but has been maintained for some time, abandonment is not immediately supposed to be definitive. If it has been voluntary, the title of the occupant may be kept alive by acts such as the assertion of the claim by inscriptions, which would be insufficient to confirm the mere act of taking possession; and even when the abandonment is complete, an intention to return must be presumed during a reasonable time."

It is impossible to contend that there was any ground for presuming an intention to return; and the period of a century which has elapsed since the Portuguese garrison was entirely withdrawn, and with it all the inhabitants of the island, must be taken to exceed "a reasonable time."

The most recent International Act bearing upon this subject—the Act of Berlin in 1885—formally requires from every Power claiming any portion of the coast of Africa, that it shall govern effectively the territory which it claims; but this provision can only be quoted in evidence of the tendency of international opinion, as islands are specifically excluded from its operation.

But apart from these broad considerations of general law, the case of Trinidad is marked by a very special feature. It is an island which could not support any considerable community of men, and, by its situation and the character of its coast, it would be of little utility in the present day either for naval or military purposes. But from the progress of knowledge and enterprise in our time, it has derived a novel and unique value. Where, by natural conditions, the commodity and interests of vast populations depend upon a spot of the earth's surface being put to the use for which it has a special and singular aptitude, it is straining the right of sovereignty very far to say that the owners of this spot of earth shall have the right to declare that, under no conditions, shall it be put to that use, and to withdraw it from the service of mankind.

It is true that, without the help of Trinidad, telegrams can avoid the monopoly of Brazil by taking a long and costly circuit through the United States. The injury threatened by the effort of Brazil to bar the use of the island as a telegraphic landing-place is certainly lessened by this consideration, but it still is grave enough to weigh heavily with Her Majesty's Government when they are asked to assist in inflicting it by abandoning the possession to which, on other grounds, they believe this country to have a legitimate right.

Gentlemen,

Claim of Nitrate Railways Company against Chile for losses during civil war.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, the inclosed correspondence respecting the claim of the Nitrate Railways Company against the Chilean Government for losses incurred during the civil war in that country.

The Company requested (Paper A) that their claim might be presented to the Tribunal of Arbitration now sitting at Santiago to adjudicate on the other British claims of a similar nature. But they had been informed that the Government of Chile would maintain that, as they had engaged to submit to the laws of the country, without power to have recourse to any diplomatic remedy, they were debarred from the right to be considered as British claimants.

It was decided (Paper B) to instruct the British Agent to present the claim to the Arbitrators on the ground that, although the Commission was constituted by diplomatic negotiation, the reference of the claim to arbitration was not such a diplomatic remedy as was contemplated by the proviso in the original Concession.

The British Representative on the Tribunal has now telegraphed (Paper C) to say that the President of the Commission favours the view held by the Chilean Government, but that he is anxious that the point should be submitted to the Law Officers of the Crown.

I am to request that you will favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion as to whether the Nitrate Railways Company have forfeited their rights to be dealt with as other British claimants before the Arbitration Tribunal.

I have, &c.

Report.

In our opinion, the Nitrate Railways Company have not forfeited their rights to be dealt with as other British claimants before the Arbitration Tribunal.

The clause in the Concession which is invoked by the Chilean Government barred the right of the transferees of the Concession to bring diplomatic pressure to bear on the Chilean Government in respect of the Concession and its performance.

The Tribunal of Arbitration was set up to deal with injuries to the property of foreigners during the war, and we do not think that recourse to it is a diplomatic remedy such as is barred by the Concession.

Gentlemen,

Claim of Nitrate Railways Co. against Chile.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, the papers noted in the accompanying list, which relate to the claim of the Nitrate Railways Company against the Government of Chile for losses incurred during the civil war in that country.

It will be in your recollection that on the 21st September last you reported that for the reason which you set forth the Company had not forfeited their rights to be dealt with as other British claimants before the Arbitration Tribunal.

This opinion was duly communicated to the British Representative on the Commission, who now telegraphs (Paper C) that the claim has been dismissed for want of jurisdiction, and that the majority of the Tribunal held that one of the clauses in the Concession bars the Company's right to have recourse to diplomatic remedy, and therefore to an appeal to a Tribunal constituted for the purpose of dealing with claims supported by Her Majesty's Legation.

I am to request that you will take the papers transmitted herewith into your consideration, and that you will favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion as to whether, in the circumstances of the case, Her Majesty's Government are now entitled to officially support the Company's claim by direct representation to the Chilean Government.

His Lordship would also be glad to be favoured with any general observations which you may have to offer on the case.

Your opinion of the 21st September last, together with the documents on which it was founded, is inclosed for convenience of reference.

In our opinion Her Majesty's Government are now entitled to support the Company's claim by direct representation to the Chilean Government.

We adhere to the opinion formerly expressed by us as to the effect of the clause in the Concession which was cited as barring the right of the Company to the relief claimed, and have nothing to add upon this head.

The further contention which has been suggested, to the effect that the Company are not British subjects for the purposes of this Arbitration, appears to us to be untenable. A Company registered in London, and the capital of which is largely held by British subjects, must, in our opinion, be regarded as a British subject for this purpose.

Gentlemen,

Loss of "Kow-shing." Claim on China for compensation

WITH reference to the opinion expressed in your Report of the 4th ultimo, that, so far as China is concerned, the facts in connection with the destruction of the "Kow-shing" disclose a liability on the part of China to make good the losses caused thereby to British subjects and property, I have the honour to request that you will inform his Lordship whether you consider, in all the circumstances of the case, that Her Majesty's Government will be justified in making a claim on the Chinese Government, or in supporting any reasonable claim made by the Indo-China Navigation Company on that Government.

In our opinion Her Majesty's Government would be justified by international law in making a claim upon the Chinese Government, or in supporting any reasonable claim that may be made by the Indo-Chinese Navigation Company on the Chinese Government in respect of the losses caused by the destruction of the "Kow-shing."

Foreign Office, January 16, 1895.

Gentlemen,

Seizure and detention of British steam-ship "Pathan" by Chinese. Claim for compensati

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Earl of Kimberley, the Papers noted in the accompanying list, which relate to the seizure of the British steam-ship "Pathan" by the Chinese man-of-war "Namshin," on the ground of her having on board contraband of war destined for Japan.

The first intimation of this occurrence was received in a letter (Paper A) from Messrs. Gellatly, Hankey, Sewell, and Co., Managing Agents of the Mogul Steamship Company, stating that they had chartered the "Pathan" to Messrs Barber and Co., of New York, to carry a cargo of "lawful merchandize" from New York to Aden, Singapore, Hong Kong, Shanghae, and two ports in Japan.

She sailed from New York on the 28th July, and after touching at Aden and Singapore proceeded to Hong Kong, leaving on the 13th September for Shanghae, on her way to which latter port she was, while on the high seas, stopped and seized.

The circumstances connected with her seizure and detention, the manner in which she was searched, the steps taken for her release, and the claim for compensation preferred by the owners are given in the inclosed despatches from Mr. O'Conor, Her Majesty's Minister at Peking, and letters from Messrs. Gellatly and Co.

It appears that on the afternoon of the 20th September, while near Foochow, on the direct route from Hong Kong to Shanghae, the "Pathan" was stopped by the Chinese man-of-war "Namshin" and two other vessels.

The ship's papers, manifest, and register, were examined, and two cases of revolvers, one case of cartridges, and 200 barrels of rosin, being found on the manifest destined for Japanese ports, she was ordered to follow the "Namshin" to Kelung, an officer and twenty-six armed men being placed on board.

The master pressed for permission to go to Foochow, the nearest port, or to proceed on his voyage to Shanghae, but was refused.

The "Pathan" reached Kelung on the following day with the Chinese ships, and by order of the authorities was compelled to moor at the entrance of the harbour in a dangerous position, doing so, however, under protest.

Soon after her arrival 150 armed men were sent on board, and on the 23rd, without the master's consent, a number of men with some officers from the "Namshin" began taking cargo out of the hold, passing it up on deck, breaking open cases though it was raining at the time, and tearing and damaging the goods, the officers apparently exercising no control over their men.

On the 24th about 300 men, sailors, soldiers, and coolies, came on board with some officials and asked that a derrick should be put up, which was done. The same proceedings were continued, cases were burst open in all directions, even those containing kerosene oil being smashed and their contents emptied among the other cargo. The master shut off steam in the course of the day and rendered no further assistance in conducting the search, which was leading to the ruin of the cargo.

On the 25th the searchers, while tearing out the Shanghae cargo, discovered two rollers which were supposed to be parts of shell though in reality they were a portion of the plant for the Shanghae cotton mill. On this day the ship was in danger of capsizing so great was the weight of cargo piled up on deck.

The boxes of revolvers and cartridges were found on the 26th and the search was stopped. The Captain of the "Namshin" told the master that the ship would now be released, but in consequence apparently of the imaginary discovery of shell this intention was altered, and the vessel was brought into the inner anchorage.

During the 27th, 28th, and 29th the crew of the "Pathan" worked at putting the cargo back into the hold, but it was impossible to store it properly owing to the tiers having been broken. It had also suffered much in consequence of heavy rains, as it had been impossible to protect it.

No one came on board on the 30th, but on the following day, the 1st October, the Commissioner of Customs with three Mandarins visited the ship, and declared that she must be searched and the whole cargo discharged. Several officers of the "Namshin" boarded on the 2nd with a body of sailors, also a force of armed soldiers and a number of coolies. The process of taking out the cargo, carried on in the same fashion, was recommenced and carried on until the afternoon of the 3rd, when orders came for it to be replaced.

The master agreed, on the 3rd, to proceed to Shanghae with a Customs officer on board, and also agreed to sign, subject to the approval of the Acting Consul at Tamsui, a bond requiring him to take his ship to Shanghae, and, on arrival, to report to the Consul and enter at the Custom-house. It does not, however, appear from the log whether this bond, or any other, was actually signed.

On the 4th and 5th October, gangs of coolies replaced the cargo, some of which had been placed on a steamer lying alongside. This steamer, owing to the heavy swell which was running, caused some damage to the "Pathan," which subsequently at 2 P.M. on the latter day left for Shanghae with the Customs officer on board.

It is necessary to mention that the master protested energetically at each step of the proceedings, but without any effect; that every obstacle was placed in the way of his communicating with the agents of his Company, and that the Chinese authorities refused to allow Mr. Hopkins, the Acting British Consul at Tamsui, to telegraph to Her Majesty's Minister at Peking.

Mr. O'Conor, on learning what had occurred, instructed Mr. Hopkins not to resist the confiscation of any goods that were clearly contraband, but to press for the release of the ship under a bond to proceed to Shanghae for investigation. He also strongly urged the Chinese Government to give orders in this sense, adding that the Consul-General at Shanghae must assist at the investigation (Paper B).

The Chinese Ministers having referred to the matter during a visit which Mr. O'Conor paid to the Tsung-li Yamên, he explained what had taken place, and afterwards in a written communication he impressed upon the Ministers the gravity of the case, the serious liability which China had incurred, and the probability of a heavy claim for compensation (Paper C).

On the 23rd October Mr. O'Conor (Paper D) forwarded despatches from Mr. Hannen, Her Majesty's Consul-General at Shanghae, reporting on the case, and forwarding an abstract of the ship's manifest. Mr. O'Conor states that the revolvers and cartridges were consigned to different foreign firms at Kobe and Yokohama, and that they were the property of, and consigned to, subjects of neutral Powers.

Mr. Hannen puts their value at about 27*l*., while he estimates the general cargo to have been worth about 113,000*l*.

The manifest shows that there was also on board a considerable quantity of railway material for Japan.

On the arrival of the "Pathan" at Shanghae, Mr. Hannen formally notified the Taotai that he would hold the Chinese authorities responsible for all loss and damage resulting from the arrest and detention of the vessel, as well as for any future damages.

The Taotai, however, refused to admit that the ship had been unlawfully detained, or that the Chinese Government could be held responsible for any damages (Paper E).

In a further despatch (Paper F) Mr. O'Conor forwarded a copy of a note from the Tsung-li Yamên in which the Ministers attempted a defence of the treatment of the vessel and an assertion of the rights of China to deal with seizures, although no Chinese Prize Courts had been established. As this note contained statements which it was desirable at once to controvert, Mr. O'Conor replied in a letter, of which he incloses a copy, explaining the whole case and strongly insisting on the main points.

Messrs. Gellatly and Co. (Paper G) state that their agents at Shanghae have made a claim on the Chinese Government of 30,000 taels, say 4,310*l*., for the demurrage and expenses, and they urge that the claim should be supported by Her Majesty's Government. They also point out that, in addition, they have actually incurred large liabilities at Kelung and Shanghae for extra labour, &c., and add that in the claim as put forward no demand has been made for the loss of homeward freight or other consequential damages, for which they consider the Chinese Government should be responsible.

In a subsequent letter (Paper H) they furnish a statement placing their loss at not less than 5,500*l*. They also inclose a telegram from their Shanghae agents reporting that the Taotai has repudiated the claim, and they state that in these circumstances they do not think they can be asked to let the offer of settlement for 30,000 taels stand.

A perusal of the Papers show that it is not disputed that the "Pathan" had, so far as the "Namshin" was concerned, an ultimate enemy destination, although she was immediately bound to Shanghae, a Chinese port.

It is also not disputed that she had on board a small quantity of what in the then circumstances had become contraband of war.

The "Namshin," therefore, had a right to stop this neutral vessel on the high seas, and further a right, at the risk of being eventually cast in costs and damages, to take her in for adjudication by a competent Prize Court on the ground that she was carrying contraband. But the Chinese Government have not established Prize Courts, and it is a grave question whether they should not be informed that they cannot be allowed to exercise their right under the law of nations of stopping neutral British vessels on the high seas if they will not establish as a corollary to the exercise of that right the only Tribunals which are recognized by the law of nations as entitled to determine all questions arising out of the stoppage and seizure of neutral ships by belligerents upon the high seas.

In this case, however, even if Prize Courts had been established, the treatment of the "Pathan" from the time of her stoppage to the time of her release seems to have been improper and unjustifiable. Instead of taking her to Foochow or Shanghae, the Chinese authorities diverted her out of her course to Kelung, endangered the safety of the ship by the orders given to the master, broke bulk—which they had no right to do at all—destroyed a good deal of the cargo, and put the vessel to delay and inconvenience on her voyage, which was absolutely unnecessary.

I am to request that you will take these papers into your consideration, and that you will favour Lord Kimberley with your opinion as to whether the case is one in which Her Majesty's Government ought to support a reasonable claim for compensation from the Chinese Government on the part of the owners of the vessel, and, if so, upon what special grounds such a claim may most suitably be put forward.

I am further to request that you will be good enough to add any general observations which you may have to offer upon the case, and especially as to whether the Chinese can be allowed to exercise the right of stopping neutral British vessels on the high seas unless they establish the only Tribunals recognized as competent to deal with such seizures.

I have, &c.

Report.

Assuming the facts are as stated in the Memorandum, we are of opinion that, though this vessel did carry a small parcel of contraband, the case is one in which Her Majesty's Government may properly support a reasonable claim for compensation on the part of the owners of the vessel, and that it may most suitably be put forward upon the ground of the vessel being taken to a port unreasonably out of the ship's course, and of her detention without either proceeding, or the intention to institute proceedings in any Prize Court. There is no trace of any judicial proceeding.

The fact that the vessel was exposed to danger from having to anchor in an improper place, of her being crowded by persons in an improperly conducted search, and the fact of communication being unlawfully intercepted, are legitimate grounds of strong complaint, though they do not appear in this particular case to have increased the loss to the ship herself, which we understand to be the matter referred to us.

Compensation for damage to the ship may also properly be claimed if it resulted from careless treatment on the part of the Chinese.

A belligerent may visit and search a neutral vessel, and if contraband is on board for an enemy destination, as was the case here, may bring in the vessel for adjudication, but the captors must proceed without unnecessary disturbance or violence, with due consideration of the neutral's interests in choice of port, and with good dispatch. Compensation is payable for breach of these rules, and they seem to have been disregarded in this instance.

The fact that the Chinese Government has not established Prize Courts does not, in our opinion, disentitle the Chinese war-ships to exercise the right of visit and search upon the high seas, for that right may be necessary to enable them to ascertain the nationality of a vessel; and if the vessel visited should prove to be an enemy vessel it is within the right of the belligerent to make prize of, or even destroy, her on the spot. We therefore do not consider that the right to visit and search can be denied to China. As soon, however, as it appears that the vessel visited is a neutral vessel, any breach of neutrality on her part can be determined only by a Prize Court properly constituted.

If the Chinese Government were to announce its absolute refusal to establish Prize Courts, Her Majesty's Government would, in our opinion, be at liberty to prohibit the detention of any British ship as soon as her nationality had been made clear, upon the ground that such detention could under no circumstances lead to any lawful result, except her unconditional release after a period of purposeless delay.

But we do not consider that it would be a safe proceeding at present to prevent British vessels from being taken into port by Chinese war-ships merely on the ground that no Prize Courts have as yet been established, because it would always be open to China to establish such Courts in time to deal with the case of any ship that might be brought in, and if prevented from bringing in a vessel they might allege (and it would be difficult to disprove the statement) that their intention was to establish a Prize Court, and to bring her in for a lawful adjudication.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, March 11, 1895.

Messrs. Punchard and Co.'s contract with Governor of Antioquia for construction of railway.

I AM directed by the Earl of Kimberley to transmit to you the papers noted in the accompanying list, which relate to contracts signed in 1892 between the Governor of Antioquia, a Department of the Republic of Colombia, and the accredited agent of Messrs. Punchard and Co., of Cannon Street, London, for the construction of a railway from Puerto Berrio to Medellin.

In the course of the past three years this matter has formed the subject of a voluminous correspondence between this Department, the London firm, Her Majesty's Minister at Bogotá, and the Colombian Chargé d'Affaires in London; but without troubling you with the examination of all these documents, it may be sufficient to invite your consideration of those only which seem to have a direct bearing on the present position of the case.

I am, accordingly, first to call your attention to the printed papers which stand at the head of the list of inclosures, and which contain the contracts referred to, and the approval thereof, subject to certain modifications, by the National Government (see Document A).

The course of events which followed the conclusion of these contracts is set forth in the diary of the Company's Manager (see Document A *), and in a Memorandum drawn up in this Department on the 1st December last (see Document B), both of which are inclosed.

With reference to paragraph 11 of the Memorandum, it will be seen that in the earlier stages of the dispute the Antioquian authorities set up the contention that as the contracts were obtained by means of bribery, the instruments themselves were ipso facto rendered null and void, and that therefore the provisions which they contained for arbitration—in case of disputes arising—had no binding effect. The view of an eminent Colombian jurist on this point is quoted in the same paragraph of the Memorandum. A copy of it in full is inclosed (see Document C) in Mr. Jenner's despatch No. 3, Commercial, of the 7th March, 1894, and it is especially important as bearing on other points at issue, and on the general provisions of Colombian law. But as regards the particular point above referred to, it is important to note that the charges of bribery are merely allegations which have not as yet been established in any manner, and that Mr. Jenner, in his telegram of the 21st February (No. 4) (see Document D), refers to the general bribery charges as being long ago exploded in Colombia. Furthermore, the Colombian Government, by a Decree dated the 22nd May, 1894 (see Document E), made the necessary provision for the constitution of an Arbitration

Court in accordance with their laws. A copy of this Decree is inclosed in Mr. Jenner's despatch No. 21, Commercial, of the 26th May, 1894 (see Document F), and I am to invite your particular attention to the observations contained therein.

The divergence which is alleged to exist between the law of Colombia and the terms of the contract, in regard to arbitration is noticed in paragraph 9 of the Foreign Office Memorandum (see Document B).

The matter is further referred to in M. Enguerra's legal opinion (inclosed in Mr. Jenner's despatch of the 7th March, 1894 (see Document C), in Messrs. Punchard's letter of the 23rd November (see Document G), and in the correspondence with M. Mendez (see Documents H, I, K, L, and M), the Colombian Chargé d'Affaires at this Court, all of which are inclosed, and to which your attention is invited.

Down to the present date the action of Her Majesty's Government has been restricted to exercising all the pressure that was possible, through the dipolmatic channel, to induce the Colombian Government to constitute the Arbitration Court contemplated by the contract to which they had signified approval, and the principle of which is admitted by their Decree of the 22nd May, 1894 (see Document E).

These efforts have, however, not been attended with success, and the present situation is summed up in Mr. Jenner's telegram of the 3rd instant, copy of which is inclosed. (See Document N.)

The first question which arises is whether a denial of justice may be held to have taken place. On this point I am to invite your consideration of the observations contained in paragraph 12 of the Foreign Office Memorandum (see Document B), and to the extract from M. Enguerra's opinion referred to therein.

Every effort has been made by Her Majesty's Gnvernment to secure the constitution of a proper Court of Arbitration to decide upon Messrs. Punchard's claims. To this it appears that they are clearly entitled by their Contract. Their property has been forcibly expropriated without any judicial proceedings, and it would seem that some period must be determined beyond which the constitution of the Court of Arbitration can be no longer delayed without its further postponement constituting a denial of justice to the claimants.

I am accordingly to request you to take these papers into consideration, and to favour Lord Kimberley with your opinion as to whether under all the circumstances a denial of justice may be said to have taken place, and, if so, whether Her Majesty's Government would be justified in preferring a direct claim on the Government of Colombia, should they not have either constituted the Arbitration Court, or agreed to constitute such a tribunal by a date to be determined, on the ground that the Contract has been broken without valid reasons, and that the Contractors have a right to be indemnified for all expenditure and loss thereby incurred, and for loss of their concession, or on any other, and if so what, additional or more appropriate grounds.

Lord Kimberley would at the same time be glad to be favoured with any further observations which you may desire to offer generally upon the papers now submitted to you.

The remaining papers in this case are sent in a separate cover, in case you may wish to refer to them.

I have, &c.

Report.

In view of the pendency of inquiries in Colombia as to the charge that the Contract was procured by bribery, we think it would be advisable to wait a reasonable time for the result of those inquiries. There is certainly ground for suspicion that such bribery took place, and we consider that Her Majesty's Government are also entitled to a full explanation of the letter of Mr. Spencer of the 20th February, 1895, before deciding on their course. It does not follow that there should be no redress even if there had been bribery, but that circumstance would greatly affect the case.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, December 6, 1895.

Status in Colombia of trading firm of Enrique Cortes and Co.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, the accompanying letter from Messrs. Harries, Wilkinson, and Raikes (Paper A), respecting the status in Colombia of the Trading Corporation of Enrique Cortes and Co.

This Corporation is stated to be an English Limited Company registered under the Companies Acts in 1883. It has registered offices in London, where it carries on business, and has correspondents in Colombia and other South American States. The principal members of the Company are stated to be Colombian citizens, and the shares are mainly, if not entirely, held by persons who are not British subjects.

Messrs. Harries, Wilkinson, and Raikes desire to be informed whether, in these circumstances, if civil war should break out, or there should be other disturbance of public order, British protection would be extended to Messrs. Enrique Cortes and Co., and to their property abroad, if it should be seized or destroyed.

It will be seen from the accompanying Memorandum and Minutes thereon (Paper B), that in 1872 the Law Officers of the Crown were of opinion that firms established in Turkey were entitled to British protection if the members of the firm were British subjects, but not otherwise (see Report of the 15th October, 1872 (Paper C)), and that the status of foreign Companies incorporated under English law was considered by the Law Officers in 1891 in connection with the operation of the most-favoured-nation Article in the Treaty between Great Britain and the Argentine Republic (see Report of the 16th March, 1891 (Paper D)).

These Reports, however, do not exactly meet the point raised by Messrs. Harries, Wilkinson, and Raikes; and I am accordingly to request that you will take the matter into your consideration, and that you will favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion whether Her Majesty's Government may properly protect Messrs. Enrique Cortes and Co., either individually, or as a firm or Company, in the circumstances mentioned in Messrs. Harries, Wilkinson, and Raikes' letter.

I am also to request that you will be so good as to advise his Lordship as to the reply which should be returned to Messrs. Harries, Wilkinson, and Raikes, and that you will favour him with any general observations which you may wish to offer, after consideration of the inclosed papers.

I have, &c.

Report.

In our opinion the principle ought not to be recognized that foreigners, by registering themselves here as a Limited Company, are entitled to claim from Her Majesty's Government the protection afforded to British subjects in foreign countries.

We think that, in each case, the substance of the matter must be looked at, and the nature of the business which is being in fact carried on by the Company.

No hard and fast line can, in our judgment, be laid down as to the amount of British interest which would entitle a Company to British protection.

We advise that Messrs. Harries, Wilkinson, and Raikes should be informed that Her Majesty's Government cannot undertake in any way to protect the commercial operations or property of their clients, and that the proposed purchases must be made, if at all, entirely on their own responsibility.

Foreign Office, December 4, 1894.

Gentlemen,

Irregular marriages at Paris Consulate.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Earl of Kimberley, to transmit to you a statement extracted from the Marriage Register Book of Her Majesty's Consul at Paris, showing the circumstances under which certain marriages purport to have been solemnized at Her Majesty's Consulate in accordance with the law of England relating to marriages abroad.

Two of the marriages were solemnized while the Foreign Marriage Acts, 1849 to 1891, were in force; the rest took place at dates subsequent to the repeal of those enactments, and to the coming into operation of "The Foreign Marriage Act, 1892."

I am also to inclose samples of the three forms in which marriages at a Consulate should be entered in the Consular Marriage Register according to (1) whether the ceremony is performed by the Consul, or (2) in his presence according to the rites of the Church of England, or (3) of any other religious community.

During the whole period covered by these extracts from the Consular Marriage Register, Mr. Falconer Atlee held the Queen's Commission as Her Majesty's Consul at Paris, and until the 30th January, 1892, he also held a written authority to solemnize and register marriages, given by a Secretary of State, in pursuance of section 19 of "The Consular Marriage Act, 1849," when, therefore, the first two marriages of questionable validity were solemnized (viz., on the 19th and 28th January, 1892, respectively), such authority, if any, as was possessed for the purpose by the officer who purported to solemnize them, was derived from that written authority, subject to the provisions of the Foreign Marriage Acts, 1849 to 1891.

As indicated in the note attached to the inclosed statement, Mr. Bowden, the officer in question, was British Vice-Consul at Paris, but, though he signed the register as "Acting Consul," the Consul for whom he purported to be acting was not absent from his post (if absent at all) with the sanction of the Secretary of State, nor was Mr. Bowden's assumed appointment as "Acting Consul" approved or otherwise confirmed by the Secretary of State.

The exercise of Consular functions by a Consul and his Acting Consul contemporaneously is incompatible not only with the rules of the Consular Service, but with the sense and meaning of the latter appointment, which is made for the purpose of replacing a Consul when absent from his post on leave, or unable to discharge his duties from any other cause. An Acting Consul cannot be appointed for the purpose of discharging one or more of the various duties of the Consul to the exclusion of the rest; he must discharge all, or none, of these duties in place of the Consul for whom he acts. In the present case, although the facts cannot now be absolutely ascertained, there is some reason to believe that Mr. Consul Atlee may have been discharging other Consular functions at the very time when various other persons purported, according to the Consular Marriage Registers, to have respectively solemnized, as Acting Consuls, certain marriages at the Paris Consulate.

According to section 3 of "The Consular Marriage Act, 1868," "every person acting, or legally authorized to act, in the place of a British Consul, such Consul being duly authorized to solemnize and register marriages . . . , shall be deemed to be a British Consul duly authorized for all the purposes of the said recited Act," i.e., "The Consular Marriage Act, 1849."

Further, section 7 (1) of "The Foreign Marriage Act, 1891," provides that "where a marriage purports to have been solemnized and registered in pursuance of the Foreign Marriage Acts, or any of them . . . . . in a British Consulate . . . . , it shall not be necessary in support of the marriage to give any proof of the authority of the marriage officer, within the meaning of this Act, by or before whom the marriage was solemnized and registered, nor shall any evidence to prove his want of authority, whether by reason of his not being a duly authorized officer, or of any prohibitions or restrictions under the Marriage Regulations or otherwise, be given in any legal proceedings touching the validity of the marriage."

The statutory and other conditions under which the remaining marriages of questionable validity were solemnized were, generally speaking, similar to those above set forth.

The Foreign Marriage Acts, 1849 to 1891, had, however, been repealed, and replaced by "The Foreign Marriage Act, 1892." In pursuance of section 11, sub-section (2) (b), and sub-section (3) of the latter Act, a marriage warrant of the Secretary of State, dated the 30th January, 1892, authorized to be a marriage officer the holder of the office of British Consul at Paris, referring to the office without designating the name of any particular person holding the office, so that while the warrant is in force, the person for the time being holding or acting in such office shall, as provided by the said section 11, sub-section (3), be a marriage officer.

In addition to Mr. Vice-Consul Bowden, who resigned his appointment early this year, the persons who purport to have solemnized these marriages are Mr. G. Austin Taylor, the British Pro-Consul at Paris, and Mr. George Falconer Atlee, the Consul's son, after he had succeeded Mr. Bowden as British Vice-Consul at Paris.

The circumstances under which each of these officers signed as Acting Consul were similar to those which attended the first two cases.

Section 13, sub-section (2) of the Act of 1892, which corresponds to section 7 (1) of "The Foreign Marriage Act, 1891," provides that "where a marriage purports to have been solemnized and registered under this Act in the official house of a British . . . . Consul . . . , it shall not be necessary in support of the marriage to give any proof of the authority of the marriage officer by or before whom the marriage was solemnized and registered, nor shall any evidence to prove his want of authority, whether by reason of his not being a duly authorized marriage officer, or of any prohibitions or restrictions under the marriage regulations or otherwise, be given in any legal proceeding touching the validity of the marriage."

Reference to the inclosed statement will show that errors were also committed in the marriage entries. The words "rites and ceremonies" are not applicable to the civil form of marriage, and should have been erased; other mistakes of minor importance occur.

These irregularities, as well as those of a graver nature, which cast in doubt the authority of the person acting as marriage officer, are primarily to be ascribed to the declining health, which recently resulted in the death, of Mr. Atlee, Her Majesty's Consul at Paris. They have only recently come to the notice of the Secretary of State.

There is good reason to believe that Mr. Consul Atlee's subordinates, who were officers of little experience, acted on each occasion under his orders, given on a misinterpretation of the Acts of Parliament affecting the matter.

Deeply as these irregularities are to be deplored, Lord Kimberley conceives that the very wide provisions of the law which have been quoted above were devised to meet, and do in fact cover, such cases as have occurred at Paris, where the bona fides of all parties concerned is unimpeachable.

I am accordingly to request that you will be so good as to take the matter into your consideration, and to favour his Lordship with your opinion generally on the subject, and particularly as to whether any of the marriages described is invalid, and, if so, which, and for what reason.

I have, &c.
(Signed) T. H. SANDERSON.

Report.

In our opinion, each and all of the marriages described would be regarded as valid in any of Her Majesty's Courts.

The method by which this result would be arrived at is, however, circuitous.

Unquestionably, the law has been greatly neglected and disobeyed in the case of each of these marriages, and the Acts under which they purported to be celebrated do not, in terms or directly, confer a married status upon these persons. But, by rendering unnecessary any evidence that the required authority had been conferred upon the individuals acting as marriage officers, and forbidding the admission of evidence to contradict such authority, these Acts do, in effect, prevent all of Her Majesty's Courts from hearing evidence which would invalidate the marriages. And we think, on the whole, that these Regulations as to evidence would have the effect of indirectly validating these marriages, whatever the issue might be in that Court of Her Majesty before whom the question might arise.

Having regard, however, to the peculiar basis upon which the validity of these marriages rests even in Her Majesty's Courts, and also to the fact that foreign Courts, upon whom British laws of evidence are not binding, might, for the defects of formality, declare that the status of married persons had not been acquired under the British Statutes, and thus refuse to recognize these marriages, we submit for your Lordship's consideration whether it is not advisable to confirm these marriages by an Act of Parliament.

(Signed) R. T. REID.
FRANK LOCKWOOD.

Royal Courts of Justice,
January 22, 1895.

N.B.—The advisability of passing an Act to confirm these marriages was subsequently considered, and the Lord Chancellor and the Parliamentary Counsel were consulted upon the matter. It was, however, eventually decided that it was neither expedient nor necessary to legislate on the subject.

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, February 8, 1895.

Franco-Malagasy hostilities. As to issue of Neutrality Proclamation and bearing of Foreign Enlistment Act.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Earl of Kimberley, the accompanying notices of questions in the House of Commons (Papers A and B) in regard to the existing state of affairs between France and Madagascar.

It is unnecessary for the present purpose to consider the causes which have led to the present misunderstanding between the two countries. It will, however, be seen from the accompanying Papers (C, D, and E) that shots have been exchanged between the French and the Hovas, that the Hova forts at Tamatave and Majunga have been bombarded by French war-ships, and that those places are now occupied by French troops.

It should perhaps be mentioned that the Protectorate of France over the Island of Madagascar was recognized by Great Britain on the 5th August, 1890 (see Paper F). It is not, however, thought that this fact can, from any point of view, materially affect the legal aspect of the questions which are now submitted to you, or the bearing of the provisions of the Foreign Enlistment Act upon them, since it is not open to question that in the case of an insurrectionary or civil war within the limits of a foreign friendly State the provisions of the enactment apply to both Parties so soon as the insurgents have been accorded belligerent rights or recognition.

In the present case, moreover, Madagascar, though under the Protectorate of France, is not an integral part of the territories of the French Republic, and the definition of a "foreign State," which is contained in section 30 of the Act, would appear clearly to apply to it.

On the 3rd instant Her Majesty's Ambassador at Paris forwarded to Lord Kimberley an extract from the "Journal Officiel" containing an account of a discussion in the Chamber of Deputies respecting a concession made to an English shipping firm for a transport of a portion of the war material destined for the campaign in Madagascar (Paper G). Information respecting the concession in question will be found in the statement made by the French Minister of War in answer to the interpellation addressed to him by M. Breton (Inclosure in Paper G).

As regards the question of the transport of war material, I am to call your attention to a Report by the then Law Officers, dated the 14th October, 1870 (Paper H), with reference to a contention of the then German Ambassador that international law requires a neutral to prevent the exportation of contraband of war. The Law Officers stated that "no such general rule is laid down by any writer of authority on international law, but the contrary is asserted by all those to whom reference is usually made."

It will be seen, however, that one of the questions to be asked in the House of Commons (Paper B) relates not only to the transport in British vessels of materials of war, but to that of French troops, "for the purpose of fighting the Malagasies," and on this latter point I am to refer you to a Report by the Law Officers dated the 7th December, 1877 (Paper I), as to the bearing of the Foreign Enlistment Act in the case of British ships hired by a foreign State for the conveyance of troops dispatched to suppress a rebellion. The Law Officers were of opinion "that the granting of the use of a ship to convey troops is clearly an accepting of an engagement (see section 4 of 'The Foreign Enlistment Act, 1870') in the military or naval service (see section 30 of the same Act for the meaning of these words)."

L.O.R. 1870 (Conf. 4216), p. 47.

A similar question arose in December 1893, when Her Majesty's Minister at Rio de Janeiro asked for instructions as to whether the embarkation in British vessels of Brazilian Government troops to attack the insurgents should be permitted (Paper J). Mr. Wyndham was then "authorized to give warning that any British vessels carrying troops will do so at their own risk, and will not be protected against the consequences" (Paper K). A warning to this effect was duly issued (Paper L).

I am to request that you will take the inclosed papers into your immediate consideration, and that you will favour Lord Kimberley with your opinion on the following points:—

1. Whether the time has come for the issue by the Queen of a Proclamation of Neutrality in the war between France and Madagascar.
2. Whether the Foreign Englistment Act applies in any of the contingencies indicated in the questions to be asked by Mr. Henniker Heaton, M.P., and Sir Henry Howorth, M.P., and if so, in which of those contingencies, and to what extent.
3. Whether the Foreign Enlistment Act applies in the matter of the contract made by the French Government with an English firm for the conveyance to Madagascar of war materials which appear to include gun-boats in sections to be put together on arrival at Majunga.

Lord Kimberley would also be glad to be favoured with any general observations which you may have to offer upon the legal points involved.

I have, &c.

Report.

In our opinion there exists a state of hostilities between France and Madagascar which may involve the exercise of belligerent rights towards British trade, and therefore if Her Majesty's Government think fit, they would be at liberty to issue a Proclamation of Neutrality.

Such a Proclamation, however, besides its primary use as a notification to British traders that their commerce is affected by the risks incidental to a foreign war, would also be a recognition of Madagascar as belligerent. Recognition by a neutral of belligerency between a protected State and a protecting State, especially where the former is semi-civilized, might be interpreted as an unfriendly act towards the latter, unless clearly required by the legitimate interests of neutral commerce.

If France proposes to exercise the rights of a belligerent (for example in regard to contraband), she could not justly object to a Proclamation of Neutrality, for the very exercise of these rights in unjustifiable, except in case of war. If France disclaims an intention to exercise these rights (which is very improbable), such a Proclamation would appear gratuitous and premature. We consider that the legitimate interests of British commerce afford the test by which the propriety of a Proclamation of Neutrality should in law be judged. Beyond that, of course, lie considerations of policy into which we do not enter.

2. In our opinion "The Foreign Enlistment Act, 1870," does not affect the mere carrying of munitions of war or other contraband.

The Foreign Enlistment Act does, in our opinion, make punishable such a proceeding as dispatching, or allowing to be dispatched, a vessel from British dominions with intent, either that it should be used as a store ship, to carry munitions of war, or that it should be used as a transport to convey French troops to the seat of war. In such cases the vessel is exclusively appropriated to the service of a belligerent. Section 8, subsection 4, coupled with the interpretation clause s. 30 of that Statute, lead us to this conclusion. Nevertheless, we consider that such proceedings, though punishable by municipal law under the Act of 1870, if done without the licence of Her Majesty, are not an infraction of international law. The Foreign Enlistment Act is no measure of the international obligations of Great Britain. It goes far beyond them, and its extreme stringency is presumably designed to arm Her Majesty's Government with power to interpose in possible contingencies which it would be difficult to anticipate, or even from considerations of policy, which might make exceptional restraints upon neutral commerce desirable in a particular case. It has never been authoritatively admitted, not even in the three rules of the Washington Treaty (which of themselves have not become of international authority), that a neutral Government is bound to prevent neutral ships from simply acting as transports or store ships for a belligerent, subject always to the risk of capture and condemnation. And we think it would be an extension of the duties of neutral Governments if any such obligation were admitted.

3. As already stated, we consider that the Foreign Enlistment Act applies in such case, subject to the observations already made.

4. We do not think there is any further observation we can make with advantage on the legal points involved.

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, February 27, 1895.

Gentlemen,

Franco-Malagasy hostilities. As to bearing of Foreign Enlistment Act.

THE Earl of Kimberley has had under his consideration your Report of the 12th instant in regard to the existing situation between France and Madagascar. You state that, in your opinion, there exists a state of hostilities which may involve the exercise of belligerent rights toward British trade, and that "The Foreign Enlistment Act, 1870," makes punishable such a proceeding as dispatching, or allowing to be dispatched, a vessel from the British dominions with intent either that it should be used as a store ship to carry munitions of war, or that it should be used as a transport to convey French troops to the seat of war.

It has, however, been argued (and, in Lord Kimberley's opinion, with some force), that it is open to question whether the Foreign Enlistment Act in any respect applies to the hostilities between France and Madagascar, or, in other words, whether Madagascar is a friendly "foreign State" within the meaning of that Statute.

I have the honour to inclose a copy of the Treaty of Peace and Friendship between France and Madagascar of the 17th December, 1885 (Paper A), and to call your attention to Article I, which stipulates as follows:—

"Le Gouvernement de la République représentera Madagascar dans toutes ses relations extérieures. Les Malgaches à l'étranger seront placés sous la protection de la France."

Article 1 of the second Declaration between Great Britain and France, signed at London the 5th August, 1890 (Paper B), provides that "the Government of Her Britannic Majesty recognizes the Protectorate of France over the Island of Madagascar with its consequences, especially as regards the exequatur of British Consuls and Agents, which must be applied for through the intermediary of the French Resident-General."

Great Britain has thus recognized the Protectorate of France over Madagascar, so that the case under consideration must be dealt with on the basis that hostilities are being carried on by a Protecting Power, recognized by Great Britain, against a country over which she has a Protectorate.

It is conceived that from the relation of protector and protected in the case of two countries there result these consequences:—

1. That all Powers, other than the Protecting Power, are excluded from interference in the internal affairs of the protected country, and from asserting by force directly against the Government of the protected State any claims for redress they may have against it.

2. That the Protecting State, whilst justified in insisting that other Powers shall not forcibly obtain redress from the protected State, is bound herself to see that such redress is made, and in order to perform this international obligation, may have to employ force against the protected State. It follows from this argument that for purely international purposes the protected State may have ceased to be a State. No international right can be asserted against her. If she commits any international wrongs the shield of the Protecting Power is interposed between her and the aggrieved State, whilst her obligation to answer for these wrongs is assumed by the Protecting Power. It is presumed that if any interternational wrong is committed against the protected Power redress would be sought only through the medium of the Protecting Power. In what sense, then, can the protected country be said to remain a State from the international point of view? It would seem that for international purposes her position is the same as if she had been incorporated into the dominions of the protecting country.

This portion of the subject has been treated at some length by the late Mr. W. E. Hall in the last edition of his work on "International Law" (3rd edition, 1890), pp. 127 et seq.

Protectorates of the nature of the one in question have received a large extension in recent years. The consequences which flow from the nexus of protecting and protected States, whilst they have become of much greater importance, are, on the other hand, necessarily ill-defined. But it seems to follow logically, and by close analogy from the generally-admitted results of the nexus, that the protected Power may well be held not to be a "State" within the purview of such an enactment as the Foreign Enlistment Act; and any other view might involve this country not infrequently in considerable embarrassment. If Madagascar could only claim redress from a foreign Power through France it would seem a reductio ad absurdum to hold that the provisions of the Foreign Enlistment Act are applicable.

On the other hand, it is argued that the Treaty between France and Madagascar of 1885, whatever may be its proper meaning and intent, must be held to have lapsed as between those two Powers on the outbreak of hostilities. It is, moreover, pointed out that "The Foreign Enlistment Act, 1870," applies to any friendly "foreign State" as defined in that enactment, viz.:—

"Any foreign Prince, Colony, province, or part of any province or people, or any person or persons exercising, or assuming to exercise, the powers of government in or over any foreign country, Colony, province, or part of any province or people."

This definition was evidently taken from section 2 of the Act 59 Geo. III, cap 69 (Paper C), which was repealed by "The Foreign Enlistment Act, 1870" (Paper D).

It remains to consider any precedents which appear to be relevant to the matter under review, and in this connection I am specially to call your attention to the following papers:—

1. The Queen's Proclamation of Neutrality in the contest between the Government of the United States of America and certain States styling themselves the Confederate States of America, 13th May, 1861 (Paper E).

L.O.R. 1877 (Conf. 4216), p. 47.

2. Report by the then Law Officers of the Crown, dated the 7th December, 1877, as to the bearing of "The Foreign Enlistment Act, 1870," on the conveyance of troops in a British vessel for the suppression of a rebellion in Peru (Paper F).

It is assumed, however, that the antepenultimate paragraph of this Report, which states that "the use of a ship to convey troops belonging to a friendly Power would, under sections 4 and 30, be, in our opinion, an offence against 'The Foreign Enlistment Act, 1870,'" must be read secundum subjectam materiam, and was scarcely intended by the then Law Officers to be of universal application. It would seem that the term "rebels" was probably meant only to cover such "rebels" as by establishing a more or less stable Government, and by obtaining general recognition as belligerents, might fairly be said to have constituted themselves into a separate "State" within the meaning of that expression as generally employed.

3. Report by the then Law Officers of the Crown, dated the 7th June, 1889, stating that, in their opinion, the Damara region, although a Protectorate of the German Government, is not part of the dominions of that State within the meaning of section 11 of the Foreign Enlistment Act, but that it is a friendly foreign State within the meaning of section 11, taken together with section 30 of the Act (Paper G).

I am to inclose copies of the replies given by Sir Edward Grey in the House of Commons (Papers H, I, J, K), and the draft of a letter addressed to Baron de Courcel on the 15th February, 1895 (Paper L), as showing how the matter stands at the present moment between the Government of Her Majesty and that of the French Republic.

I am also to inclose an extract from the "Times" newspaper of the 22nd instant, containing a letter from Professor Holland, and I am to call your attention to the arguments contained in the 2nd and 3rd paragraphs (Paper M).

I am to request that you will favour Lord Kimberley, at your earliest convenience, with your opinion on the following points:—

Generally—

1. Whether a protected State, with which and with whose Protecting State Her Majesty is at peace, is a friendly foreign State within the meaning of "The Foreign Enlistment Act, 1870."

(a.) When such protected State is at peace with the Protecting State.

(b.) When a state of hostilities is recognized by Her Majesty's Government to exist between such protected and protecting State.

Particularly—

2. Whether, having regard to the mutual relations of Great Britain, France, and Madagascar, your general answer to question 1 applies in terms to the situation now existing between those three Powers; and, if not, in what respects and to what extent it will require qualification.

Report.

1. In our opinion, a protected State with which, and with whose Protecting State, Her Majesty is at peace, may be a friendly State within the meaning of the Foreign Enlistment Act.

(a.) When such protected State is at peace with the Protecting State, as when under section 11 of the Foreign Enlistment Act, it is sought to prevent a filibustering expedition against such protected State, though it is unnecessary to determine, for the present purpose, whether, in such a case, the "dominions" to be attacked should be regarded as dominions of the protecting or of the protected State.

(b.) When a state of hostilities exists between two such States, and they are recognized by Her Majesty's Government as belligerents, the Foreign Enlistment Act would apply to either.

That Act, being merely machinery for carrying out the international obligations of Her Majesty's Government, there is no duty upon Her Majesty to use that Act until those international obligations arise.

2. We consider that, in the present mutual relations of Great Britain, France, and Madagascar, Her Majesty's Government is not bound to enforce the provisions of the Foreign Enlistment Act. At present the state of hostilities which exists has not touched British interests, nor assumed proportions different either in degree or quality from hostilities in which Great Britain has been engaged, and of which foreign nations have not taken any public notice.

Foreign Office, April 16, 1895.

Gentlemen,

Franco-Malagasy hostilities. Treatment by French of Brit. subjects in Malagasy army.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Earl of Kimberley, the accompanying letter from the Intelligence Division of the War Office (Paper A), inclosing a Report by Captain à Court, from which it appears that he had heard the opinion expressed by military officers in France that the French military authorities in Madagascar would be justified in treating as "condottieri" the British subjects who have taken service with the Hovas, and, if captured, in at once shooting them.

In Lord Kimberley's opinion, the French authorities would have no right to treat recognized combatants in a barbarous manner which is contrary to the usages of civilized warfare, or to punish them, when taken prisoners in open fight, with the fate reserved for spies and cowards, or renegades and deserters. If the matter could be treated purely as a seditious conspiracy or riotous outbreak directed against the established Government of the country, then, possibly, the ringleaders, whether they happened to be British subjects or Hovas, being taken with arms in their hands, might be shot without Her Majesty's Government being called on to take any action.

The hostilities in Madagascar have, however, assumed proportions far beyond anything of this kind; and it would appear, moreover, from Captain à Court's Report that the French authorities propose to discriminate between combatants of British and those of Hova nationality, and to shoot only the former.

I am to inclose a despatch from the Acting British Consul at Tamatave (Paper B) respecting the employment of Colonel Shervinton and other British subjects in the military service of Madagascar; and, in connection with the general situation, I am to call your attention to your Reports of the 12th February, 1895 (Paper C), and of the 8th March, 1895 (Paper D).

The threat used has not been made authoritatively by the French Government, but it is possible that it may represent the views of the officers in command of the expedition. I am therefore to request that you will take the inclosed papers into your consideration, and that you will favour Lord Kimberley with your opinion—

1. Whether the French authorities are entitled to discriminate between British subjects serving in the armed forces of the Malagasy Government and Hovas in the like service, to the prejudice of the former.

2. Whether the French authorities are entitled to shoot British subjects serving in the Hova forces whom they may take prisoners in open fight during the pendency of the present hostilities in Madagascar.

3. Whether it is open to, or desirable for, Her Majesty's Government to take any, and, if so, what, action on Captain à Court's Report to the War Office, either by communication with the French Government or otherwise.

His Lordship would also be glad to be favoured with any general observations which you may wish to offer on the papers now submitted to you.

Report.

1. In our opinion, the French authorities are not entitled to discriminate between British subjects serving in the armed forces of the Malagasy Government and Hovas in the like service, to the prejudice of the former.

2. That the French authorities are not entitled to shoot British subjects serving in the Hova forces whom they may take prisoners in open fight during the pendency of the present hostilities in Madagascar. We assume that the British subjects in question are regularly incorporated in the regular forces of the Hovas.

3. That it is open to, and, in our opinion, desirable, for Her Majesty's Government to communicate with the French Government upon the subject in such manner as Her Majesty's Government may think fit with a view of preventing what, in our opinion, would be a violation of international law.

4. If the fighting now in progress between the French and the Hovas were merely a civil brawl, or a local popular tumult, the French might legitimately treat persons who take part in it as rioters and murderers. Or, if British subjects took part in hostilities against the French without being incorporated in any regular forces, they might be treated as private individuals unwarrantably engaged in lawless warfare, as the "Francs-Tireurs" were treated by the Germans (though in that case the German proceedings were perhaps of doubtful legality). But, as we have already stated in previous Reports to your Lordship, we are of opinion that a state of war does exist between France and Madagascar. Her Majesty's Government, as a neutral Power, have not thought fit to recognize belligerency, because there was no occasion for it in the interests of Great Britain, just as during the many wars between Great Britain and various native States other European Powers issued no such Proclamation. But the duties imposed upon belligerents by international law are in no sense dependent upon, and have no relation to the action of, neutral Powers which is dictated by their own policy and interests. If a state of war exists as distinguished from a civil broil, the authorized soldiers of one belligerent when captured by the other belligerent must be treated as prisoners of war to whatever nationality they belong, subject always to the risk of such reprisals as are recognized by international law, in case the Government they serve has itself violated that law.

We do not understand the opinion of the Law Officers of the 2nd July, 1875, to refer to this subject at all, but to the right of a foreign country to exercise its military law in respect of all British subjects who enter its military service.

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen,
Foreign Office, September 7, 1895.

Act of Canadian Parliament for execution of Treaty with France respecting Franco-Canadian trade.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit to you the papers noted in the accompanying list, which relate to the Act passed by the Parliament of Canada for the due execution of the Treaty between Great Britain and France respecting trade between the latter country and Canada.

It appeared, on examination of the Canadian Act inclosed in the letter from the Colonial Office of the 27th November, 1894, that the reduction of import duties payable on the importation into Canada of the articles mentioned in the Schedule to the Act would be confined to goods of French origin, and that the Canadian Government could not without further legislation extend the benefit of the reductions of duty provided by the Treaty to the produce of countries entitled to those reductions under most-favoured-nation clauses applying to Canada, nor extend the benefits in question to the produce of the United Kingdom or of other British Colonies.

In order to meet these objections, a second Canadian Act was drafted, copy of which will be found in the Colonial Office letter of the 6th June last (p. 82 of the Confidential Print). Certain Minutes on this Act, together with suggestions by the late Attorney-General, will be found at pp. 80-82 of the Confidential Print. The points on which this second Act seemed insufficient are stated in Lord Ripon's telegram to the Governor-General of Canada which is printed at p. 83 of the Confidential Print as an inclosure in the Colonial Office letter of the 6th June.

A third Canadian Act has now been passed with the view of extending to the United Kingdom and other British Colonies, and also to countries having most-favoured-nation clauses in their Treaties with Great Britain operative in Canada and referring to import duties, the reductions of duty granted to French produce by the above-mentioned Treaty respecting trade between Canada and France. This Act will be found in the Colonial Office letter of the 20th ultimo.

I have the honour to request you to take these papers into your consideration, and to favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion as to whether this last-mentioned Act is sufficient for the purposes stated, and, if not, as to the amendments which should be introduced into it.

I am also to ask you to favour his Lordship with any observations which may occur to you in considering these papers, and which you may think of use to his Lordship in dealing with this case.

I am to add that the insufficiency of the two first Acts received from Canada, and the consequent necessity for further legislation, has caused the ratification of the Treaty to be delayed far beyond the time usually allowed for the purpose, and I am therefore to request that you will favour Lord Salisbury with your Report at your earliest convenience.

Supplementary Convention to amend Anglo-French Extradition Treaty of 1876.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, September 17, 1895.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, the accompanying papers respecting a proposed Supplementary Convention between Great Britain and France, to amend the Extradition Treaty of the 14th August, 1876, in regard to the procedure to be adopted in this country in the case of persons whose extradition may be applied for by the French Government.

The object of the proposed Convention is to give effect, as regards France, to "The Extradition Act, 1895" (Paper A), which enables the Secretary of State in certain circumstances to direct that an extradition case may be heard by a Magistrate elsewhere than at Bow Street.

I am to request that you will take the inclosed papers into your consideration, and that you will inform Lord Salisbury whether, in your opinion, the draft Convention, as amended in red ink (Inclosure in Paper G), may, in its present shape, properly be submitted to the French Government.

His Lordship would also be glad to be favoured with any general observations which you may wish to offer on the subject of the proposed Convention.

Annex.

Draft Convention between Great Britain and France, amending Articles VII and IX of the Extradition Treaty of August 14, 1876.

HER Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, Empress of India, and the President of the French Republic, being desirous to amend Articles VII and IX of the Treaty between Great Britain and France of the 14th August, 1876, for the mutual extradition of fugitive criminals, have named as their respective Plenipotentiaries for this purpose, that is to say:

Her Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, Empress of India,

And the President of the French Republic,

Who, after having communicated to each other their respective full powers, found in good and due form, have agreed upon the following Articles:—

ARTICLE I.

The text of ~~the third paragraph of Sub-Article A of~~ Article VII of the Extradition Treaty of the 14th August, 1876, is amended by the substitution of the words "a Magistrate" for the words "the Police Magistrate who issued the warrant or some other Police Magistrate in London," in the first sentence of the third paragraph of Sub-Article (A), and by the omission of the word "Police" in the second sentence of the said paragraph and in Sub-Articles (B) and (D).

ARTICLE II.

The text of Article IX of the aforesaid Treaty is amended by the ~~omission~~ substitution of the words ~~in London~~ "a Magistrate" for the words "a Police Magistrate in London."

ARTICLE III.

The present Convention shall be ratified, and the ratifications shall be exchanged at Paris as soon as possible.

It shall come into force ten days after its publication in the manner prescribed by law in the respective countries, and shall have the same force and duration as the Treaty to which it relates.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Council Office.

"Rules Publication Act, 1893." Operation of.

Sir, Royal Courts of Justice, February 26, 1895.

WE were favoured with your letter of the 18th October last, stating that you were directed by the Lord President of the Council to transmit to us a copy of Regulations made by the Treasury, with the concurrence of the Lord Chancellor and the Speaker of the House of Commons, in pursuance of "The Rules Publication Act, 1893."

That, difficulties having arisen in the administration of the Act, the Lord President directed a letter to be addressed to the Treasury on the subject.

That you were to transmit to us a copy of the letter from your Office to the Treasury, together with a copy of the reply received from the Treasury, and that you were to request that we would be pleased to inform the Lord President whether, in our opinion, the "Rule-making authority," in the case of Orders in Council, was the Privy Council or the Department preparing the draft of the Order which required the confirmation of Her Majesty in Council.

That you were to transmit to us a list of Orders in Council (and copies of the Orders) which might come within the provisions of section 1 of the Rules Publication Act, and that you were to request, should we be of opinion that the Privy Council was the Rule-making authority in the case of those and similar Orders, that we would be pleased to inform the Lord President what Orders in Council did come within those provisions, and, further, in cases in which urgency was pleaded under section 2 of the Act by a Department forwarding a draft Order for submission to Her Majesty in Council, what course of procedure should be adopted.

We were also favoured with your letter of the 8th November last, stating that you were directed by the Lord President of the Council to transmit to us, for our consideration, a letter which had been received from the Colonial Office as to whether a proposed Order in Council under "The Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890," to amend "The Cyprus Extradition Order in Council, 1881," would, if approved by Her Majesty, be a "statutory Rule" within the meaning of section 1 of the Rules Publication Act.

We have also to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 24th December last, transmitting, for our information, a Memorandum furnished by Mr. Gray to the Foreign Office respecting the applicability of "The Rules Publication Act, 1893," to Orders in Council under the Foreign Jurisdiction Act and other classes of Orders in Council.

We have taken the papers into our consideration, and have the honour to

Report—

1. That, in our opinion, the Privy Council is the Rule-making authority whenever the Order requires the confirmation of Her Majesty in Council, whether or not the draft of the Order be prepared by any other Department. The test appears to be, what is the authority whose decision converts into law what was previously a proposal?

2. We are of opinion that an Order in Council cannot of itself be properly called a statutory Rule, but it may contain a statutory Rule, that is to say, a "Rule, Regulation, or Bye-law."

If such Rule, Regulation, or Bye-law complies with the provision of section 1, sub-section 4, of the Rules Publication Act, then the Order in Council containing it must be dealt with as provided by section 1 of that Act, otherwise not.

3. In our opinion, in the case of urgency, the provision of section 2 of that Act should be followed, but we consider it would be contrary to the spirit and intention of the Act, though perhaps within its language, if provisional Rules were to be perpetuated. The Act means that provisional Rules are only for cases of urgency, and are to be supplemented by regular Rules.

4. We do not consider that the proposed Order in Council under "The Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890," to amend the Cyprus Extradition Order, would be, or required to be, treated as a statutory Rule within the meaning of section 1 of the Rules Publication Act, because it is not directed by an Act of Parliament that such Order, or any Rules contained in it, shall be laid before Parliament within the provision of section 1, sub-section 4, of that Act.

The Attorney-General to Colonel Fellows.

Dear Colonel Fellows, House of Commons, February 27, 1895.

IN regard to your question to the Solicitor-General, it is certainly provided that any Order in Council under "The Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890," must be laid before Parliament, and that must of course be done.

But we do not consider that the Order in Council is a "statutory Rule," and it does not, in our opinion, come within section 1, sub-section 4, of the Rules Publication Act.

And, therefore, though it must be laid before Parliament, it should not, in our view, be treated as a statutory Rule.

The Solicitor-General agrees with this.

Yours truly,
(Signed) R. T. REID.

Annex 2.

Memorandum by Mr. Gray.

I HAVE, on Mr. Davidson's instructions, prepared a draft Order in Council, applying "The Colonial Prisoners' Removal Act, 1884," to the Ottoman dominions.

The Act does not deal with the removal of a prisoner from one part of a British possession to another. It is therefore necessary to apply the Act separately to Egypt and to the rest of the Ottoman dominions, as if each area were a British possession.

Mr. Davidson also invites me to state my views as to the applicability of "The Rules Publication Act, 1893," to Orders in Council under the Foreign Jurisdiction Act.

The expression "statutory Rules" is by section 4 defined as meaning "Rules, Regulations, or Bye-laws" under any Act of Parliament "which are made by . . . . Her Majesty in Council, &c.;" but the Act does not define what is to be included in the words "Rules, Regulations, or Bye-laws."

I take the words, in their ordinary acceptation as used in legislation, to mean minor provisions necessary to give effect to a major law, and made under delegated powers. But all enactments made under delegated authority are not necessarily Rules. To use the terms adopted by Mr. Whitley Stokes in his classification of the Indian Codes, law is either "substantive" or "adjective," and the superior Legislature may delegate powers of making either substantive or adjective law. "Rules, &c." would seem to refer to law of an adjective character, and to a portion only of that department of law.

The distinction which I have endeavoured to draw would seem to have been present to the minds of the Legislature in passing the Act now in question; for section 3 (4) enables the Treasury by Regulation to "determine the classes of cases in which the exercise of a statutory power by any Rule-making authority constitutes or does not constitute the making of a statutory Rule" within the meaning of that section.

The distinction may also, with respect to Orders in Council, be traced in other recent Acts. For example, sections 1 and 8 (1) of "The Mail-Ships Act, 1891," provide for the application of the Act by Order in Council, while section 8 (3) provides for Rules, also by Order in Council.

The same distinction appears in "The Colonial Courts of Admiralty Act, 1890."

"The Interpretation Act, 1889," though it does not govern the Act of 1893 to the extent of supplying the meaning of the words "Rules, Regulations, or Bye-laws," may be cited. Sections 31, 33 (3), 36 (2), and 37 of that Act appear to show that the words "Rules, Regulations, or Bye-laws" do not cover the same ground as "Order in Council." The exclusion of "Order in Council" in section 33 (3) makes it somewhat difficult to argue that that sub-section, which mentions only "Rules, Regulations, or Bye-laws," includes every Order in Council, though I am inclined to think it would apply to Rules made by an Order in Council.

As, therefore, the Act itself shows that every exercise of a statutory power is not a Rule, and as there is a tolerably well-defined class of Orders in Council to which the Act can apply [e.g., Orders under the Mail-Ships Act, section 8 (3), or under the Colonial Courts of Admiralty Act, section 13, or regulating judicial procedure under the Foreign Jurisdiction Act], I am inclined to think that Orders conferring jurisdiction, creating a Court, or otherwise making substantive enactments, are not within the operation of the Act.

It may be an anomaly, on the construction here suggested, that an Order conferring jurisdiction is not within the Act, while an Order making Rules for the exercise of that jurisdiction falls within it; if so, it is an anomaly created by Parliament. It is also an anomaly, on the other construction, that an Order giving a Secretary of State power to make Rules is within the Act, and that the Rules when so made are not within it. Such Rules would seem not to be within the purview of section 1 (4).

The object of section 1 seems to be that "public bodies" may have an opportunity of seeing and considering statutory Rules in their draft state; but I do not know of any "public body" (an expression not defined in the Act) concerned in the exercise of powers under the Foreign Jurisdiction Act. I hardly think these words apply to those Societies who from time to time favour the Foreign Office with an expression of their views.

Registration of lex loci marriages by Consular officers. Order in Council.

Gentlemen,

Foreign Office, February 23, 1895.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Earl of Kimberley, the accompanying papers respecting an Order in Council which it is proposed to issue, restricting the authority to register lex loci marriages to such Consular officers (not being marriage officers) as may from time to time be authorized for the purpose by the Secretary of State.

I am to call your attention to the Memoranda by Sir Edward Hertslet, Mr. Cockerell, and Mr. Davidson, Q.C. (Paper B), and to the letter from this Department to the Registrar-General of the 9th January, 1895 (Paper C), which explains the reasons that render it, in Lord Kimberley's opinion, undesirable that Consular officers who are not marriage officers should be allowed, without special authority, to register lex loci marriages.

I am to request that you will take the inclosed papers into your consideration, and that you will favour Lord Kimberley with your opinion whether the draft Order in Council (Paper F) may, in its present shape, properly be submitted to the Queen in Council for Her Majesty's approval.

I have, &c.

We have considered the draft Order which accompanied Sir H. Annex.

WHEREAS, by "The Foreign Marriage Act, 1892," Her Majesty the Queen in Council is authorized to make Regulations for the purposes therein specified;

Now, therefore, Her Majesty, by virtue and in exercise of the powers conferred by the said Act or otherwise enabling her in this behalf, is pleased, by and with the advice of her Privy Council, to order, and it is hereby ordered, as follows :—

1. A British Consul, or person authorized to act as British Consul, shall not, under the provisions of section 18 of "The Foreign Marriage Act, 1892," or Article 8 of "The Foreign Marriages Order in Council, 1892," register any marriages solemnized in accordance with the local law of a foreign country, unless he is a marriage officer, or is, for the time being, authorized by a Secretary of State to register such marriages; and no Consular officer shall be required to attend at the solemnization of any marriage so solemnized unless he is by, or in pursuance of, this Order authorized to register such marriage.

2. This Order may be cited as "The Foreign Marriages Order in Council, 1895."

And the Right Honourable the Earl of Kimberley, K.G., one of Her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, is to give the necessary directions herein.

Rules Publication Act. Application to Extradition Orders in Council.

Sir,

Royal Courts of Justice, April 2, 1895.

WE were favoured with your letter of the 12th ultimo, with reference to our Report of the 26th ultimo, respecting the application of "The Rules Publication Act, 1893," to Orders in Council, stating that you were directed by the Lord President of the Council to transmit to us the accompanying copy of a letter from the Foreign Office,* which raised the question as to whether Orders in Council under the Extradition Acts, 1870 and 1873, for giving effect to Extradition Treaties, came within the provisions of section 1 of the Rules Publication Act.

That you were also to transmit to us an example of the Orders in Council referred to by the Foreign Office,† as well as a copy of "The Cyprus Extradition Order in Council, 1895,"‡ which was the subject of the latter portion of our Report, and that you were to request us to favour the Lord President with our opinion on the question raised by the Foreign Office.

In compliance with the request contained in your letter, we have the honour to

Report—

That, in our opinion, Orders in Council under the Extradition Acts, 1870 and 1873, are not "Statutory Rules" within the meaning of "The Rules Publication Act, 1893." They cannot, we think, be regarded as Rules, Regulations, or Bye-laws.

Application of Rules Publication Act to Foreign Marriages O. in C.

Sir, Royal Courts of Justice, April 29, 1895.

WE were favoured with your letter of the 17th instant, stating that, with reference to previous correspondence on the subject of the application of "The Rules Publication Act, 1893," to Orders in Council made under various Acts, you were directed by the Lord President of the Council to transmit to us the accompanying draft of a proposed Order in Council, to be entitled "The Foreign Marriages Order in Council, 1895," which had been received from the Foreign Office, together with a letter from that Department, in reply to a letter from your Office inquiring if, in the opinion of the Secretary of State, the Order in Council proposed to be made came within the provisions of the Rules Publication Act.

That you were to request us to favour his Lordship with our opinion whether the draft Order in Council above mentioned came within the provisions of the 1st section of "The Rules Publication Act, 1893."

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in compliance with the request contained in your letter, have the honour to

Report—

That, in our opinion, the draft Order in Council to be entitled "The Foreign Marriages Order in Council, 1895," contains a Statutory Rule, and thus comes within the provisions of section 1 of "The Rules Publication Act, 1893." It embodies a Regulation which is subsidiary to "The Foreign Marriages Act, 1892," and which supplies a supplementary detail for carrying out the designed objects of that Act.

We think it may be of advantage to offer a further comment upon the somewhat difficult construction of "The Rules Publication Act, 1893."

A "Statutory Rule" is defined to be a "Rule, Regulation, or Bye-law."

Rules, Regulations, and Bye-laws, in our opinion, mean provisions subsidiary to an Act of Parliament which supply supplementary details for carrying out its designed objects. These three words are not mutually exclusive, but all three are used presumably because some Acts of Parliament authorize the making of "Rules," others authorize the making of "Regulations," and others authorize the making of "Bye-laws."

An Order in Council which directs that an Act of Parliament shall come into operation (e.g., under "The Extradition Act, 1870," section 2) does not appear to us to be, or to contain, a Statutory Rule at all.

It is not subsidiary or supplementary to an Act of Parliament, but summons into activity the powers of an Act theretofore dormant.

And even where such an Order in Council under the Extradition Act is accompanied by limitations, restrictions, conditions, exceptions, or qualifications (under section 2), it does not appear to us to be, or to contain, a Statutory Rule, For such an Order in Council, if it applies the Act at all, must apply the whole Act. It cannot add to, or subtract from, the Act, though it may exclude particular areas, particular individuals, or make the operation of the Order itself dependent upon conditions of time, or place, or upon any contingency, such, for example, as consents in any case of the Sovereign or Minister of either State.

We do not, however, consider that the term "Statutory Rule" is limited to Rules, Regulations, or Bye-laws which apply only within the United Kingdom. This would be inconsistent with the generality of the language used in "The Rules Publication Act, 1893," and especially in the definition clause (section 4), of which the first part is limited to the United Kingdom, while the second part extends to every Secretary of State, including the Foreign and Colonial Secretary.

Doubtful cases will no doubt arise, as the distinctions are somewhat fine, but in each case we think the question will have to be decided by the test we have indicated.

We are, &c.

Proposed Guernsey Law relative to foreigners.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, August 27, 1895.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, the accompanying papers respecting a Projet de Loi, entitled, "Loi relative aux Personnes de Nationalité étrangère," which has recently been approved by the States of Guernsey, and for which Her Majesty's sanction is requested by the Lieutenant-Governor of that island.

The proposed Law (Inclosure 3 in Paper A) enacts that aliens presenting themselves for registration shall be required to pay certain specified fees, the amount paid to be returned to such persons who may leave the island within a year without having become chargeable to the authorities or been expelled from Guernsey.

Many Treaties have been concluded between Great Britain and foreign Powers placing foreigners, in regard to taxation, in the same position as natives.

In the inclosed Return (Paper B) the Articles giving national treatment in this matter have been marked for convenience of reference, and I am to call your particular attention to the following stipulations in the Treaties with Colombia and Equator:—

"The subjects and citizens of each of the Contracting Parties . . . . . . shall not be subject, in respect of their persons or property, or in respect of passports, licences for residence or establishment, nor in respect of their commerce or industry, to any taxes, whether general or local, nor to imposts or obligations of any kind whatever, other or greater than those which are or may be imposed upon native subjects or citizens."

Other countries become entitled to privileges in the matter of taxation through the operation of the most-favoured-nation Article. Article I, for example, of the Convention between Great Britain and France of the 28th February, 1882, provides as follows: "In all that relates to . . . . the payment of taxes or other impositions, and the enjoyment of all legal rights and privileges, ... British subjects in France or in Algeria, and French in the United Kingdom, shall enjoy the treatment of the most favoured nation" (Paper C).

I am to request that you will take the matter into your consideration, and that you will inform Lord Salisbury whether, in your opinion, the provisions of the inclosed Law are contrary to existing Treaty stipulations between this country and foreign Powers. His Lordship would also be glad to be favoured with any general observations which you may wish to offer, after perusal of the inclosed papers.

Petition.

To the Queen's most Excellent Majesty in Council.

The humble Petition of the States of the Island of Guernsey,

Sheweth:

THAT for some time past a considerable number of alien immigrants have left their homes and taken up their residence in this island;

That their number appears to be annually increasing;

That in many instances they become chargeable to the authorities of this island soon after their arrival, owing to extreme poverty;

That, in consequence, the States' exchequer is being burthened annually to the extent of several hundreds of pounds for the relief and removal of such pauper immigrants;

That with a view to provide, as far as is possible, a remedy to this evil, the Royal Court, on the 11th day of May, 1895, adopted a Projet de Loi, intituled "Loi relative aux Personnes de Nationalité étrangère," and requested the Bailiff to submit the same to the consideration of the States;

That at a meeting of the States, holden before John Le Mottée, Esquire, Lieutenant Bailiff, on the 19th day of June, 1895, the States approved of the said Projet de Loi with a slight modification, with a view to its being transmitted for the sanction of your Most Excellent Majesty in Council;

Wherefore, your petitioners most humbly pray that your Majesty may be graciously pleased to grant your Royal sanction unto the above Projet de Loi, intituled "Loi relative aux Personnes de Nationalité étrangère," as set out in the Schedule hereunto annexed, and to declare it to be your Majesty's Royal will and pleasure that the same shall have force of law within your Majesty's Island of Guernsey.

And your petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

In the name and on behalf of the States:
(Signed) TH. GODFREY CAREY,
Bailiff of Guernsey.

Schedule referred to in the foregoing Petition.

Loi relative aux Personnes de Nationalité étrangère.

Les personnes de nationalité étrangère qui se présenteront au bureau des États pour s'y faire enregistrer, aux fins des Ordonnances de la Cour Royale qui les y obligent seront tenues de verser entre les mains du Trésorier des États les sommes suivantes, savoir :—

	Fr.
(a.) Un homme non-marié ou une femme sans enfants	10
(b.) Un homme marié	15
(c.) Un homme ou une femme ayant des enfants mineurs..	20

Les montants ainsi versés seront portés au crédit des États et formeront un fonds qui aidera à couvrir les frais et débours pour le soulagement temporaire et le rapatriement des personnes de nationalité étrangère tombant à charge aux États; toutefois les dits montants seront remboursés aux étrangers qui quitteront l'île avant l'expiration d'une année depuis leur arrivée sans être tombés entre-temps à la charge des États, ou sans avoir été renvoyés de l'île par acte de Cour.

2. Toute personne de nationalité étrangère qui manquera de verser le susdit montant lorsqu'elle se présentera au bureau des États pour s'y faire enregistrer, sera censée ne s'être pas présentée pour le dit objet et sera sujette d'être rapatriée par le bateau qui l'aura apportée, sauf à elle d'en appeler devant la Cour.

Foreign Office, September 21, 1895.

Gentlemen,

Proposed Guernsey Law relative to foreigners.

THE Marquess of Salisbury has had under his consideration your Report of the 10th instant on the Law relative to persons of foreign nationality which has recently been approved by the States of Guernsey.

His Lordship understands that, although the Law has been drafted in general terms, its provisions are mainly directed against French immigration into the island, an evil which would appear from the Petition to the Queen in Council from the Government of Guernsey (Inclosure in Paper A) to be assuming serious dimensions.

The Law could not, of course, be made applicable to natives of countries with whom Great Britain has concluded Treaties containing provisions similar to those in the Treaties with Colombia and Equator, to which your attention has already been drawn. This difficulty might possibly be overcome by the addition of a proviso to the following effect at the end of the Law:—

"Aucune disposition de cette Loi n'affectera les droits et privilèges accordés par les Traités aux sujets ou citoyens d'un État étranger."

France, however, has no privileges as regards taxation or licences for residence other than those which she may claim through the operation of the most-favoured-nation Article in the Convention between Great Britain and France of the 28th February, 1882 (Paper C); and in this connection I am to call your attention to the accompanying correspondence (Papers D to I) respecting the claim of British Consuls in Russia to exemption from house tax in that country. It will be seen that, although there is an Article in the Treaty between Great Britain and Russia of the 12th January, 1859 (Paper J, see Article XV), granting to the Consuls of the two countries "whatever privileges, exemptions, and immunities are or shall be granted to Consuls of the most favoured nation," Her Majesty's Government have abstained from claiming on behalf of British Consuls in Russia the exemption from payment of house tax enjoyed by French Consuls in that country under the provisions of the Treaty between Russia and France. Her Majesty's Government did not think that they would be justified in demanding, under the most-favoured-nation Article, that British Consuls in Russia should be exempted from payment of the tax when Russian Consuls in Great Britain are not exempted from the payment of a similar impost.

I am to call your attention to a French Law passed in 1893 (Paper K) respecting the conditions imposed on foreigners residing in France, and I am to request that you will favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion whether, having regard to the provisions of that Law, Her Majesty in Council may sanction the proposed Guernsey Law (with the addition of the proviso suggested) without giving to France the right to object.

Lord Salisbury would at the same time be glad to be favoured with any general observations which you may wish to offer after perusal of the inclosed papers.

I have, &c.

Report.

Assuming the proposed addition to be made, the proposed Law would not be open to objection upon its face; but the effect would, in our opinion, be that the Law would not apply to Frenchmen.

We must point out that there are serious objections to such a Law.

The question will not in all probability be raised by the French Government, or the Government of any country, but by the individual sought to be taxed, and as long as the Treaties exist containing such clauses as those in favour of Equator and Colombia the difficulty will continue.

In our judgment, the French law as to the sojourn of foreigners, or our own conduct in regard to Russia, has no bearing on the question before us.

Annex.

WHEREAS by the Extradition Acts, 1870 and 1873, it was amongst other things enacted that, where an arrangement has been made with any foreign State with respect to the surrender to such State of any fugitive criminals, Her Majesty may, by Order in Council, direct that the said Acts shall apply in the case of such foreign State; and that Her Majesty may, by the same or any subsequent Order, limit the operation of the Order, and restrict the same to fugitive criminals who are in or suspected of being in the part of Her Majesty's dominions specified in the Order, and render the operation thereof subject to such conditions, exceptions, and qualifications as may be deemed expedient; and that if, by any law made after the passing of the Act of 1870 by the Legislature of any British possession, provision is made for carrying into effect within such possession the surrender of fugitive criminals who are in or suspected of being in such British possession, Her Majesty may, by the Order in Council applying the said Acts in the case of any foreign State, or by any subsequent Order, suspend the operation within any such British possession of the said Acts, or of any part thereof, so far as it relates to such foreign State, and so long as such Law continues in force there and no longer:

And whereas by an Act of the Parliament of Canada passed in 1886, and entitled "An Act respecting the Extradition of Fugitive Criminals," provision is made for carrying into effect within the Dominion the surrender of fugitive criminals:

And whereas by an Order of Her Majesty the Queen in Council, dated the 17th day of November, 1888, it was directed that the operation of the Extradition Acts, 1870 and 1873, should be suspended within the Dominion of Canada so long as the provision of the said Act of the Parliament of Canada of 1886 should continue in force and no longer:

And whereas a Treaty was concluded on the 5th day of May, 1894, between Her Majesty and His Majesty the German Emperor, King of Prussia, for the mutual extradition of fugitive criminals between the territories of Her Majesty and certain Dependencies of Germany, which Treaty is in the terms following:—

And whereas the ratifications of the said Treaty were exchanged at London on the 3rd day of December, 1894:

Now, therefore, Her Majesty, by and with the advice of her Privy Council, and in virtue of the authority committed to her by the said recited Acts, doth order, and it is hereby ordered, that from and after the 3rd day of February, 1895, the said Acts shall apply in the case of the said Treaty with His Majesty the German Emperor, King of Prussia, and of the Dependencies of Germany referred to therein.

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Nationality of Mrs. Pietzcker, British subject by birth, but widow of a German who had lost his nationality and acquired no other.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, February 2, 1895.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Earl of Kimberley, the accompanying papers respecting an application for a British passport which has been made to Her Majesty's Consul-General at Hamburg by a Mrs. A. M. Pietzcker.

The applicant, who is now a widow, was born in England. She married, in 1875, Mr. Pietzcker, a native of Germany, who before his death forfeited his German nationality in contemplation of German law, and acquired no other national status.

Mrs. Pietzcker's national status, in contemplation of English law, depends upon the construction of section 10 (1) of "The Naturalization Act, 1870" (33 Vict., cap. 14), which runs as follows: "A married woman shall be deemed to be a subject of the State of which her husband is for the time being a subject."

It is open to doubt whether the late Mr. Pietzcker had actually forfeited his German nationality at the time of his marriage, or only at a subsequent date. The cardinal point of principle involved in the case is, however, whether, according to the correct construction of the English Statute, a married woman is to be deemed a person of no nationality because her husband is of none, or whether she is to be deemed a person of that nationality which (a) she possessed at the time when she became the wife of a husband of no nationality, or which (b) she possessed through her husband at the time when he became of no nationality.

I am to request that you will take the inclosed papers into your consideration, and that you will favour Lord Kimberley with your opinion:—

1. As to which of the alternative constructions of the Statute suggested above is correct;

2. As to whether a British passport may properly be issued to Mrs. Pietzcker; and

3. With any general observations which you may wish to offer on the case.

Report.

1. In our opinion, if a British subject marries a man who at the time of the marriage has no nationality, she retains her British nationality. If after the marriage her husband acquires a nationality, the wife also acquires that nationality, and as often as the husband acquires a fresh nationality the wife also acquires the same. And once the wife has, through her husband, acquired any alien nationality she becomes a statutory alien, and if the husband loses that nationality the wife does not by that loss regain her British nationality. We consider that this is the effect of section 10, sub-sections 1 and 2 of "The Naturalization Act, 1870," operating upon the previous common law, though the Act is obscurely worded.

2. In view of the opinion we have already expressed as to the law, the answer to this question depends upon a point of fact, viz., did Mr. Pietzcker possess any nationality at any time during his married life? As this point of fact is left uncertain we cannot answer the question. But we suggest, for the consideration of your Lordship, that you might think it advisable to exercise your powers under that part of section 7 of "The Naturalization Act, 1870," which relates to the granting of special certificates to "any person with respect to whose nationality as a British subject a doubt exists." Such a special certificate may, in our opinion, be granted without compliance with the conditions as to residence and intention required for ordinary certificates under the earlier part of the same section.

3. We do not consider that we can usefully add any further observations.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, March 16, 1895.

Naturalization of Mrs. Pietzcker. As to grant of special certificate.

I HAVE the honour to inform you, by direction of the Earl of Kimberley, that on the receipt of your Report of the 15th ultimo, respecting Mrs. Pietzcker's application for a British passport, a letter was addressed by this Department to the Home Office (Paper H), inquiring whether, in the circumstances of the case, Mr. Secretary Asquith was willing to issue a special certificate of naturalization to Mrs. Pietzcker under the provisions of section 7 of "The Naturalization Act, 1870."

I am to inclose the letter received in reply from the Home Office (Paper I), from which it will be seen that the then Law Officers of the Crown expressed an opinion on the 24th July, 1880 (p. 20 of Paper J), that the same conditions with respect to residence and service were applicable in the case of a special certificate as in the case of other certificates.

According to that opinion, the Secretary of State would have at present no power to grant a special certificate to Mrs. Pietzcker, and, in these circumstances I am to request that you will be so good as to inform Lord Kimberley whether you adhere to, or desire in any way to modify, the opinion expressed in your Report of the 15th ultimo, that a special certificate may be granted without compliance with the conditions as to residence and intention required for ordinary certificates under the earlier part of section 7 of the Naturalization Act.

I am to add that the Foreign Office was not in possession of a copy of the Report of the 24th July, 1880, when your Report of the 15th ultimo, with reference to Mrs. Pietzcker's case, first reached the Department, and had no knowledge, until the communication from the Home Office of the 4th instant was received, that your predecessors had on this particular point reported in 1880 to that Department in an opposite sense.

Report.

We have reconsidered that paragraph of our recent Report to your Lordship which, as we now learn, is in conflict with an opinion given by our predecessors on the 24th July, 1880, and notwithstanding the great authority of that opinion, we still adhere to our former view, for the following reasons:—

There are four classes of persons who may apply for certificates under sections 7 and 8 of "The Naturalization Act, 1870." In the case of three out of these four classes (viz., aliens applying for the first time, aliens who have been previously naturalized, and statutory aliens), the words of the Statute explicitly, and in each case separately, require, as a qualification for a certificate, a compliance with certain specified conditions.

In the case of the fourth class, viz., persons with respect to whose nationality as British subjects a doubt exists, the words of the Statute do not contain any reference to these specified conditions, an omission which can hardly be regarded as accidental.

But the words of the Statute do in this case prescribe that the Secretary of State is to grant a special certificate "in manner aforesaid." We do not consider that these last-mentioned words are to be taken as equivalent to the explicit requirements of compliance with specified conditions which are to be found repeated in each of the other three cases. We can perceive no reason for using language in the one case different from the language used in the three other cases, unless it was intended that the effect also of the language should be different. We think that when the Statute says the Secretary of State may grant a special certificate "in manner aforesaid," these words relate to his manner of grant only, and not to the qualifications of the persons who may ask him to make the grant. He is to be satisfied with the evidence adduced (viz., of the existence of a doubt as to the nationality), he is to exercise a discretion with or without assigning a reason, and with a view to the public good, and without appeal.

The difference in the language applied by the Statute to these several classes of persons may aptly correspond with a difference in their situation. In the cases of those who are and always have been aliens, or who were born aliens, but have been naturalized with inferior privileges, or who have already discarded British nationality, the Legislature might have seen a special reason for exacting conditions of past residence, or of service under the Crown, and of intention to continue such residence or service, before granting or restoring the full privileges accorded by the Act of 1870. All these persons either undoubtedly are or undoubtedly have been aliens, whereas, in the case of persons claiming British nationality as a right, whose title is yet open to doubt, it may reasonably have been considered unnecessary to impose such conditions before quieting doubts as to the right. It is possible, and indeed probable, that they never have been aliens at all.

Under these circumstances we remain of opinion that a special certificate may be granted under section 7 of the Act of 1870, without compliance with the conditions as to residence and intention required for ordinary certificates under the earlier part of the same section.

Claims on Govt. of Haïti on account of loss of "May Reed" and ill-treatment of her master and crew.

Gentlemen,

Foreign Office, June 4, 1895.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Earl of Kimberley, to transmit to you the papers noted on the accompanying list, which relate to the claims made on the Government of Haïti by the owner, the master, and two members of the crew of the schooner "May Reed."

The papers in the case do not include any statement showing the view taken of it by the Haïtian authorities, beyond the record of the trial of the master and the two seamen before the Court of First Instance at Cap Haïtien (see Document C); but a report on the case has now been received from Her Majesty's Consul-General in Haïti (see Document C 2, Mr. Tweedy's No. 8), which puts a somewhat different complexion on the occurrence. The information contained in the statements made by the master and the seamen (see Documents H and M) is, however, confirmed by other statements (see Documents C and A) sent home from Jamaica.

The facts of the case appear to be shortly as follows:—

The "May Reed" was a British ship of 12·71 tons, owned by Mr. C. R. Hinson (see Documents D and G), and she arrived at Cap Haïtien on the 8th August last; on the 18th of that month (see Documents H and M) the master and two of the crew were arrested on a charge of smuggling; they were tried on the 25th October (see Document B); no witnesses were called, but the Court, relying as would seem on the Customs documents showing that the articles alleged to have been smuggled had been duly declared, and on a letter from the Chief Financial Administrator of the district stating that the Customs officials had taken due cognizance of the articles in question three days before the men were arrested, acquitted the prisoners. An appeal was lodged against this decision; the grounds of the appeal do not appear, neither is it clear that the appeal was ever heard. On the 30th January last (or, according to the seamen, on the 29th), after the men had been in prison 166 days, they were told that they were free (see Document H).

In the meantime, the remaining members of the crew, being unable to manage the schooner, and having no resources, had returned home, and the vessel had gone to the bottom of the sea (see Documents E and H).

The men state (see Documents H and M) that they were confined in a cell some 12 feet square, absolutely unprovided with any sanitary arrangements whatsoever, and that there were frequently as many as twenty-two other prisoners in it. There were neither beds nor bedding. They were constantly short of water, and had to rely on the kindness of friends for their food. Medical assistance was refused to them, although the two seamen suffered from fever, and the master from fever, diarrhœa, and dysentery.

The cell in which the men were confined is described (see Documents C and A) by other persons as "extremely close and filthy," "a miserable dirty place," and one of the persons in question stated that he would not go back to see the men on account of the vermin.

It will be observed that, according to the statement made by the master, the men were offered their liberty if they would ask for pardon and renounce all claim to compensation (see Document H).

The papers contain a certificate by a Government medical officer of Grand Turk (see Document K) as to the extent to which the master's health suffered by the treatment to which he was subjected, and it is presumable, and is also said by them to have been the case (see Document M), that the seamen suffered much in health. The medical officer states that the master will certainly never be able to resume his calling as a ship-master.

The claims put forward are as follows:—

By the owner of the "May Reed" (see Document F)—	Dollars.
For the loss of that vessel	25,000
Hire of the "Pandora" for ascertaining the particulars of the loss of the "May Reed"	150
Loss of the use of the "May Reed" during the detention of the master ..	830
By the master of the "May Reed" (see Document L)—	£
For illegal arrest and cruel treatment during detention	1,660
For injury to health	1,000
Privations of his family during his detention	200
For sundry expenses	1,000
By the two seamen of the "May Reed" (see Document N)—
For illegal arrest, cruel treatment during detention, injury to health, &c., each	5,000

The usual earnings of the men and the vessel are not stated in the papers, but the value of the "May Reed" is put by the Commissioner of the Turks Islands at between 100*l*. and 150*l*., and the hire of such a boat as the "Pandora" for the journey from Turks Islands to Cap Haïtien and back at between 5*l*. and 10*l*. (see Document D).

I have the honour to request you to take these papers into your consideration, and to favour Lord Kimberley with your opinion as to whether Her Majesty's Government can properly make a claim on the Government of Haïti for compensation for the owner, the master, and the two seamen of the "May Reed" in consequence of the action of the servants of that Government as set forth in the papers.

2. If so, whether the sums respectively demanded by the claimants are reasonable, or if in any case the sum specified should be, in your opinion, unreasonable and excessive, what amount might in such case properly be demanded in substitution by Her Majesty's Government.

3. And, lastly, I am to ask you to favour his Lordship with any further observations which may suggest themselves to you, and which you may think will be of assistance to his Lordship in dealing with this case.

I am, &c.

Report.

In our opinion, Her Majesty's Government can properly make a claim on the Government of Haïti for compensation for the owner, the master, and the two seamen of the "May Reed" in consequence of the action of the servants of that Government.

Originally the master was to blame in not manifesting a small part of his cargo, but the penalties were waived, and an undertaking accepted to pay duties on these goods. Even if the penalties had not been waived, the treatment of the three men would have been wholly inexcusable, especially in the case of the two seamen.

In fact, they were acquitted of breach of the law, and the attempted removal of these goods from one house to another which gave occasion to their arrest appears to have been lawful and innocent.

As regards all three, their protracted detention before trial, and their subsequent detention until payment of the duties, were unjustifiable. The filthy and unsanitary condition of the prison, and the refusal of proper food and of medical relief, if we are to accept the apparently reliable statements contained in the papers before us, expose the Government of Haïti to a charge of wilful cruelty of a serious kind.

The loss of the vessel appears to have been the consequence of the unwarrantable imprisonment of the master and two of the crew.

2. We consider this is a bad case of oppression, for which smart compensation should be paid, but the sums claimed appear to be excessive. We think 260*l*. is sufficient for the loss of the vessel, and 1,000*l.* for the master and 500*l.* for each of the crew would be a proper compensation.

3. We desire to add that the conduct of Gardiner in not paying the duties till the 30th January seems somewhat unintelligible; but whether he was to blame or not, we do not consider that his neglect would justify the imprisonment of the three men, or in any way excuse the Haïtian Government for their treatment of the prisoners.

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, May 6, 1895.

Detention of "Lottie May" at Ruatan and imprisonment of her master, E. S. Bodden. Claim for compensation.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Earl of Kimberley, the papers noted in the accompanying list which relate to a claim for compensation on account of the detention of the British schooner "Lottie May," at Ruatan Island, Spanish Honduras, and the imprisonment of her master, E. S. Bodden.

The master's account of what occurred is as follows (see Paper A):—

The "Lottie May" arrived at Ruatan Island in July, 1892, at a time when a rebellion was in progress, the northern mainland ports of the Republic being in the hands of the rebels.

After selling his cargo Mr. Bodden asked for a clearance for the north of the island, which was refused by the Acting Commandant of the port.

He then applied for a clearance for Grand Cayman, a British possession. This the Acting Commandant also refused, saying that he would not grant a clearance for any port. The master then said that he would go to Truxillo to report himself to Her Majesty's Consul, whereupon the Acting Commandant declared that if he left Ruatan without permission he would sink his ship.

The master then returned to his ship. Some time after, five armed men came on board with a message to him from the Acting Commandant to follow them on shore.

Bodden complied, and on landing was arrested and put into prison, where he was kept for six days.

On the second day, in consequence of the unhealthiness of his place of incarceration, he was taken ill, but no notice was taken of his request for medical assistance. On the sixth day he was liberated, returned on board, and left Ruatan.

The mate and a seaman of the "Lottie May" deposed to the arrest, but were ignorant of what happened on shore at the time of the application for a clearance (Inclosure in Paper B).

The matter was referred to Mr. Gosling, Her Majesty's Minister in Central America, for a Report, and on the 23rd February, 1893 (Paper C, Inclosure 5), he represented it to the Honduranean Government, asking for an investigation and pecuniary satisfaction, if the facts, which were alleged, should turn out to be true.

The master claimed 2,300*l.* compensation, and the owners 1,134*l.*, but Mr. Gosling appears only to have advanced the latter claim.

In reply (Paper C, Inclosure 2), the Honduranean Government refused to entertain the claim, stating that the facts precluded them from making an analysis of the case, and that the proceedings of the authorities could not be otherwise than approved by them, since (1) clearance was requested for places occupied by parties who had risen in arms against the order of things legally established in the country, and not for the north of the Island of Ruatan, as alleged; and (2) during the continuance of a state of siege.

Certified copies of the evidence which the Honduranean Government had caused to be taken were furnished with their reply (Paper C, Inclosure 4), including that of the Acting Commandant Fuentes, who had refused the clearances.

The Acting Commandant states that he was given strict orders not to allow any vessel to sail for any place during six days with a view to preventing the transmission of information to the enemy who were in possession of Truxillo and La Ceiba, ports in the north of Honduras, that the master of the "Lottie May" first asked for a clearance for the north coast of the island (not, it is observed, for the north coast of the mainland of Honduras, as stated by the Foreign Minister), that this was refused, and that the master then asked for a clearance for Truxillo, which was also refused, that Bodden then became irritated and used offensive language about the Honduranean flag, and said he would leave with or without a clearance, in consequence of which he was put under arrest.

The other witnesses, Reyes, Yates, and Rivera, state that the clearance was refused because the port for which it was requested was in the hands of the enemy. They make no mention of a clearance having been requested for the north of the island or for Grand Cayman, but the master's statement that he first applied for a clearance for the north of the island (of Ruatan) is borne out by that of the Acting Commandant, and it is clear that the orders given were to refuse all clearances from Ruatan for whatever destination.

As regards the arrest, the evidence communicated by the Minister for Foreign Affairs shows that it was made to prevent the master's departure without a clearance.

The Acting Commandant, Reyes, and Rivera all state this in so many words. Yates alone suggests that it was due to Bodden's use of offensive language about the Honduranean flag.

It is presumed that the Minister for Foreign Affairs was making allusion to this in his reply when he said that the nature of the evidence forbade his analysing it, and thereby adopted the theory advanced by Yates.

Inquiries were therefore made through the Colonial Office as to whether Bodden really had used the language attributed to him, and Bodden formally denied having done so (Paper B), adding that no mention was made of this matter at the time of the arrest, which he was given to understand was due to a wish to prevent his leaving for Truxillo.

The character of Yates, on whose evidence alone the charge was made, does not bear scrutiny (Paper D).

The Honduranean reply not being considered satisfactory, Mr. Gosling was instructed to make a further emphatic representation on the subject, and to ask for some adequate compensation (Paper E).

A further reply was received on the 14th January last, reiterating the refusal to entertain the claim, on the same grounds, namely, that the authorities acted rightly in refusing the clearance, as the Republic was at the time in a state of siege, and the ports for which clearance was asked were in the hands of the enemy (Paper F).

The Honduranean Government, therefore, claim the right to refuse clearances for whatever destination from their ports when the Republic is in a state of siege.

I am to request that you will take the papers transmitted herewith into your consideration, and favour Lord Kimberley with your opinion as to whether the existence of a state of siege entitled the Government of Honduras to instruct their authorities at Ruatan to refuse a clearance for the "Lottie May" to proceed—

1. To the northern portions of the Island of Ruatan, which were not in the hands of the rebels.
2. To Truxillo, or any other port in the possession or under the control of the Honduranean rebels.
3. To Grand Cayman, a British possession, or to any other non-Honduranean port.
4. Also as to whether the Honduranean Government were justified in arresting Mr. Bodden in order to prevent him or the vessel of which he was master from leaving Ruatan; and
5. Generally on the case.

I am, &c.

Report.

We think it will be more convenient to state our opinion upon the law before applying it to the points put to us in the first question.

We consider that the existence of a state of war, or of a state of siege, does not as a rule warrant any Power in detaining the ships of a friendly nation. No higher rights can be claimed by a de jure Government in conflict with insurgents than belong to one Power at war with another, and in such a situation neutral commerce cannot in general be interrupted except when an effective blockade is in force, or the vessel detained has violated the laws of neutrality. But there may be exceptional instances in which a fair case of military necessity would excuse a belligerent Power for detaining an innocent neutral ship even though there be no blockade. For example, had the British Commander at Alexandria thought it necessary to detain, and detained, all the vessels at that port for a short time in order to prevent his intended descent upon the Suez Canal from being divulged to the enemy, foreign nations could not have complained. But in that event, we think compensation would have been payable, and certainly the utmost care would have been imperative to make the detention as short and as little onerous as possible. Other necessities of a like kind may readily be imagined.

1, 2, 3. To apply this view of the law to the present facts, we are of opinion that the Government at Honduras, if they had a fair case of military necessity, would have been justified in refusing clearance for any port. We can suppose that such a case existed in regard to ports in the occupation of insurgents, though the reasons do not appear in the papers before us, but so far as we can see there was no such case as regards ports in the north of the island, and still less as regards British ports. And in any case we think compensation was payable for the detention.

4. That the Government of Honduras was not justified in arresting Mr. Bodden in order to prevent him, or the vessel, from leaving Ruatan. If they were entitled to stop the ship (a point already dealt with) they were bound to exercise a right of so exceptional a character in the most considerate way, and it might have been done more effectually without the arrest of the master.

5. That the arrest of Mr. Bodden was not in fact, as we collect from the documents, based upon any contumelious language which he may have used. We think it is not established that he did use such language, and even if he did, he ought not to have been punished by summary arrest without trial, especially as it appears from the evidence of Mr. Yates (who alone speaks to this point) that the language was not used in the presence of the Commandant who inflicted the punishment, nor established by any legal proceedings. The character of the imprisonment and the disregard of requests for medical aid are aggravating circumstances.

We desire to add that the claims made both by the owners and Mr. Bodden appear to us to be extravagant, and even preposterous in amount.

Gentlemen,

Proposed Extradition Treaty with Italy.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Earl of Kimberley, to transmit to you the draft of a Treaty of Extradition which it is proposed by Her Majesty's Government to conclude with the Italian Government in place of the Treaty of the 5th February, 1873, which was negotiated before the passing of "The Extradition Act, 1873," and which has been found to be in many respects defective.

I am also to inclose letters from the Colonial, India, and Home Offices, to which Departments the draft has been submitted for observations, together with previous printed correspondence, showing the circumstances under which the Treaty has been negotiated; and I am to call your special attention to the amendments which have been introduced in Articles II, III, VII and XVII of the Treaty of 1873, to Article XII (providing for provisional arrest), to Article XIV, and to the Protocol relative to the extradition of persons accused of crimes punishable with death.

I am to request that you will take these papers into your consideration, and favour Lord Kimberley with your opinion whether the proposed Treaty may properly be submitted to the Government of Italy for their consideration in its present draft shape.

Report.

In our opinion, the proposed Treaty may properly be submitted to the Government of Italy for their consideration in its present draft shape. We think it right, however, to add the following suggestions for your Lordship's consideration:—

1. In Article II (1) a conspiracy to commit manslaughter would in English law be a conspiracy to commit murder, and the 1st schedule to "The Extradition Act, 1870," only includes conspiracies to commit murder.

2. Article II (4).—It seems to us that the introduction of counterfeit foreign coins into Great Britain, provided they are gold or silver, is an extradition crime according to British law (see schedule to Extradition Act of 1873, making an offence under 24 & 25 Vict., cap. 99, an extradition offence). Section 19 of that Act deals with the introduction of counterfeit foreign gold and silver coin.

Instead of "use of an article," it would be better to retain the former words "uttering of the thing." "Uttering" is a word known to English criminal law, and is to be found in the 1st schedule to "The Extradition Act, 1870."

The words at the end of this Article, "even if the truth has not been materially altered or falsified," appear to us to be dangerous. An alteration of a document where the truth has not been materially altered would not be a crime in England if we rightly understand what the Italian Government desire. We would suggest that some further explanation might be asked as to this.

3. Article XI.—We think the word "Minister" should be substituted for the word "Department" (see section 16 of "The Extradition Act, 1870").

Annex.

Draft Treaty between Her Majesty and the King of Italy for the Mutual Surrender of Fugitive Criminals.

HER Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, Empress of India, and His Majesty the King of Italy, having judged it expedient, with a view to the better administration of justice, and to the prevention of crime within their respective territories, that persons charged with or convicted of the crimes hereinafter enumerated, and being fugitives from justice, should, under certain circumstances, be reciprocally delivered up; their said Majesties have named as their Plenipotentiaries to conclude a Treaty for this purpose, that is to say:

Her Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, Empress of India,

And His Majesty the King of Italy,

Who, after having communicated to each other their respective full powers, found in good and due form, have agreed upon and concluded the following Articles:—

ARTICLE I.

The High Contracting Parties engage to deliver up to each other reciprocally any persons who, being accused or convicted of any of the crimes specified in the Article following, committed within the territory of either of the said parties, shall be found within the territory of the other, in the manner and under the conditions determined in the present Treaty.

ARTICLE II.

The crimes for which the extradition is agreed to are the following:—

1. Murder, or manslaughter, and attempt or conspiracy to commit those crimes.
2. Maliciously wounding, or inflicting grievous bodily harm.
3. Assaulting a Magistrate, or peace, or public officer.
4. Counterfeiting or altering money, and uttering or bringing into circulation counterfeit or altered money. Importation into Great Britain of British, or into Italy of Italian counterfeit coin, or coin which has been tampered with. Forgery, counterfeiting or altering, or use of an article or document forged or counterfeited or altered, including false declarations or registrations, even if the truth has not been materially altered or falsified.
5. Larceny, embezzlement, or unlawful abstraction or appropriation.
6. Malicious injury to property, if the offence be indictable.
7. Obtaining money, valuable security, or goods by false pretences.
8. Receiving any chattel, money, valuable security, or other property, knowing the same to have been stolen, embezzled, or unlawfully obtained.
9. Fraudulent bankruptcy.
10. Fraud, abstraction, or unlawful appropriation, by a bailee, banker, agent, factor, trustee, director, or member, or officer of any public or private Company or house of commerce.
11. Perjury and subornation of perjury.
12. Rape.
13. Carnal knowledge of a girl under the age of 16.
14. Indecent assault, accompanied with violence or menace, or committed in a public place, or upon a girl under 16 years of age.
15. Administering drugs, or using instruments with intent to procure the miscarriage of women.

16. Abduction.
17. Child stealing, kidnapping, and false imprisonment.
18. Exposing or abandoning a child under 12 years of age.
19. Bigamy.
20. Burglary and housebreaking, including, inter alia, the crimes designated by the Italian Penal Code as entry by night, or even by day, with fracture or escalade, or by means of false key or other instrument, into the dwelling of another person with intent to commit a crime.
21. Arson.
22. Robbery with violence.
23. Any malicious act done with intent to endanger the safety of any person travelling or being upon a railway.
24. Threats by letter or otherwise, with intent to extort money or anything else.
25. Piracy, according to international law, when the pirate, a subject of neither of the High Contracting Parties, has committed depredations on the coasts, or on the high seas, to the injury of subjects of the requiring Party, or when, being a subject of the requiring Party, and having committed acts of piracy to the injury of a third State, he may be within the territory of the other Party; and provided that he have not been already subjected to trial for the offence.
26. Sinking or destroying, or attempting to sink or destroy, a vessel at sea.
27. Assaults on board a ship on the high seas with intent to kill or to do grievous bodily harm.
28. Revolt or conspiracy by two or more persons on board a ship on the high seas against the authority of the master.
29. Dealing in slaves in such a manner as to constitute an offence against the law of both States.

Accomplices before or after the fact in any of these crimes shall, moreover, also be delivered up, provided their complicity be punishable by the laws of both the Contracting Parties.

Extradition may also be granted, at the discretion of the State to which application is made, in respect of any other crime for which, according to the laws of both the Contracting Parties for the time being in force, the grant can be made.

ARTICLE III.

The British Government reserves to itself the power to grant or to refuse, at its pleasure, the surrender of British subjects who have committed in Italian territory crimes for which extradition would be granted; and the Italian Government, on its part, undertakes to proceed against its own subjects for crimes committed by them on British territory in all cases which, from its own point of view, it considers sufficiently grave to warrant such proceedings.

ARTICLE IV.

In any case where an individual convicted or accused shall have obtained naturalization in either of the two Contracting States after the commission of the crime, such naturalization shall not prevent the search for, arrest, and delivery of the individual. The extradition may, however, be refused if five years have elapsed from the grant of naturalization, and the individual have been domiciled from the grant thereof, in the State to which the application is made.

ARTICLE V.

No accused or convicted person shall be given up if the offence for which he is claimed is political; or if he proves that the demand for his surrender has been made with the intention of trying and punishing him for a political offence.

ARTICLE VI.

The extradition shall not be granted if, since the commission of the crime, the commencement of proceedings, or the conviction, such a length of time have elapsed as to bar the penal prosecution or the punishment, according to the laws of the State to which application is made.

ARTICLE VII.

The accused or convicted person who has been given up shall not, until he has been liberated, or has had an opportunity of returning to the country in which he was living, be imprisoned in the State to which he has been given up, for any crime unless it be a crime of like nature to that in respect of which extradition was granted, and a crime proved by the evidence on which the claim for extradition was based, and be not a crime for which by this Treaty no extradition can be granted.

This does not apply to offences committed after the extradition.

ARTICLE VIII.

If the individual claimed be under prosecution or in custody for a crime committed in the country where he has taken refuge, his surrender may be deferred until the law has taken its course.

In case he should be proceeded against or detained in such country on account of obligations contracted with private individuals, or any other civil claim, his surrender shall nevertheless take place, the injured party retaining his right to prosecute his claims against him before the competent authority.

ARTICLE IX.

The requisitions for extradition shall be made, respectively, by means of the Diplomatic Agents of the High Contracting Parties.

The demand for the extradition of an accused person must be accompanied by a warrant of arrest issued by the competent authority of the State applying for the extradition, and by such proof as, according to the law of the place where the fugitive is found, would justify his arrest if the crime had been committed there.

If the requisition relates to a person convicted, it must be accompanied by the sentence of condemnation of the competent Court of the State applying for the extradition.

The demand for extradition must not be founded upon a sentence in contumaciam.

ARTICLE X.

If the demand for extradition be made according to the foregoing stipulations, the competent authorities of the State, to which the requisition is made, shall proceed to arrest the fugitive.

The prisoner shall be taken before the competent Magistrate, who shall examine him and make the preliminary investigations of the affair, in the same manner as if the arrest had taken place for a crime committed in the same country.

ARTICLE XI.

In the examinations to be made in conformity with the preceding stipulations, the authorities of the State to which the application is made shall admit, as entirely valid evidence, the documents and depositions taken on oath in the other State, or copies of them, and likewise the warrants and sentences issued there; provided that such documents and depositions are signed or certified by a Judge, Magistrate, or other officer of such State, and are authenticated by the oath of some witness, or stamped with the official seal of the Department of Justice or some other Department of State.

ARTICLE XII.

A fugitive criminal may be apprehended under a warrant issued by any Police Magistrate, Justice of the Peace, or other competent authority in either country, on such information or complaint, and such evidence, or after such proceedings as would, in the opinion of the authority issuing the warrant, justify the issue of a warrant if the crime had been committed or the person convicted in that part of the dominions of the two Contracting Parties in which the Magistrate, Justice of the Peace, or other competent authority exercises jurisdiction: provided, however, that in the United Kingdom the accused shall in such case be sent as speedily as possible before a Police Magistrate in London. He shall, in accordance with this Article, be discharged, as well in Italy as in the United Kingdom, if within the term of thirty days a requisition for extradition shall not have been made by the Diplomatic Agent of his country in accordance with the stipulations of this Treaty. The same rule shall apply to the cases of persons accused or convicted of any of the crimes or offences specified in this Treaty, and committed on the high seas on board any vessel of either country which may come into a port of the other.

ARTICLE XIII.

If, within two months from the arrest of the accused, or within such further time as the State to which application is made, or the proper Tribunal thereof shall direct, sufficient evidence be not produced for his extradition, he shall be liberated.

ARTICLE XIV.

The extradition shall take place only if the evidence be found sufficient, according to the Laws of the State applied to, either to justify the committal of the prisoner for trial, in case the crime had been committed in the territory of the same State, or to prove that the prisoner is the identical person convicted by the Courts of the State which makes the requisition, and that the crime of which he has been convicted is one in respect of which extradition could, at the time of such conviction, have been granted by the State applied to; and no criminal shall be surrendered until after the expiration of fifteen days from the date of his committal to prison to await the warrant for his surrender.

ARTICLE XV.

If the prisoner be not given up and taken away within two months from his apprehension, or from the decision of the Court upon the demand for a writ of habeas corpus in the United Kingdom, he shall be set at liberty, unless sufficient cause be shown for the delay.

ARTICLE XVI.

If the individual claimed by one of the two Contracting Parties, in conformity with the present Treaty, should be also claimed by another or by other States on account of crimes committed in their territories, his surrender shall, in preference, be granted according to priority of demand, unless an agreement be made between the Governments which make the requisition, either on account of the gravity of the crimes committed, or for any other reason.

ARTICLE XVII.

All money and articles found in the possession of the prisoner at the time of his arrest shall be seized, in order to be delivered up with him. All money and articles in the legal possession of the prisoner, though actually in the hands of another person, shall also be delivered up, if, after the apprehension of the accused, they come into the hands of the authorities. Such delivery shall not be limited to the property or articles obtained by the crime for which he is surrendered, but shall include everything that may serve as evidence of the crime; and it shall take place even when the extradition, after having been ordered, cannot take effect, either on account of the escape or the death of the delinquent.

ARTICLE XVIII.

All expenses connected with extradition shall be borne by the demanding State.

ARTICLE XIX.

The stipulations of the present Treaty shall be applicable to the Colonies and foreign possessions of the two High Contracting Parties.

The requisition for the surrender of a person accused or condemned, who has taken refuge in any such Colony or possession of either party, shall be made to the Governor or chief authority of such Colony or possession by the chief Consular officer of the other residing in such Colony or possession; or, if the accused or condemned person has escaped from a Colony or foreign possession of the party on whose behalf the requisition is made, the requisition shall be made by the Governor or chief authority of such Colony or possession.

Such requisitions may be disposed of in accordance, as far as possible, with the stipulations of this Treaty, by the respective Governors or chief authorities, who, however, shall be at liberty either to grant the extradition, or to refer the matter to their own Government.

Her Britannic Majesty shall nevertheless be at liberty to make special arrangements in the British Colonies and foreign possessions for the surrender to His Italian Majesty of criminals who may have taken refuge in such Colonies or possessions, always in conformity, so far as possible, with the provisions of the present Treaty.

Finally, it is agreed that this stipulation does not apply to the Island of Malta, the Ordinance of the Maltese Government of the 21st February, 1863, remaining in full force.

ARTICLE XX.

The High Contracting Parties declare that the present stipulations apply as well to persons accused or convicted, whose crimes, on account of which the extradition is demanded, may have been committed previously, as to those whose crimes may be committed subsequently to the date of this Treaty.

ARTICLE XXI.

From the day when the present Treaty shall come into force the Treaty of Extradition between the two countries of the 5th February, 1873, shall cease to have effect.

1895

ARTICLE XXII.

The present Treaty shall come into operation ten days after its publication according to the forms prescribed by the laws of the High Contracting Parties.

Either party may at any time put an end to this Treaty, which, however, shall remain in force for six months after the notice for its termination.

This Treaty shall be ratified, and the ratifications shall be exchanged at Rome within six weeks, or sooner if possible.

In witness whereof the respective Plenipotentiaries have signed in duplicate, in English and Italian, the present Treaty, and have affixed thereto their respective seals.

Protocol.

On proceeding to the signature of the Treaty of Extradition concluded this day, the undersigned Plenipotentiaries of Her Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, Empress of India, and of His Majesty the King of Italy, have agreed upon the following declaration:—

The Italian Government may, in its absolute discretion, refuse to deliver up any person charged with a crime punishable with death.

This Protocol shall have the same force and the same duration as the Treaty of Extradition signed to-day.

In witness whereof the respective Plenipotentiaries have signed the same, and have affixed thereto the seal of their arms.

No. 33.

[February 11, 1895.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, January 5, 1895.

Right of Japanese to search British vessel "Gaelic" at Yokohama.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Earl of Kimberley, the papers noted in the accompanying list, which relates to the visitation and search of the British steam-ship "Gaelic" by the Japanese naval authorities at Yokohama in November last.

The "Gaelic" is a British steamer belonging to the Oriental and Occidental Steam-ship Company, and is one of a Line of steamers running under the management of an American Company and conveying passengers and the United States' mails between San Francisco and Hong Kong, calling only at Japanese ports en route. She arrived at Yokohama from San Francisco on the 2nd November. On the afternoon of the 4th, while still lying in the harbour, she was surrounded by Japanese vessels of war, and she was boarded the next morning by an officer of the Japanese navy, accompanied by other naval officers, an interpreter, and a body of police and Customs officers, and subjected to a search ostensibly for contraband of war. A demand was also made, but not persisted in, that the lower hold should be discharged. The master having made a preliminary protest against the search on the ground that he had no contraband articles on board, eventually submitted to it as an exercise of force, and afforded the boarding officer every facility.

On the afternoon of the same day, the 5th, the master was imformed by the naval authorities that he was at liberty to proceed, and the vessel left the port at about 3·45 P.M. (Paper A).

From what subsequently occurred (Papers B and C) it appears that the real object of the Japanese authorities was not to search for contraband of war, but to effect the arrest of three passengers supposed to be on board the "Gaelic," two said to be citizens of the United States and one a Chinese subject, on the ground that the former had entered into a Contract with the Chinese Government for the supply of torpedoes or explosives for the destruction of vessels by means of a new plan, and that the Chinaman, who was stated to have been connected with the Chinese Legation at Washington, had been concerned in the engagement of the Americans.

These persons, who arrived in the "Gaelic" from San Francisco, had left her at Yokohama and gone on board the French steamer "Sydney," one of the vessels of the Messageries Maritimes, which left Yokohama on the 3rd November bound for Shanghae, calling at Kobé and Nagasaki. On the 5th, while the "Sydney" was at Kobé, she was visited and searched, the three passengers were arrested, taken on shore and held as prisoners of war, the vessel being then allowed to proceed on her voyage. A number of incriminating documents were seized at the same time.

The Americans were detained until the 11th, when, on signing a paper purporting to be an engagement on their part that if released they would not enter the service of the Chinese Government during the continuance of the war, they were given 500 dollars each and set at liberty. The Chinese suspect was sent to Hiroshima.

The circumstances connected with the proceedings of the Japanese authorities in the case of the "Gaelic" are dealt with in a Memorandum drawn up by Mr. Wilkinson, Crown Advocate at Shanghae and Acting Judge of Her Majesty's Court for Japan (Inclosure 1 in Paper D). In view of the considerations which he sets forth, he states as his opinion:—

1. That the "Gaelic," being bound from a neutral port to a neutral port, was not liable to seizure for having on board the three passengers referred to, even if they were in the military or naval service of China.

2. That the forcible removal of such passengers from the "Gaelic" would have been unlawful.

3. That if the object of the visitation and search of the "Gaelic" was the removal of those passengers, it was from the beginning unlawful.

4. That there is sufficient evidence to justify Her Majesty's Government in treating the search as having that object.

5. That such search for such object is a matter of serious complaint on the part of Her Majesty's Government.

6. That the gravity of the complaint depends largely, though not exclusively, on the correctness of the two propositions:—

(a.) That the neutral destination of the vessel is conclusive as to the destination of the goods and persons on board; and

(b.) That the immunity which a British vessel enjoys while in Japanese waters by virtue of the Treaty from visitation or search by the Japanese authorities is not abrogated by the state of war, further than to allow the exercise of the ordinary belligerent rights recognized by international law, and that no person or thing is subject to arrest or seizure by the Japanese authorities on board a British ship in Japanese waters, if the presence of such person or thing on board such vessel would not render her liable to seizure on the high seas, unless such person or thing should become by reason of their presence in Japanese waters a source of danger beyond what they would be if on the high seas.

7. That it is therefore expedient that the views of Her Majesty's Government on these propositions should be ascertained before making any complaint, which would have the effect of opening up a controversy as to their correctness.

8. That the display of force at the search of the "Gaelic" was more than was necessary under any of the circumstances here considered, but that, if the visitation and search were on any grounds admissible, an excessive display of force as distinguished from an excessive use of it is a matter rather for friendly representation than for serious complaint.

9. That such of the three men, if any, as were in the military or naval service of China became contraband while on board the "Sydney" on her voyage to Shanghae and rendered liable to seizure as a merchant-vessel, but that she would not as a man-of-war be so liable.

10. That the Japanese authorities in claiming not to seize the vessel and to proceed to adjudication, but to seize persons on board and remove them against the protests of the French authorities, acted unlawfully whether the vessel is to be considered as a merchant-vessel or as a man-of-war.

As far as the general questions under consideration are concerned, there is a very important distinction between the cases of the "Gaelic" and the "Sydney," although both were neutral vessels, for the "Gaelic" had a neutral destination, while the "Sydney" had a hostile destination, the ultimate destination of the "Gaelic" being Hong Kong, while the ultimate destination of the "Sydney" was Shanghae.

This might doubtless have affected the decision of the Prize Court had either vessel been visited and searched on the high seas and been subsequently brought in for adjudication on the ground that she had contraband goods or persons on board. Still even in the case of the "Sydney" a Japanese cruiser stopping her on the high seas would have had no right forcibly to take off the three persons who were charged to be contraband and to deal with them without the intervention of a Prize Court.

The principal difficulty, however, which the case involves is whether the rights of the Japanese in their own territorial waters are no greater than they would be on the high seas, and whether in any matters directly connected with the waging of war Her Majesty's Government should concede to Japan, Treaties notwithstanding, every right which would be conceded to a European belligerent, and not claim to interpose ex-territorial privileges, so as to deprive Japan of rights in connection with war which she would enjoy if she were a European Power, which states, at any rate for the limited purpose of waging war, she has been recognized as possessing.

If the contrary view were maintained, Her Majesty's Government would be bound to object to the search of the "Gaelic," or to any such search at all, as involving a breach of Treaty obligation, and a violation of the immunity possessed by a British ship in the waters of Japan, and also of the immunity of the persons on board.

A Memorandum by Sir E. Hertslet, attached to a telegram from Mr. Trench of the 8th November (Paper E), shows how far the matter is affected by the Treaties now in force between Great Britain and Japan.

Her Majesty's Government are natually not concerned to argue the case of the "Sydney," which is the affair of the French Government, though the views of that Government are not unimportant in considering what line of action should be taken. It seems clear from Mr. Trench's telegram of the 14th November (Paper F), that the French Government do not intend to raise questions of the kind involved in Mr. Wilkinson's Memorandum, and indeed they have apparently admitted that they would not object to such a search as that which took place on the "Sydney" if the action of the authorities—presumably in carrying out the search—were unobjectionable.

The question raised in Mr. Wilkinson's note (Inclosure 2 in Paper D) as to the destination of vessels being conclusive with regard to the destination of goods, despatches, and persons was dealt with by telegraph (Papers G, H, I).

Mr. Trench inquires whether, if occasion arose, he should contend that the neutral destination of the vessel is conclusive as to the destination of all goods and persons on board. He was informed, in reply, that he might do so, and maintain the doctrine set forth in Professor Holland's "Manual of Naval Prize Law," 1888, section 73, the view taken being that, in order to render goods which are in their essence contraband of war, liable to seizure and condemnation as such, they must be taken in delicto, that is, in the actual prosecution of a voyage to an enemy's port.

In a further Memorandum (Inclosure 3 in Paper D) Mr. Wilkinson calls attention to the action of the Japanese authorities in the matter of the "Gaelic" as affecting the safety of the British reserved merchant cruizers, the three steamers of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, the "Empress of India," "Empress of China," and "Empress of Japan," which call at Yokohama, Kobé, Nagasaki, and Shanghae on their way from Vancouver to Hong Kong, and on their way back.

Mr. Trench suggested for consideration in a telegram of the 6th November (Paper G) whether these three steamers of the Empress Line should not discontinue calling at Shanghae, and he was told (Paper H) that the course he proposed seemed judicious, but that it was a matter for the consideration of the Company.

It would certainly appear safer that the steamers should discontinue calling at Shanghae unless the Japanese Government are prepared to give an undertaking not to interfere with them so long as they conduct themselves with strict neutrality. No doubt the subsidy which Her Majesty's Government pay to secure their services in time of war entitles them to express a stronger opinion to the Company than would otherwise be desirable, and gives them a locus standi in the matter, but whether Her Majesty's Government should make any suggestion to the Company, or address any inquiry to the Japanese Government is a matter of policy. It seems, however, out of the question for Her Majesty's Government to give these vessels the status of national ships while allowing them to carry cargo and engage in passenger and goods traffic. If this were done, the Japanese Government would have an undeniable right to object.

I have also the honour to transmit to you a despatch from Mr. Playfair, Her Majesty's Consul at Ningpo (Paper K), inclosing one to Her Majesty's Minister at Peking, in which he reported as follows:—

A Japanese travelling in the garb of a Buddhist priest by the British steam-ship "Moning" was arrested after landing at Ningpo on suspicion of being a spy. His story was that he had come to persuade a Japanese priest, who resided at Pootro, to return home. A doubtful circumstance was that the priest failed to recognize the new comer, but this was explained by the statement that the latter was acquainted with the priest's parents, but not with the priest himself.

Both were placed under surveillance and repeatedly interrogated, but nothing was discovered to confirm the supicion of espionage.

The United States' Consul interested himself in the case, and received an assurance that the priest, at any rate, should not suffer ill-treatment, but intelligence had been received and published in the local newspapers without contradiction, that both the alleged spy and the priest, against whom there was no charge whatever, had been executed at Hangchow.

Mr. Playfair went on to state that there was actually under consideration a form of guarantee to be given by a British firm, under which their steamers should be allowed to enter the river. Among the stipulations was one to the effect that on arrival the steamers should lie-to to be boarded and searched for suspicious passengers, and that, should any such be found, they should, with the consent of Her Majesty's Consul, be removed for trial by the military authorities.

Mr. Playfair considered that the fate of any persons pointed out as open to suspicion was so plainly foreshadowed that he could not conceive any instance in which it would be the duty of Her Majesty's Consul to comply with the requisition of the Chinese authorities.

This case has an important bearing on that of the "Gaelic." Should it eventually be decided, as a matter of policy, to allow the Japanese to board and search neutral British merchant-vessels within Japanese waters for suspected belligerents, it would be difficult not to accord equal treatment to the Chinese, subject of course to the proviso, to be secured, perhaps, by special pledges, that nothing must be done to such suspected belligerents which would violate in any way the conventions of international law, or the usages of humanity, as these are recognized by civilized nations.

I am to request that you will take these papers into your consideration, and that you will favour Lord Kimberley with your opinion—

1. Whether, in all the circumstances, the proceedings of the Japanese authorities in the case of the "Gaelic" were or were not justifiable, and in either case to indicate generally the the grounds for your opinion.

2. If the proceedings were not justifiable, whether Her Majesty's Government ought to protest, and, if so, on what special grounds.

Lord Kimberley will also be glad if you will offer such observations on Mr. Wilkinson's Memoranda as you consider may be of assistance to him in dealing practically with the matters raised therein.

I have, &c.

Report.

1. IN all the circumstances, we consider that the proceedings of the Japanese authorities in the case of the "Gaelic" were justifiable.

There does not appear to have been any grievance of a practical kind in the manner of visit and search, though the display of force was in excess of actual necessity.

We do not consider that the Treaty rights of Great Britain operate to prevent Japan from boarding British vessels in time of war for the purpose of ascertaining if the duties of neutrality are violated.

Regarding Japan as invested with full belligerent rights, we think her officers were entitled to visit and search the "Gaelic" within a Japanese port to see if she was conveying persons in the military service of China; and that, had they been on board, the Japanese would have been entitled to seize them as prisoners of war. Such persons might be seized on Japanese land, and we do not see that they can be protected by the neutral flag when within a Japanese port.

A different question would arise if the Japanese claimed to seize goods, contraband in their nature, on a neutral vessel when touching at a Japanese port on a voyage from a neutral port to a neutral destination.

The right of a belligerent to confiscate such goods, through her Prize Courts, has been asserted and acted upon by the United States' Courts, if the real ulterior destination of the goods was hostile.

This doctrine has not been accepted by Great Britain, though we are not aware that its exercise by the United States in the case of neutral British ships was objected to by Her Majesty's Government during the American civil war. We think it would be difficult to maintain that the neutral destination of a vessel protects her contraband cargo if it should appear that the shipment to the neutral port of destination was really in fraud of belligerent rights; as, for example, if a cargo of munitions of war manifestly intended for China were shipped to the adjacent port of Hong Kong, in order to be securely handed over to the Chinese. Such a doctrine would enable China to be replenished with war material by sea without any opportunity being afforded for Japan intercepting it by virtue of her naval superiority.

We consider it would be still more difficult to maintain that Japan would not be entitled, at all events, to try that question before her Prize Courts, and, as a preliminary, to bring in the neutral vessel and her cargo for adjudication, leaving the neutral Government free to refuse to be bound by the decision, and to take such action thereon as might seem advisable.

2. We do not see any cause for protest.

3. We do not think there is anything we could say with advantage in regard to Mr. Wilkinson's Memorandum beyond the criticisms on its substance which we have already made.

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen,
Foreign Office, May 9, 1895.

Employment of "Tosa Maru" ("Islam") in transport of Japanese troops.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Earl of Kimberley, the accompanying further papers respecting the Japanese vessel "Islam," whose detention at Glasgow, in pursuance of warrants issued under the Foreign Enlistment Act, formed the subject of your Reports of the 14th, 24th, and 25th August, 1894 (Papers A, B, and C).

L.O.R. 1894 (Conf. 6641), pp. 66, 71, 72.

On the 26th August, 1894, the Japanese Minister at this Court addressed a note to his Lordship (Paper D), in which he gave an undertaking, on behalf of the Japanese Government, that the steamer "Islam," the property of the Nippon Yusen Gaisha Company, would, if released, not be employed in His Imperial Majesty's war or transport service, but would be exclusively employed in the ordinary mercantile carrying trade of the said Company.

Viscount Aoki then went on to state that as under this guarantee there could be no further reasons for the detention of the "Islam" under the provisions of the Foreign Enlistment Act, he begged to express the hope that Lord Kimberley would have no difficulty in ordering her release and restitution to the representative of her legitimate owners.

Viscount Aoki was informed on the following day (Paper E) that "Her Majesty's Government, fully relying on this guarantee on the part of the Japanese Government, have issued instructions to release the vessel from the detention imposed on her by the warrants recently issued . . . . in pursuance of the provisions of the Foreign Enlistment Act."

On the 27th March, 1895, Her Majesty's Representative at Tôkiô reported (Paper F) that the vessel in question, whose name had been altered from the "Islam" to the "Tosa Maru," was engaged in the transport of Japanese troops (the Colonial Militia of the Hokkaido) to Aomori, a port in the main island, and the terminus of the Nippon Railway Company.

The war between China and Japan is now at an end, the ratifications of the Treaty of Peace having been exchanged on the 8th instant.

I am, however, to request that you will take the inclosed papers into your consideration, and that you will favour Lord Kimberley with your opinion whether the employment of the "Tosa Maru" to transport troops, in the circumstances reported in Mr. Lowther's despatch (Paper F), is a violation of the undertaking on the faith and strength of which Her Majesty's Government handed over the vessel in question in August last to the Japanese Government.

If you should think that there has been a violation of the undertaking given by the Japanese Minister, Lord Kimberley would be glad to be favoured with your opinion whether it would be proper for Her Majesty's Government to take any, and, if so, what, action in the matter. His Lordship would at the same time be glad to be furnished with any general observations which you may wish to offer after considering the inclosed papers.

I have, &c.

Report.

In our opinion, the employment of the "Tosa Maru" (late "Islam") to transport troops, in the circumstances reported in Mr. Lowther's despatch, unless capable of some explanation not disclosed to us, is a violation of the undertaking on the faith and strength of which Her Majesty's Government handed over the vessel in question, in August last, to the Japanese Government.

She has been requisitioned for employment in "His Imperial Majesty's transport service," and has not been "exclusively engaged in the ordinary mercantile carrying trade" of the Nippon Yusen Gaisha Company, and this has occurred before the conclusion of peace.

We think it would be proper for Her Majesty's Government to make this breach of the undertaking a subject of remonstrance to the Japanese Government. The step taken in releasing the "Islam" upon the undertaking of Viscount Aoki was, in any event, a concession very valuable to the Japanese Government, as has since appeared. It indirectly augmented the transport fleet available for the use of that Government by setting free for military and naval purposes some other ship or ships of the Company.

Even if the undertaking had been strictly observed, the release of this vessel, though lawful, might expose Her Majesty's Government to complaints from China. But, in violating that undertaking, the Japanese Government have laid Her Majesty's Government open to a direct remonstrance from a friendly Power, which, in other circumstances, might have been accompanied by a claim for compensation.

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, June 12, 1895.

Japanese attempt to obtain monopoly of railways, &c. in Corea.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Earl of Kimberley, the papers noted in the accompanying list which relate to endeavours on the part of the Japanese to obtain a monopoly of railway, telegraph, and other enterprises in Corea.

Mr. Hillier, Her Majesty's Consul-General in Corea, in a despatch, dated the 22nd March (Paper A), reported that concessions which the King of Corea was being pressed to grant amounted in effect to a monopoly of railway construction for fifty years, absolute control of the telegraph lines for twenty-five years, and the management of a postal system for five years. In addition, consent was to be given to the investigation of the mineral resources of the country by Japanese experts, with a view to the arrangement of exclusive mining concessions at a later date.

The King was urged to accede to these demands without delay, in order to prevent Great Britain and Russia from obtaining a firmer footing in Corea after the conclusion of peace between China and Japan, by the acquisition of commercial and other concessions.

Sir Nicholas O'Conor, Her Majesty's Minister at Peking, commenting on this despatch, stated (Paper B) that he had requested Mr. Hillier to use his best efforts to prevent, for the moment, the conclusion of any Agreement of this kind.

Sir N. O'Conor observed also that it was a serious matter to see British capital excluded from its legitimate application in a country which had just been declared independent, and with which Great Britain has a Commercial Treaty, and he asked for instructions in regard to the attitude to be taken by Mr. Hillier in this important question.

A copy of the Treaty of Friendship and Commerce between Her Majesty and His Majesty the King of Corea, signed the 26th November, 1883, is inclosed (Paper C).

Article X stipulated "that the Government, public officers, and subjects of Her Britannic Majesty" should, from the day on which the Treaty came into operation, "participate in all privileges, immunities, and advantages" . . . . . which should then have been granted or might "thereafter be granted by His Majesty the King of Corea to the Government, public officers, or subjects of any other Power."

I am to request that you will take these papers into your consideration, and that you will favour Lord Kimberley with your opinion as to whether the concessions enumerated in Mr. Hillier's despatch are "privileges, immunities, and advantages" within the meaning of the Article above quoted, the grant of which would constitute a violation of the provisions of the Treaty, and justify a protest on the part of Her Majesty's Government.

Lord Kimberley would be glad, at the same time, to be favoured with such general observations on the papers submitted as you may desire to offer.

I have, &c.

(C.) Treaty between Great Britain and Corea, November 26, 1883 (Treaty No. 728).

Report.

In our opinion, the concessions enumerated in Mr. Hillier's despatch are "privileges, immunities," or "advantages" within the meaning of the Article quoted, the grant of which would constitute a violation of the provisions of the Treaty, and justify a protest on the part of Her Majesty's Government.

The Article in question is intended to provide for competition by British subjects on equal terms with subjects of any other Power in supplying the commercial and industrial wants of Corea. It includes, but is not confined to, the commonest cases, namely, cases of import and export duties. If Corea stipulated that Japanese subjects should have contracts for railway construction at 10 per cent. higher prices than British subjects, that would be a manifest infraction; and we think it is equally an infraction to exclude British subjects altogether from the competition. The same observation applies to the contemplated exclusive mining concessions.

In regard to the proposed grants relating to the telegraph and postal services, we consider that if what is designed be "a monopoly of telegraph and postal arrangements," as described in Mr. Hillier's letter of the 22nd March, it would fall under the observation we have already made. But we notice that later in the same despatch he describes what is demanded by Japan as "absolute control of the telegraph lines for twenty-five years and the management of a postal system for five years." This may mean simply that Japan is to have control of these two services, and does not necessarily exclude the employment of British subjects, or the acceptance of British contracts incidental to them. If that be the true demand of Japan, we do not think its concession would be an infraction of the Article. It would be no violation of the Treaty for Corea to grant to Japan, from reasons of policy, a directory power over a part of her internal administration if no stipulation were made to exclude or limit the fair competition of British subjects in any industrial enterprises which that administration might involve.

We consider, however, that the real meaning of what is being done is probably that stated in the earlier part of Mr. Hillier's letter, and in that view we have answered the whole of your Lordship's question in the affirmative.

My Lord,

Draft Extradition Treaty with Netherlands. Revised amendments

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Bertie's note of the 22nd instant, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 14th December, 1894, on the draft Extradition Treaty now under negotiation between this country and the Netherlands, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us copy of a letter which was addressed to the Home Office on the 22nd December last, expressing your Lordship's views on the contemplated amendments in the draft Treaty, together with the reply of that Department, and the previous correspondence, as noted in the list annexed.

That we were requested to inform your Lordship whether we concurred in the submission of the draft to the Netherland Government, with the revised amendments as now proposed.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands, we have the honour to

Report—

That, though we do not see any reason to qualify our opinion as to the advisability of the amendments we previously suggested, it does not appear to us that the difference is of really great importance, and we therefore concur in the submission of the draft to the Netherland Government, with the revised amendments as now proposed.

Foreign Office, December 22, 1894.

Sir,

I AM directed by the Earl of Kimberley to request that you will inform Mr. Secretary Asquith that, on the receipt of your letter of the 26th October last, his Lordship thought it advisable to consult the Law Officers of the Crown as to whether, in their opinion, the draft of the proposed new Extradition Treaty between Great Britain and the Netherlands, as amended since the date of the Report by the late Law Officers in 1893, might properly be submitted to the Netherland Government.

Copies of the reference to the Law Officers and of their Report are inclosed herein, and I am to request that you will submit for Mr. Asquith's consideration the following observations on the suggestions made by the Law Officers:—

1. Article II. Attempts against the life or liberty of the Sovereign or his heir, &c.

The proposed wording, and the addition to the list of crimes, under No. 1, were adopted to meet the renewed request of the Netherland Government that such "attempts" might be specifically inserted in the Treaty, under that head, instead of being dealt with "generically," and the provision in this form complies directly with the wish of the Netherland Government on a point to which they attach considerable importance, whilst it involves no ambiguity. On the other hand, the provision proposed by the Law Officers for insertion towards the end of the Article refers to "each and all of the aforesaid crimes" as being, conceivably, "directed against the Sovereign or his heir," a wording which might, apparently, include the whole of the preceding list, comprising, e.g., "piracy," "crimes against bankruptcy law," "fraud by a bailee," &c.

In these circumstances, Lord Kimberley is disposed to adhere to the wording as originally drafted.

Article VII. Insertion of phrase "during one month."

The words to which objection is made were inserted at the request of the Netherland Government, and they have been informed that they are accepted. In fact, Her Majesty's Government are not in a position to refuse the provision, seeing that a similar limit is laid down in Article VII of the existing Treaty of the 19th June, 1874.

The words used in "The Extradition Act, 1870" (section 19), are "an opportunity of returning," and this has been interpreted by the Order in Council carrying into effect the Treaty of 1874 as allowing a limit of a month. This could not be modified without the denunciation of the existing Treaty, and it seems almost certain that the Netherland Government would refuse to accept the omission now proposed by the Law Officers, as the limit is imposed by Netherland Law.

Article XI. "The term of twenty days" is a maximum limit, and the phrase is used in this sense in most of the Treaties now in force between Great Britain and foreign Powers. The alternative proposed might lead to some confusion, as it would enable a Magistrate in either country to fix a longer time than twenty days for the production of documents, and would also empower him to make the limit so short as to be useless for the purpose required.

Article XII. Minister "of State." The words "of State" should be inserted as proposed.

Article XVIII. Lord Kimberley would propose to insert the words "for the purpose of this Article" after the word "shall" in the last paragraph, as suggested, and to allow the rest of the Article to stand.

I am, however, in the first instance, to request that his Lordship may be favoured with any observations which Mr. Secretary Asquith may wish to make on the suggested amendments in the draft Treaty.

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, January 19, 1895.

Gentlemen,

Proceedings of Nicaraguan Government in Mosquito Reserve.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Earl of Kimberley, the papers noted in the accompanying list, which relate to the proceedings of the Nicaraguan Government in the Mosquito Reserve.

A Treaty between Her Majesty and the Republic of Nicaragua was signed at Managua on the 28th January, 1860 (Paper A), relative to the Mosquito Indians. By Article I it was agreed to recognize as belonging to and under the sovereignty of Nicaragua the country hitherto occupied or claimed by the Mosquito Indians within the frontier of that Republic, the British Protectorate thus ceasing. A district was assigned to the Mosquito Indians (Article II), within which it was provided (Article III) that they should enjoy the right of governing according to their own customs and according to any Regulations from time to time adopted by them, not inconsistent with the sovereign rights of the Republic of Nicaragua, themselves, and all persons residing within such district. Subject to the above-mentioned reserve, the Republic of Nicaragua agreed to respect, and not to interfere with, such customs and Regulations so established, or to be established, within the said district. It was understood, however (Article IV), that nothing in the Treaty should be construed to prevent the Mosquito Indians, at any future time, from agreeing to absolute incorporation into the Republic of Nicaragua.

Differences having arisen as to the interpretation of the Treaty (see Paper B, p. 1), the points at issue were referred to the arbitration of the Emperor of Austria. His Imperial Majesty's Award (Paper B, p. 12) confirmed the views held by Her Majesty's Government. The "Report" on which the Award was founded is at p. 22 of Paper (B).

I am to call your special attention to Article I of the Award, which is in the following terms:—

"The sovereignty of the Republic of Nicaragua, which was recognized by Articles I and II of the Treaty of Managua of the 28th January, 1860, is not full and unlimited with regard to the territory assigned to the Mosquito Indians, but is limited by the self-government conceded to the Mosquito Indians in Article III of this Treaty."

A question relative to the right of the Government of the Mosquito Reservation to levy port dues at Bluefields, which involved the general question of the right of this country to intervene in disputes between Nicaragua and the Mosquito Indians, was in 1893 referred to the then Law Officers of the Crown, who stated, in concluding their Report (Paper C), that, in their opinion, "Her Majesty's Government may properly intervene to secure the observance of the Treaty stipulations by Nicaragua, but they are not bound to do so, and the extent to which, as a matter of policy, such intervention ought to be resorted to must be determined by Her Majesty's Government as the circumstances arise."

L. O. R. 1893 (Conf. 6508), p. 48.

In accordance with the opinion expressed in the Report, a despatch was addressed to Her Majesty's Ambassador at Washington and to Her Majesty's Minister in Central America (Paper D) intended for their guidance in case, contrary to the wish of Her Majesty's Government, discussion of the question should be reopened. In this despatch it was explained as the view of Her Majesty's Government that they have the right to remonstrate against any palpable disregard or violation of the engagements taken by the Government of Nicaragua towards the Mosquito Indians in the Treaty of Managua, but that no wish existed to use that right in a vexatious manner, to make it a pretext for exercising a virtual protection over the Indians, or to encourage the Mosquito Government in resistance to reasonable claims or proposals of the Government of Nicaragua.

At the beginning of last year war broke out between the Republics of Nicaragua and Honduras in consequence of the Nicaraguans supporting General Bonilla, who was heading a revolution against the President of Honduras.

Only one action of an unimportant character took place in the neighbourhood of the Mosquito territory, and all the heavy fighting occurred close to Tegucicalpa, the capital of Honduras.*

Early in February, however, Nicaraguan soldiers were sent to Bluefields, the principal town of the Reserve, in order, as it was alleged, to protect it from an invasion. Shortly afterwards a further detachment arrived, the town was seized, and martial law proclaimed by General Lacayo, the Nicaraguan Commissioner.

The subsequent events in the Reserve are given in Memoranda prepared in this Department, and dated the 2nd and 30th October, 1894 (Papers E and F).

It was not until the 22nd November that the explanations repeatedly demanded from the Nicaraguan Government were received in a note from Señor Barrios. This communication (for translation of note and inclosures see Paper G) forwarded a volume in Spanish giving, as described by Señor Barrios, "the documents relative to the Bluefields rebellion and the expulsion of certain British subjects to which that rebellion led," and the Report of the Nicaraguan Commissioner in the Reserve, Dr. Don José Madriz, "in which the justice of the proceedings of the Nicaraguan Government is set forth clearly and with abundant proofs."

The documents communicated by the Nicaraguan Government are analyzed and arranged according to the points to which they refer in a Memorandum dated the 11th instant (Paper H).

Since the date of the Memorandum of the 30th October events of importance have occurred in the Reserve:—

1. Decrees have been issued by the Nicaraguan Commissioner relative to municipal, political, and fiscal administration and other matters (Papers J, K, and L).

Her Majesty's Minister was instructed to give formal notice to the Nicaraguan Government that Her Majesty's Government could not, under existing circumstances, accept these Decrees as valid or as affecting the rights of British subjects (Paper M).

2. The new Constitution has been promulgated, and the Municipality installed with public ceremonies (Paper N).

3. The territory of the Mosquito Reserve has been formally incorporated into the Republic, the Nicaraguan Government announcing this to be according to the desire expressed at a freely constituted Convention of the Mosquito Indians (Paper O). The wishes of the Indians with regard to incorporation have not reached Her Majesty's Government through any other than Nicaraguan sources.

---

* This is taken from a Report by Captain Curzon-Howe, inclosed in letter from Admiralty of March 24, 1894.

I am to request that you will take these papers into your consideration at your earliest convenience, and that you will favour Lord Kimberley with your opinion—

1. Whether the Nicaraguan Government, in taking possession of the territory of the Mosquito Reserve, and in assuming the administration of the district, have acted within the rights conferred upon them by the Treaty of Managua, and defined by the Award of the Emperor of Austria.

2. If not, whether Her Majesty's Government would be justified in intervening and in declaring that until a further understanding has been arrived at they must consider the proceedings of the Nicaraguan Government as null and void.

3. Whether in any case Her Majesty's Government can claim compensation for the arrest, imprisonment, and expulsion of Mr. Hatch and other British subjects, and for the material losses which they and other British subjects may have suffered through the action of the Nicaraguan authorities.

Lord Kimberley will be glad if you will also favour him with any general observations as to the course which in your opinion Her Majesty's Government should pursue.

I have, &c.

Report.

The answer to this question must depend upon the view that may be taken of the facts. Your Lordship has better opportunities than we can have for judging of the veracity of the many persons whose communications have been collected and submitted to us. In so far as we are able to judge we have arrived at the following conclusion:—

We think it doubtful whether the Nicaraguan troops did in the first instance occupy the territory for bonâ fide military purposes in a time of war. We consider their proceedings after the war with Honduras was ended, were not required to maintain sovereignty, but were designed to subvert the Mosquito Government. And we are not satisfied that the ultimate and final change of government was effected with the real consent of the Mosquito Indians.

Under these circumstances we are of opinion that the Nicaraguan Government in taking possession of the territory of the Mosquito Reserve, and in assuming the administration of the district have not acted within the rights conferred upon them by the Treaty of Managua and defined by the award of the Emperor of Austria.

2. That, subject to the general observations at the conclusion of this Report, we are of opinion that Her Majesty's Government would be justified in intervening and declaring that until a further understanding has been arrived at, they must consider the proceedings of the Nicaraguan Government as null and void.

3. That in our opinion Her Majesty's subjects in Mosquito territory were not entitled to interfere in the political disturbances or riots that took place in 1894, nor were they entitled to set up the Mosquito Government. It was not their province either to interpret or to enforce the Treaty rights of Great Britain. If the Nicaraguan Government were violating those rights the remedy lay wholly with Her Majesty's Government. Therefore we consider that any British subjects who took part in such proceedings, unless their action was merely temporary and necessary for self-protection, in a time of anarchy, might legitimately be arrested and expelled by the Nicaraguan Government. In the case of any of Her Majesty's subjects who have been arrested and expelled, though innocent, of any interference in the proceedings referred to, we consider that under the circumstances Her Majesty's Government can claim compensation.

We regret that it is impossible for us to particularize what persons have and what persons have not disentitled themselves to compensation, inasmuch as the statements are wholly contradictory, and we cannot pronounce where the truth lies. Her Majesty's Government may think it advisable to take up the position that no sufficient evidence to justify the course adopted by Nicaragua has been produced, and that unless satisfactory proof is given of the complicity of the British subjects in the disorders of July 1894, Her Majesty's Government will claim compensation on behalf of the persons in question.

Generally, we desire to add, it appears to us that underlying the whole question is the objection felt by Nicaragua to allowing foreigners pactically to govern the Reserve under colour of the Treaty of Managua, and this has led Nicaragua to seize the opportunity of destroying the Mosquito Government and banishing its members. Obviously the Treaty of Managua contemplated the reservation of the Mosquito territory for the residence and self-government of the Mosquito Indians themselves; and if it be true that this territory has of late been practically controlled by and governed by foreigners, it seems to us that the implied conditions under which that Treaty was made have been materially altered since 1860. Though we do not regard the Treaty as abrogated, we think that the altered conditions may be properly considered by Her Majesty's Government in making any demand upon Nicaragua for compliance with its terms.

Nicaraguan loan. Rights of Nicaraguan railway bondholders and French "Société d'Armes Portatives."

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Earl of Kimberley, a note from the French Ambassador at this Court (Paper A), supporting the protest of a French Company, the "Société d'Armes Portatives," against any measures which may be taken by this country against Nicaragua which would affect the security given by the Nicaraguan Government to the above-mentioned Company by a contract, dated the 10th September, 1894.

The allusion which the French Ambassador makes to Lord Dufferin's communication of the 25th February last refers to a representation which his Lordship was instructed to make with regard to the forcible measures taken by France against the Dominican Government, and its object was to deal by anticipation with the demand which it seemed probable would shortly be made, that French claims should be preferred to those of other foreigners by the exclusive assignment to them of the tax of 1½ per cent. levied on import duties, which, by a Dominican law, had been set aside for the payment pro ratâ of recognized foreign debits.

The contract between the French Company and the Nicaraguan Government is for the supply to the latter of arms, gunpowder, munitions of war, &c., to the value of about 33,000*l.*, and the security for payment is the proceeds of an export duty on coffee, which has been duly imposed, and which begins to take effect in the first half of the current year.

But part of the security given by the Government of Nicaragua for the railway loan, which is held in this country, is a first charge on the Nicaraguan Customs duties, and, in the course of the negotiations of the Bondholders' Committee with M. Barrios, the Nicaraguan Representative, the Committee offered to recommend the bondholders to accept a reduction of interest from 6 per cent. to 4 per cent., provided that the reduced rate of interest were secured by a special tax of 1 dollar (gold) on each bag of coffee exported, the proceeds of this tax to be applied to interest and amortization.

With a view to the elucidation of this matter, the Council of Foreign Bondholders were asked whether such an export duty as that recently imposed on coffee was covered by the assignment of customs duties given to the railway bondholders as security for their advances, and from their reply (Paper B) it will be seen that they assert that the prospectus of the loan, copy of which is inclosed (Paper C), distinctly states that the entire customs duties are hypothecated as security for the loan, and that the condition of the "General Bond," the terms of which are given at the foot of the prospectus (see Paper C), also declares that there is assigned a first charge or hypothecation on such part of the customs revenues, collected according to the law, sufficient to cover the deficiency of the railway revenues, if any.

In these circumstances, Lord Kimberley would be glad to learn whether, in your opinion, he would be justified in addressing a note to Baron de Courcel, informing him that the Nicaraguan Railways 6 per Cent. Mortgage Bondholders have by contract with the Nicaraguan Government (Paper C, "General Bond"), dated the 17th December, 1886, a first charge or hypothecation on such part of the customs revenues, collected according to the law, sufficient to cover the deficiency of the railway revenues, if any, and that, as the Nicaraguan Government are in default on those bonds, the English Company's claim for arrears of interest, &c., now due, has priority over the contract communicated by the French Government.

Lord Kimberley would also propose, subject to any observations which you may be good enough to offer, to address a note to M. Medina, the Salvadorian Representative in this country, who is in charge of Nicaraguan interests, calling attention to the default, the security given, and its subsequent assignment for another purpose, and stating that Her Majesty's Government must protest against any diversion of the security until the Nicaraguan Government have satisfied the claims of the railway bondholders, or have come to some arrangement with those creditors.

His Lordship will at the same time be glad to be favoured with such general observations on the papers submitted as you consider will be useful to him in dealing with the questions which are raised in them.

I have, &c.

Report.

1. In our opinion, your Lordship would be justified in addressing a note to Baron de Courcel, informing him that the Nicaraguan Railways 6 per Cent. Mortgage Bondholders have, by contract with the Nicaraguan Government, dated the 17th December, 1886, a first charge on such part of the customs revenues, collected according to the law, sufficient to cover the deficiency of the railway revenues, if any, and that, as the Nicaraguan Government are in default on these bonds, the English Company's claims for arrears of interest, &c., now due, have priority over the contract communicated by the French Government.

Under English municipal law, and the laws, we believe, of all civilized nations, charges of equal validity have priority according to date, unless the earlier charges be postponed for non-compliance with some prescribed rule, or by reason of the conduct of the parties owning them, which is not here suggested. The point, therefore, hinges upon whether the bonds of the 17th December, 1886, are secured upon all customs revenues which may be raised by the Nicaraguan law during the currency of the bonds, or are merely secured upon such customs revenues, or their equivalents, as were in fact leviable by the law in force at the date of the bonds being issued.

We consider that the former is the proper interpretation. It is as though a man borrowed money, repayable by annual instalments, upon the security of his annual income from a particular class of work. Whatever might be his increase of income from work of that class would be appropriated to that security.

2. In our opinion, the course proposed might properly be adopted.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, May 11, 1895.

Trial of British subjects in connection with rising in Hawaii. Question of martial law.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Earl of Kimberley, the papers noted in the accompanying list, which relate to the proceedings taken by the Hawaiian Government against British subjects for alleged complicity in the recent rising in Hawaii.

It will be seen from the despatch from Mr. Hawes, Her Majesty's Commissioner and Consul-General at Honolulu, No. 3 of the 11th January (Paper B), that a rising of the Royalist party in Hawaii, which had been for some time anticipated, occurred on the 6th January last.

The plans of the insurgents became known to the Government, by whom such prompt measures were taken that the movement was at once crushed without any serious conflict or loss of life on either side: and within four days after the rising took place, the rebellion, so far as active operations on the part of the revolutionists were concerned, was practically at an end—the leaders being prisoners in the hands of the Government.

On the morning of the 7th January martial law was proclaimed, arrests were then freely made, a large proportion of the persons arrested being British subjects. Many of these arrests were avowedly of a "precautionary" nature only.

In view of the serious nature of the charges against the political prisoners and of the important legal questions which might arise, Mr. Hawes was authorized to retain counsel to advise him on points on which he might have doubts.

Throughout this time a very objectionable and hostile attitude was, according to Mr. Hawes, shown by the police towards the British portion of the community, respectable persons being frequently threatened with arrest without any ostensible cause.

Protests against the action of the authorities were made, on behalf of their respective nationals, by both the British and American Representatives, who, while not contesting the right under martial law to arrest on suspicion, maintained that the prisoners were entitled to have their cases inquired into without delay.

On the 16th January, as will be seen from Mr. Hawes' further despatches No. 5 of the 31st January, and No. 9 of the 17th February (Papers L and R), a Military Commission was convened by order of the President of Hawaii, who also holds the rank of Commander-in-chief, for the trial of such prisoners as might be brought before it on the charges and specifications to be presented by the Judge Advocate.

The Commission, which was composed of the Judge of the Circuit Court, who received a Colonel's Commission to enable him to preside, of five Hawaiian regimental military officers, and of an Aide-de-camp on the General Staff as Judge Advocate, commenced its sittings on the 17th January.

The prisoners declared themselves satisfied with the personnel of the Commission, and were permitted to employ counsel, who, as is hereafter shown, objected to its jurisdiction.

The proceedings appear to have been conducted publicly and in an orderly manner.

Among the prisoners tried were the following British subjects:—

W. H. Greig, a British Polynesian from Fanning Island, who was accused of active participation in the revolt "as a leader and lieutenant in the field," and tried on a charge of treason.

He entered no plea, on the advice of his counsel, and was regarded as pleading "Not Guilty."

The evidence of his active complicity was clear, and he was sentenced to 20 years' hard labour and 10,000 dollars fine, as reported in Mr. Hawes' telegram No. 6 of the 23rd February (Paper Q).

The only account yet received of the proceedings in Greig's case is contained in the press reports inclosed in Mr. Hawes' despatch No. 9 of the 17th February (Paper R), pp. 4, 5, 6. These reports do not, however, appear to be absolutely reliable, as it is observed that in the case of T. B. Walker, hereafter mentioned, there are discrepancies as to his pleadings to the several charges and specifications between the press report and the official record furnished by the Hawaiian Government.

W. K. Rickard, who had been a member of the Legislature under the Monarchy, was, it appears, a ringleader in the conspiracy, and was designated to hold the office of "Marshal" under the prospective Royalist Government, commissions having been signed by the ex-Queen Liliuokalani for her Cabinet, and other officers, in anticipation of her restoration, at the end of December last.

He was tried on the following charges:—

Charge 1. Treason, by engaging in open rebellion against the Government of Hawaii.

Specification 1. Active rebellion by force and arms.

Specification 2. Procuring and providing munitions of war.

Specification 3. Organizing and establishing a military force.

Charge 2. Treason, by aiding and abetting others in the commission of the acts above specified.

He pleaded "Not Guilty" on both charges, but was proved to have taken a leading part in the landing of arms and ammunition for the use of the insurgents, and in the drafting of a new Constitution, Proclamations, and Commissions for the prospective Government.

He was found guilty on both charges and on all the counts specified, and was condemned to death by hanging. The sentence was, however, commuted to thirty-five years' imprisonment with hard labour in one of the prisons of Hawaii, and a fine of 10,000 dollars; Rickard to be imprisoned until payment of such fine, the imprisonment to date from the 25th January, 1895.

Similar indictments were brought against T. B. Walker, a bricklayer by trade, who also appears to have been a ringleader in the present movement and to have been tried some time back for complicity in a former revolutionary attempt. He pleaded "Not Guilty" to both charges, but was found guilty on all but the third specification of the first charge, viz., of participation in the organizing and establishing a military force, and to the corresponding specifications of the second charge, viz., aiding and abetting others to do so.

He was sentenced to imprisonment for life, commuted to thirty years' imprisonment, in an Hawaiian gaol with hard labour and a fine of 5,000 dollars, and to be imprisoned until such fine be paid.

This sentence was confirmed by the President of the Republic.

Two American citizens were associated with Rickard and Walker in the above charges. It is noticeable that the latter was voluntarily sworn as a witness for the prosecution, and that in his evidence he admitted having known beforehand that an uprising was contemplated, and to having assisted in the preparation of bombs for use in connection with that event.

Objection was taken by the counsel for the defence both in the cases of the British subjects and of the American citizens who were charged, to the jurisdiction of the Commission upon the following grounds:—

1. That no military or other law exists in the Hawaiian Islands under which a Military Commission is authorized to try any person for a statutory crime.

2. That under the proclamation of martial law the general authority of the Courts of the Republic created by the Constitution, have authority to conduct all business which comes properly before them, and have the sole authority to try persons accused of offences such as are specified in the charges before the Commission.

These objections were, however, overruled by the Court (vide p. 9 of the Official Record, in Mr. Hawes' No. 13 Paper W).

Upon the sentences being communicated to Mr. Hawes, he addressed a strong representation to the President urging that in the case of Rickard and any other British subjects tried by the Commission a reprieve might be granted of sufficient length to enable him to transmit to Her Majesty's Government a record of the trial and proceedings, and to afford an opportunity for their friendly intercession on behalf of the condemned. A similar request was made by the United States' Representative in the case of the death sentence passed on an American citizen.

Instructions were telegraphed to the British and United States' Representatives by their respective Governments to demand delay in execution of death sentences under specified circumstances. The telegraphic instructions will be found in Paper (F).

Copies of the Official Records of these cases were furnished to Mr. Hawes by the Hawaiian Government, and form inclosures in his despatch No. 13 of the 5th March (Paper W).

In connection with these cases it must be observed that the Hawaiian Government have advanced claims to consider both Rickard and Walker as Hawaiian citizens, on the ground of their having signed the oath of allegiance to the Monarchical Government during the reigns of the late King Kalakaua and his successor respectively. It is not, however, clear that they voluntarily and knowingly became naturalized in a foreign country, within the meaning of section 6 of the Naturalization Act of 1870, and thus lost their British nationality. They are only shown to have taken the oath of allegiance, and they assert that they took that oath on the express assurance that it would not affect their nationality. Mr. Hawes has therefore been instructed to represent that Her Majesty's Government cannot, as at present advised, admit that their Hawaiian nationality has been established.

The fact that in Hawaii an oath of this description may be taken without nationality of origin being thereby prejudicially affected is moreover supported by the terms of the new Constitution of the Republic of Hawaii, where it is laid down in section 2 of Article 17 that a person "who shall take an oath to support this Constitution . . . . shall be entitled to all the privileges of citizenship, without thereby prejudicing his native citizenship or allegiance."*

The correspondence which has passed on this point is sent in a separate bundle for convenience of reference (marked Papers, Treaty, A, B, C, D, E).

Independently of the question of nationality, the question arises whether the objections to the jurisdiction of the Court, raised in these cases, are justified and should be supported; and, further, in the event of the competency of the Court being admitted, whether the sentences are so unduly severe in character as to warrant Her Majesty's Government in making a representation to the Hawaiian Government with a view to their reduction.

In addition to the above, a British subject, Mr. V. V. Ashford, a member of a firm of attorneys in Honolulu, was tried before the Military Commission on a charge of misprision of treason.

In view of the delay anticipated in obtaining an official copy of the record of proceedings in this case, Mr. Hawes arranged for a special copy to be prepared. This forms the inclosure to his despatch No. 12 of the 23rd February (Paper V).

The charge against Ashford was that while owing allegiance to the Republic of Hawaii he had knowledge of the intended rising, and of the arrangements for the landing of arms and ammunition for the use of the rebels, but that he concealed the same, and did not disclose it to the proper Hawaiian authorities.

The evidence relied on by the prosecution consisted chiefly of that of one Nowlein, who had himself been engaged in the revolution, but turned informer to save his own life. Nowlein's evidence goes to show, and this is not denied, that he had several interviews with the accused at times closely preceding the rising. At one of these he states that "he laid the whole plan before V. V. Ashford," the defence being that some of the interviews were accidental, and that the others were only of a professional nature.

No charge was, however, made by Ashford for the advice alleged to have been given, nor was any entry made in his books with a view to making such a charge.

The brother of the accused—C. W. Ashford—was also implicated in these interviews.

---

* Cf. certificate granted to Charles E. Dunwell and quoted in Reference (A) of to-day's date, p. 2.

V. V. Ashford declined to plead, and a plea of "Not Guilty" was entered by the President's direction. His brother, C. W. Ashford, above-mentioned, also a lawyer, was not allowed to act as his counsel, but he was ably defended by Mr. Neumann, the counsel for the defence in the other cases already mentioned.

Objection was taken in his, as in the previous cases, to the jurisdiction of the Court, it being contended that neither the proclamation of martial law nor the suspension of the writ of habeas corpus had suspended the Constitution or the law; that the fact of a military organization existing in Hawaii under the Commander-in-chiefship of the President, had not abrogated any of the civil rights of its citizens.

It was further contended that the form of trial was illegal, the accused not having been furnished within the time prescribed by law with copies of the charge and specifications; that misprision of treason is a statutory offence not triable by a Military Commission, and that the offence, if committed at all, had been committed and completed before martial law had been proclaimed.

These objections were overruled on the ground of special provisions existing in the Constitution of Hawaii, of which a copy is inclosed in Mr. Hawes' despatch No. 15 of the 7th March (Paper X), (Article 31), which goes in this respect beyond the Constitution of the United States, and empowers "the President or one of the Cabinet Ministers" in certain cases (of rebellion, &c.), "to suspend the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus, or to place the whole or any part of the Republic under martial law."

It was held that the contention that the Constitution was suspended was untenable—that it was the Constitution itself which specially provides that certain of its provisions, i.e., those for civil Tribunals, &c., shall prevail "unless martial law is declared," and that under the Constitution alone martial law legally and Constitutionally existed.

With regard to the last objection raised, it was held that martial law, though not retroactive, provides for the punishment of offences which led up to the declaration of martial law.

The arguments in regard to the competency and jurisdiction of the Court are given very fully in the proceedings of the 10th day of the Session of the Commission, inclosed in Mr. Hawes' No. 12 of the 23rd February (Paper V), when the objections were raised by counsel in a previous case (that of one Bowler), and it is stated in a marginal note that "the objections made in Bowler's trial and the arguments, were reserved for this trial of Mr. V. V. Ashford."

The differences in respect to martial law and Military Tribunals between the law of England, the law of the United States, and the law of Hawaii, are dwelt upon at considerable length—the precedents in the cases of the trial of Mr. Jefferson Davis for high treason before a Civil Court, though a prisoner of war taken at the crisis of hostilities, and of the trial of the assassins of President Lincoln before a Military Tribunal for a civil offence are cited and discussed.

The papers yet received in this case are incomplete, and do not contain the summing-up of the case, nor any address by the counsel for the defence, or by the Judge Advocate.

Mr. Hawes has, however, subsequently reported by telegraph (see his telegram No. 6 of the 23rd February, Paper Q), that the sentence passed upon V. V. Ashford was one year's imprisonment and 1,000 dollars fine.

A later despatch from Mr. Hawes, which throws indirect light on the case, is also inclosed (No. 16 of the 7th March. Paper X). It contains a statement, with supplemental statement and exhibits by V. V. Ashford's brother, Mr. C. W. Ashford, who was, it appears, arrested with his brother on the 8th January. He was not brought up for trial, but was kept in prison till the 22nd February, when he was released on condition that he should leave the country. His case, together with the cases of other British subjects who have been subjected to imprisonment in connection with the revolution, but not brought to trial, will form the subject of a separate reference.

He complains that his brother, V. V. Ashford, is forced to wear the dress of the worst class of criminals, and that it was only after Mr. Hawes' representations that he was allowed to see his own doctor.

V. V. Ashford has, it appears, been suffering from partial paralysis for some months, and it will be seen from Mr. Hawes' later despatch, No. 23 of the 13th April (Paper CC), just received, that, in view of the critical state of Mr. Ashford's health, the Hawaiian Government have now offered him his pardon on condition that "he leaves the country, never to return." This offer has, it is understood, been declined by Mr. Ashford, who finds it impossible to leave Hawaii without winding up his business affairs, while the Government refuse to release him except on condition of immediate departure.

The question then arises whether the special objections raised in the case of V. V. Ashford should be supported, and whether the facts, so far as they are at present known to Her Majesty's Government, would warrant them in making any representation to the Hawaiian Government, with a view either to the reduction of his sentence or to a claim for compensation being presented on his behalf, as is urged by his brother. In the latter case his Lordship would be glad to be informed of the grounds on which such a claim against the Hawaiian Government could most properly be based, and of the approximate sum which it would be reasonable for Her Majesty's Government to demand as compensation.

It will be seen from the correspondence which has passed with Her Majesty's Ambassador at Washington, and which will be found among the papers sent, that it has been the wish of Her Majesty's Government to take, if possible, a course similar to that of the United States with respect to the points of principle involved, of which the most important appears to be the applicability or non-applicability of military or martial law to such cases as those at present in question, and the consequent jurisdiction of the Military Commission to deal with them.

The Government of the United States have not yet, however, received full reports, which they are awaiting, and are therefore unable to reply to the inquiries of Her Majesty's Government on the subject.

The general views, however, of the United States' Government, which are for the most part in consonance with those which Her Majesty's Government are disposed to take, will be gathered from the instructions from time to time furnished to the United States' Minister in Hawaii, which have been confidentially communicated to Her Majesty's Ambassador at Washington, and of which copies are inclosed in Sir J. Pauncefote's despatch No. 117, Secret, of the 19th April (Paper AA).

From a later telegram just received from Sir J. Pauncefote, dated the 2nd May (Paper BB), it appears that affidavits of American citizens, disclosing ill-treatment of the same nature as that inflicted on British subjects, have been received at Washington, and it is thought by his Excellency highly probable that the United States' Government will exact reparation for these proceedings.

I am to request that you will take the papers transmitted herewith into your consideration, and that you will favour Lord Kimberley with your opinion on the questions specially submitted in this letter, as well as with any general observations which you may have to offer on the several cases.

I have, &c.

Report.

In our opinion, Her Majesty's Government could not require of the Hawaiian Government a compliance with English methods and doctrines in their application of martial law under the provisions of the Constitution of Hawaii. What martial law is, and under what restrictions, and in respect of what offences it can be exercised, has not been fully ascertained even by English law, though it has repeatedly been discussed by English Judges, and has led to differences of opinion among them.

We think that Her Majesty's Government cannot demand more of the Hawaiian Government than that martial law should not be capriciously or unreasonably invoked against British subjects, and that the trial should be conducted fairly and before a fair Tribunal, considering that the Hawaiian Constitution authorizes the adoption of martial law at the discretion of the Minister, who must judge of its necessity.

We are of opinion, so far as we can perceive from the papers before us, that the trial of Greig, Walker, and Rickard was a fair trial, and that the circumstances were such as reasonably warranted recourse to martial law under the terms of the Hawaiian Constitution. Greig and Walker gave evidence, and admitted their guilt. Rickard was convicted upon evidence which, if believed, as it may reasonably have been, was sufficient to justify conviction. As regards these persons, we think the only ground of representation is the extreme severity of the sentence, and upon that point we think that Her Majesty's Government might properly make representations.

In regard to Ashford, we cannot from anything before us say that the trial was unfairly conducted, but we consider the conclusion arrived at was not a proper conclusion, having regard to the evidence. Nothing can be more unsafe or improper than to convict a man upon the unsupported testimony of accomplices, especially where, as in this case, the chief accomplice gave evidence admittedly to save his own life. We think that in the case of Ashford, Her Majesty's Government might properly make representations on this ground. We do not think this is a case for claiming compensation, for it was an error on the part of a lawful Court, and Ashford refused to accept freedom on condition of quitting the country.

Upon the point of nationality, we do not think that the Hawaiian nationality of any of the four persons convicted has been established.

Foreign Office, May 11, 1895.

Gentlemen,

Imprisonment without trial of British subjects in connection with rising in Hawaii.

WITH reference to my letter marked (A) of to-day's date, in regard to the proceedings taken by the Hawaiian Government against British subjects for complicity in the recent rising, I have the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Earl of Kimberley, the papers noted in the accompanying list, which relate to the cases of British subjects who have suffered arrest and detention, under the powers conferred on the Executive by the proclamation of martial law, without having been brought to trial.

The general characteristics of these cases will be gathered from the annexed tabular statement marked Paper (A), from which it will be seen that the British subjects in question were arrested on suspicion of complicity in the revolution; that they were subjected to more or less prolonged detention in prison, extending from thirteen to fifty-four days; that they suffered from harsh treatment and bad food while so detained; and that they were induced under threat of the production of incriminatory evidence against them and by undue pressure either to leave the country or to promise to do so.

A specimen of the form of agreement which many of the prisoners were induced to sign in order to obtain their release, has been since received, and forms an inclosure in Mr. Hawes' despatch No. 22 of the 12th April (Paper N).

It would appear from Mr. Hawes' despatch No. 14 of the 7th March (Paper F) that many persons have been arrested and held in custody from thirty to sixty days merely on the ground of their known Royalist sympathies; and that pressure has been put upon them by the Hawaiian authorities to leave the country. No account of the cases of many of these persons has yet been received, but the sworn statements made before the British Vice-Consul, and inclosed by Mr. Hawes, are probably fair examples of this class of case

The first case reported by Mr. Hawes is that of J. B. Johnstone, which forms the subject of his despatch No. 8, Confidential, of the 7th February (Paper B). Johnstone was arrested on the 7th January, and deported to Victoria, British Columbia, without trial on the 2nd February under martial law.

An American citizen and German subject were similarly treated at the same time.

No intimation had been given to the Representatives of the countries interested, nor had any charges been served on the prisoners; and the facts of their detention and removal were only brought to the knowledge of Mr. Hawes by one of them shouting out to him for assistance as he was passing, while they were being conveyed on board ship.

Mr. Hawes ascertained from the Hawaiian Government on inquiry that Johnstone had been employed by the Police Department as a spy, and that they had proof that he had worked on the side of the enemy: that he had not been tried, but that the Government were exercising the arbitrary power which they possessed under martial law, and were prepared to abide by the consequences of their action.

Mr. Hawes intimated that he should be compelled to make a formal protest against so unusual a proceeding, but refrained from active interference on behalf of Johnstone on ascertaining from him privately that he could not face a trial, and that he thought it safer in his own interest to leave the country at once.

The American citizen and the German subject similarly arrested were also deported, notwithstanding the strong objections of the United States' and German Representatives, inasmuch as the prisoners maintained their innocence and their desire to stand their trial. Formal protests were therefore entered in these cases by the United States' Minister and the German Consul-General respectively.

A further statement of Johnstone's case (Paper B 2) has now been received from him through Mr. Maxwell, M.P.

This statement contains no evidence of cruel usage or sufferings beyond imprisonment and expulsion, and does not appear to strengthen the case, as previously reported by Mr. Hawes.

It makes, however, no admission of Johnstone's unwillingness to stand his trial, but states that he was astounded by Mr. Hawes saying (a statement not reported by Mr. Hawes, and most highly improbable) that his conduct in not volunteering to take up arms for the Government on the night of the outbreak convinced him that his (Johnstone's) intention was to support the rebels.

Such an intention Johnstone distinctly disclaims, and he states that he can produce witnesses to prove that he had, on the contrary, resolved to take up arms for the Government on the 7th January, a few hours previous to his arrest.

The next case reported is that of Charles E. Dunwell, a hack-driver, a native of Jamaica, the facts of which are detailed in Mr. Hawes' despatch No. 11 of the 23rd February (Paper C), and this account is supported by a sworn statement on the part of the accused, who was still under detention at that date after the lapse of forty-five days, and without prospect of trial.

The points which call for special notice in this case, and to which the attention of the Hawaiian Government has been particularly drawn by Mr. Hawes, are the manner in which the arrest was carried out: in that Dunwell was not permitted to dress or even put on his shoes before being removed from his bed to prison: the threats used to him by the Judge Advocate of the Military Commission to induce him to give evidence incriminating Mr. V. V. Ashford: the harshness of his treatment while in prison: and the inattention shown to his repeated requests to be allowed to see the British Consul-General.

The reply of the Hawaiian Government, in the first instance, to Mr. Hawes' representations merely stated that the prisoner was held for complicity in the insurrection against the Government, the extent of which the Government was then endeavouring to ascertain, and that "whether the charge against him will be treason, conspiracy, or misprision of treason cannot be stated till the case is reached." This answer appeared to Lord Kimberley to be insufficient, as it contained no assurance that the charge of ill-treatment in prison would be investigated.

Mr. Hawes was therefore instructed to claim a strict investigation and the punishment of any persons who might be found responsible, if the facts were substantiated. (See telegram to Mr. Hawes of the 21st March, and despatch No. 12 of the 25th March, Papers D and E.)

A full reply has since, however, been received from the Hawaiian Minister for Foreign Affairs, who incloses a Report by the Attorney-General after investigation of the case. (See Mr. Hawes' despatch No. 17 of the 4th April, 1895.)

Dunwell's statements are therein denied, in so far as he claims that he was prevented from communicating with Mr. Hawes, and that he was not permitted to dress himself when arrested. Dunwell's statements have, however, been repeated by him on oath in a further sworn statement recently received, which forms an inclosure in Mr. Hawes' subsequent despatch No. 21 of the 12th April (Paper M).

In that statement Dunwell incloses copy of the oath to support the Constitution, Laws, and Government of Hawaii which he signed on the 25th July, 1894. In the certificate granted on the strength of this oath it is expressly stated that Dunwell is entitled to all the privileges of Hawaiian citzenship without thereby prejudicing his native citizenship or allegiance.

It was contended, in the reply of the Hawaiian Government to Mr. Hawes respecting the Dunwell case, that they held information of his complicity in the insurrection which amply justified his arrest: that his confinement in a dark cell was justified by his making wilfully false statements, and by his contumacy in refusing to give evidence: that the right of the Judge Advocate or a Military Commander to information in the possession of a prisoner would probably be admitted: that the Judge Advocate, in making his investigations, was exercising functions partly military and partly judicial: and that, in view of the armed insurrection then in progress, which threatened not only the peace of the community, but the very existence of all government, his action in the matter was justified as the act of a regularly commissioned officer of a Sovereign State done during a period of martial law in the suppression of rebellion.

It is pointed out that Dunwell might, in the land of his birth, under similar circumstances, have been subjected to much harsher treatment, and a precedent for similar action is cited in the case of the proceedings under martial law in Jamaica under Governor Eyre, and the decision in the case of Phillips v. Eyre decided in the Exchequer Chamber on error from the Court of Queen's Bench in 1870 is quoted in support of this view.

It was pleaded by the defendant in that case (see Law Reports, 6 Queen's Bench Cases, p. 1) that he was the Captain-General and Governor of Jamaica: that a revolution existed: that the acts complained of were reasonably done in good faith to put an end to the rebellion, and were made legal by a subsequent Act of Indemnity.

The analogy between the cases is somewhat increased by the fact that the Hawaiian Government have themselves now introduced and passed an Act of Indemnity to relieve the President or any person acting under his authority from the consequences of acts done by them during the continuance of martial law; but the Hawaiian Government would seem to have lost sight of the distinction between treatment which a Government may be at liberty to apply to its own subjects, and that which is justified in the case of subjects of foreign and friendly Powers.

The texts of this Indemnity Act and of the subsidiary Acts, which were subsequently passed to extend and complete the scope of the principal Act, will be found as an inclosure to Mr. Hawes' despatch No. 18 of the 4th April (Paper I), who thus describes them :—

Act 20, entitled "An Act relating to Martial Law, trials by Military Commission, and the liability of Officers of the Government and others for Acts done in suppressing Rebellion," in a preamble, recites the fact of a rebellion having arisen, its suppression, and the necessity of indemnifying those who assisted in suppressing it. It then enacts and declares in effect that all acts done by any one in connection with any event leading to the arrest or imprisonment of any person was done within the Constitutional authority of the President, and such acts are confirmed.

Act 22 repeals a former Law in regard to bringing suits against the Hawaiian Government in order to pave the way for the enactment of Act 24, "An Act to prevent the bringing of Actions against Officers of the Government or others for Acts done in suppressing Rebellion."

This Act, which is practically a rider to "Indemnity Act No. 20," prevents any suit being brought against the Government for redress for acts committed by the Government under the authority granted to the President by Act 20. A mere declaration by the President that such acts were committed by his authority is thus a difficulty or even a complete bar to any claim.

These preceding Acts are followed by Act 26, "An Act to provide for the Judicial Investigation of Claims against the Hawaiian Government." This Act passes to the exclusive jurisdiction of the Supreme Court, without the intervention of a jury, the hearing and determination of all claims against the Government, and in its provisions supplies certain legal and technical defects in Acts 20 and 24. Its decision is final.

The provisions of the three several Acts referred to would appear to be such in detail that even if the Supreme Court desired to render justice it would be impracticable for them to do so under Acts 20 and 24.

Mr. Hawes understands that several British subjects who intended to make claims for damages for illegal imprisonment and consequent injury to their business are now deterred from doing so, as they feel it will be practically impossible for them to obtain any satisfaction or redress through the Courts of the Republic, but that they propose now to appeal to Her Majesty's Government for protection.

The purpose of these acts would seem to be to deprive those whose liberties and civil rights have been invaded during the recent political disturbances of their legal remedies, and to bar all claims for compensation arising therefrom.

It is pointed out by Mr. Hawes that this class of legislation would seem to be expressly prohibited by Article 71 of the Constitution of Hawaii (of which a copy is annexed to Paper X, inclosed in my letter marked (A) of like date), as that Article declares that, "except as herein provided, no retrospective law shall ever be enacted."

It also seems opposed to the provisions of Articles 8, 10, and 11, which provide for security of life, liberty, and property, and freedom from search and arrest, &c., without due process of law.

The question would seem, therefore, to arise, and the reply to it is one which must affect the whole class of cases now submitted, first, whether the acts in question are a violation of the Hawaiian Constitution, and, in the second place, whether they are of a nature to which Her Majesty's Government would be justified in taking objection under international law on the ground that they limit and restrict the rights to satisfaction and redress in the Courts of the Republic, to which British subjects are entitled.

The eight cases reported in Mr. Hawes' despatch No. 14 of the 7th March (Paper F), viz., those of James Brown, Lewis J. Levey, C. Bailey, F. H. Redward, M. C. Bailey, T. W. Rawlins, A. McDowall, F. Harrison, are, as has been already observed, of similar character, and are in each case supported by depositions sworn before the British Vice-Consul.

Special attention may be called to the case of James Brown, whose statements as to the nature of the treatment he received in prison, and to the methods adopted by the Judge Advocate of the Military Commission to obtain evidence from him, are instructive, and corroborate the similar statements made by Dunwell.

The case of Lewis Levey is noticeable for the length of his detention—thirty-seven days—for his formal protest that the agreement which he signed to obtain his release was made after repeated pressure and under "restraint": for his claim of 50,000 dollars compensation in view of his loss of occupation and damage to his business as an auctioneer and general merchant of thirteen years standing in Honolulu, by his being forced to agree to leave the country at an age (58) when he cannot hope to establish himself in business with success in a new country.

The case of C. Bailey is similar, and his arrest appears to be connected with that of Levey, whom it was sought to induce, through his means, to leave the country. He signed the agreement at length, after having previously refused to do so in the presence of Mr. Hawes, at the urgent instance of his wife. He makes no claim for compensation.

The case of F. H. Redward, the reason of whose arrest was, he was informed, "for conspiracy," is noticeable for his declaration to the Hawaiian Marshal that he was ready to stand his trial, and would not sign the agreement to leave the country, which he afterwards signed on receiving the assurance that he would probably be able to return in a short time.

He states that, in order to leave Hawaii, he has had to sell his property at a heavy loss.

He was detained in prison from the 7th January to the 12th February.

In the case of M. C. Bailey, the complainant was detained in prison some three weeks, and finally signed the agreement "under duress, and to get relieved from a hopeless Tribunal."

It will be seen from the later despatch from Mr. Hawes, No. 19 of the 4th April (Paper K), that Mr. M. C. Bailey has since made a further sworn statement in respect to his case, which shows the arbitrary methods adopted by the Marshal of the Republic in dealing with him.

He was, it now appears, detained to suit the convenience of the Government, after accepting their terms of release, and engaging his passage, until Mr. Levey also agreed to go, and was then compelled to leave the country, the Government, however, declining to pay his passage.

He had entered into an engagement, prior to his arrest on the 12th February, to work as a collector and outside agent at a salary of 100 dollars a-month for five years, dating from the 1st March, 1895, with a half share of the profits on all the business he brought to the firm.

This agreement was cancelled in consequence of his arrest, and he claims 25,000 dollars damages for loss thereby.

Thomas W. Rawlins, a resident in Honolulu of twenty years' standing, was arrested on the 8th January, and detained in prison for four weeks till the 5th February. He was informed by the authorities that he was "arrested for conspiracy," that the Government had the necessary evidence required to hang him, and he was therefore advised to accept the offer of leaving the country without being tried by court-martial.

On the latter date he was released by "order of the Cabinet, on his own recognizances to appear when called upon," but he states that he was, even at the date of his declaration (4th March), "still practically under arrest, being unable to leave the city."

He states that it was his intention to leave the country for California on important private business early in January, but that owing to his arrest his business plans have been entirely upset, that he has suffered heavy pecuniary loss, that he has undergone severe mental strain and worry, and that he has sustained permanent injury to his health.

He wishes to know "whether he can be guaranteed that quiet possession of life and property which he has hitherto enjoyed, and to which he is entitled, and whether, as a British subject, he can obtain any redress for the insult and injury which he and his family have suffered at the hands of the Hawaiian Republic."

No specific damages are, however, claimed.

Arthur McDowall was arrested on the 7th January and detained until the 15th February, when he was practically deported. He was subjected to repeated pressure to induce him to leave the country, and at length, as the result of bad food and confinement in a dark cell, and much harsh treatment in prison, consented to do so on the 23rd of that month. He was unable to obtain any information, in reply to his repeated inquiries, as to the charge upon which he was detained.

His sworn statement is most clear and categorical that "he had nothing whatever to do with the rebellion in any form or shape, had no arms or ammunition, nor did he assist any one in getting arms or ammunition, nor had he any knowledge of arms or ammunition being brought to the country for revolutionary purposes, nor any knowledge there was to be a revolution, nor even any reason to suspect the same."

No claim for compensation is put forward.

Mr. Frederick Harrison, arrested on the 9th January, and detained till the 23rd February, was informed on inquiry that "there was no charge made against him." Repeated overtures were made to him to leave the country, and he was told by an Agent of the Government that "they had evidence against him, and would no doubt confiscate all his property."

1895

The form of agreement which he was at length induced to sign was, so far as he can recollect, to the following effect:—

"I, Frederick Harrison, having been detained in Oahu prison for complicity in the insurrection against the Hawaiian Government, agree to leave the country on the steamer 'Miowera' about the 4th March during my lifetime, never to return unless by permission of the Minister for Foreign Affairs, and approved by the Marshal."

He states that, as it seemed probable after five weeks imprisonment that he would be detained indefinitely or brought before a Military Tribunal before which he had no chance of a fair trial, he consented, "under pressure and intimidation," to accept the terms offered for his release.

He further states that he had resided seventeen years in Hawaii, and had an established business which he had had to sacrifice with other property, and contracts which were in progress at the time of his arrest. This, he says, has proved a severe loss to himself and his family.

The next case reported by Mr. Hawes is in some respects the most important, and that supported by the fullest details, viz., that of C. W. Ashford, brother of V. V. Ashford, whose trial is referred to in my other letter, marked (A), of to-day's date.

C. W. Ashford is himself a lawyer, and has drawn up his own statement of his case, which is inclosed in Mr. Hawes' despatch No. 16 of the 7th March (Paper G).

The statement declares that he and his brother were in no way concerned in the Royalist rising, but that they had been watched by Government spies ever since 1893, their only offence being that they had ventured to criticize the new Administration.

Mr. C. W. Ashford was, it appears, arrested and imprisoned on the 8th January, and kept in confinement until the 23rd February, when "under duress he accepted a proposition of the Hawaiian Government for his release on condition that he should leave the country."

His statement enters at considerable length into the question of the jurisdiction of the Military Commission, and its competency to try cases of misprision of treason. The arguments on this head will, however, have doubtless already been considered in connection with the case of V. V. Ashford, to which they are more directly applicable, as C. W. Ashford was not himself brought to trial.

Mr. Ashford complains that his private correspondence was intercepted and read while he was in prison: that while there he was subjected to solitary confinement: and he concludes by appealing to Her Majesty's Government to obtain compensation from the Hawaiian Government for the pecuniary and other injury which he has sustained at their hands. He further states that since his release he has again been watched by Government spies.

The last case at present reported is that of G. Carson Kenyon, whose sworn declaration is inclosed in Mr. Hawes' despatch No. 19 of the 4th April (Paper I).

Mr. Kenyon, who was employed on the staff of the "Bulletin" newspaper, and who holds letters of denization from the late King and from the Republic of Hawaii, was arrested with others on the 12th January, but handcuffed and treated with rather exceptional severity; repeated endeavours were made to induce him to sign an admission of his complicity in the revolution and to accept his release on condition of leaving the country.

These offers he rejected, but on the 25th February was unconditionally released without any explanation.

Mr. Hawes states, however, that he has since been compelled to leave the country.

Mr. Kenyon complains of his treatment while in prison, of his letters being tampered with, and of his house having been repeatedly searched in his absence, and of his aunt, with whom he lived, having been subjected to assault and personal ill-treatment.

Two further complaints of a similar nature have since been received through Mr. Hawes (see his despatches Nos. 20 and 21 of the 11th and 12th April respectively, Papers L and M), both of which are supported by sworn statements.

The first is that of James B. Grant, who was arrested on the 29th January, and released on the 28th February without any charge having been preferred against him. He complains of harsh treatment and of the loss of employment which he had expected to obtain. His arrest and detention are attributed to his intimacy with the Ashfords. He makes no specific claim for damages.

The second is that of Edward B. Thomas, an architect and contractor, who was arrested on the 7th January, and who, after fifty-four days' detention in prison without trial, was, on the 1st March, released unconditionally and without explanation.

He claims, on account of losses on open contracts, and detriment to his business from his imprisonment, 25,000*l.* compensation.

The following questions would therefore seem to arise:—

1. Whether Her Majesty's Government would in all, or any, and, if so, in which of the cases now submitted, be justified in protesting against the arrest and detention of these British subjects, and their practical, and in some instances, forcible expulsion from the country without charge or trial.

2. Whether, in the event of the answer to the previous question being in the affirmative, Her Majesty's Government would be justified in insisting upon the withdrawal of the restrictions placed upon the return of these British subjects to Hawaii, or, failing this, whether claims for compensation should be presented on account of the losses and injuries sustained by them.

And thirdly, if the latter alternative be adopted, what approximate sum might in each case be fairly demanded of the Hawaiian Government in view of the special circumstances and respective positions of the several sufferers?

I am to request that you will take the papers transmitted herewith into your consideration, and that you will favour Lord Kimberley with your opinion on the questions specially submitted in this letter, as well as with any general observations which you may have to offer upon the various cases and claims.

I am, &c.

Report.

In our opinion, there is no ground for protest or claim in the case of Mr. J. B. Johnstone, whose confession to the Consul-General that he could not face a trial appears to be an admission of guilt.

In regard to the other persons, we consider that, upon the materials before us, there is a case for protest and for a claim for compensation. We desire, however, to observe that the information submitted to us is far from full, in some cases no indication being given even of the status or occupation of the person injured. Nor are we acquainted in general with the contention of the Hawaiian Government as to the cause of arrest, or their answer to the accusation of cruel treatment. What they say might, of course, put an entirely different complexion upon the affair.

We consider that, in face of an attempted insurrection, the Hawaiian Government were entitled to have recourse to martial law under their Constitution. But as between nations all law, whether martial law or ordinary law, must be administered towards foreigners with reasonable justice. The proclamation of martial law would justify summary proceedings by a Military instead of a Civil Court. But nothing can justify the imprisonment of foreigners without trial for periods ranging between a fortnight and six weeks, with a view to extorting evidence by punishment, or the threats of punishment. And this appears to have been done in the case of some of the persons in regard to whom we are requested to report.

Further, we consider that any country is, in international law, entitled to require a foreigner to quit its territory, though to do so suddenly, and without real grounds, after allowing him to establish himself and acquire pecuniary interests which are sacrificed by his expulsion, is a high-handed act of an unfriendly character. But nothing can justify the imprisonment of a foreigner without trial, where there easily might be a trial, for the purpose of compelling him to sign an agreement voluntarily to quit the island. And where this is done, and business loss follows, we think that the business loss, as well as the imprisonment, should be taken into account in measuring the claim for compensation in regard to what is one entire transaction.

We do not feel that, upon the materials before us, we can estimate in the case of each person the amount of compensation which should be claimed. Broadly speaking, we should say that in the case of a person of humble position, imprisoned for a month without cruelty or hardship, a sum of 100*l*. should be claimed; and in the case of cruelty or hardship, the claim might be doubled or trebled as the case should demand, and any loss of business during imprisonment should be included.

A higher sum should be claimed for persons of a better position, because they would suffer more, and where they have been compelled by imprisonment to agree to quit the country and have lost all their business, something like two years' profits would be the measure of the claim. It appears to us that upon this point the Consul-General on the spot might be able to supply the necessary information.

We also consider that it might be advisable to be informed of the views of the Hawaiian Government as to the rights and wrongs of these proceedings before finally determining either the right to, or the amount of, compensation in each particular case.

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, November 2, 1895.

Claim of C. Dunwell against Hawaiian Govt. for illegal arrest and imprisonment.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you herewith, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, the papers noted in the accompanying list, which relate to the case of a British subject named Dunwell, who, upon the occasion of the recent rising in Hawaii, together with other British subjects, suffered arrest and detention under the powers conferred on the Executive by the proclamation of martial law, without having been brought to trial.

Papers relative to these cases were laid before your predecessors in office, by direction of the then Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, on the 11th May last, and your attention is specially called to their Report (B) of the 5th July, dealing generally with the questions involved.

Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General in the Sandwich Islands was duly instructed in the sense of that Report, and it will be seen that he now forwards a brief from Dunwell's counsel, setting forth answers to the explanations offered by the Hawaiian Government in this case, which explanations will be found in Mr. Hawes' despatch No. 17 of the 4th April last.

In obedience to his instructions he also furnishes an estimate of the amount of compensation to which, in his opinion, Dunwell is fairly entitled, and he puts it at 1,700*l*.

Subject to your opinion, it appears to Lord Salisbury that the case is one in which substantial compensation may properly be demanded.

As regards the amount of such compensation, I am to submit the following observations:—

Dunwell appears to have been a cab-driver, of good character, earning 25 to 30 dollars a-week, or from 5*l*. to 6*l*. in English money.

As money in Hawaii is estimated by Mr. Hawes to represent not more than one-third of its value in England, the claimant is apparently in the position, for the purposes of assessing compensation on the basis proposed by your predecessors, of a person earning 2*l*. a-week, or 8*l*. a-month, by a somewhat precarious calling.

If, therefore, Her Majesty's Government put forward a claim at the rate of 100*l*. per month of twenty-eight days for the period during which Dunwell was imprisoned, and then treble the amount thus arrived at so as to compensate Dunwell in respect of the less value of money in Hawaii, this would seem to be fairly liberal treatment. Dunwell could only have earned 8*l*. per month had he been at liberty to pursue his calling, and 92*l*. per month seems not an illiberal compensation for a man in his position in respect of the indirect loss and of the injury to his feelings which he sustained through his arrest and unjustifiable detention without trial.

On the whole, Lord Salisbury is disposed to think that a round sum of 600*l*. might be demanded, as the man was imprisoned for nearly two lunar months, viz., fifty-one days.

But, before coming to any decision, his Lordship would be glad to learn whether, in your opinion, the claim is one which may now properly be pressed upon the Government of Hawaii; and, if so, whether the amount suggested is adequate, insufficient, or excessive, having regard to all the circumstances of the case.

I am therefore to request that you will take the papers transmitted herewith into consideration, and that you will favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion on the questions submitted in this letter, and with any general observations you may have to offer on the case.

Right of Persian Bank Mining Rights Corporation to refer claims against Persia to arbitration.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, December 20, 1894.

I HAD the honour, by direction of the Earl of Kimberley, to submit on the 1st May last, for the consideration of your immediate predecessors in office, papers relative to the question of the right of the Persian Bank Mining Rights Corporation to refer to arbitration their claims against the Persian Government.

The reference to the then Law Officers of the Crown fully described the grounds upon which the Corporation founded their claim to arbitration, summarized the correspondence which had passed on the subject, and explained the reasons which made Lord Kimberley hesitate to adopt the contention advanced on behalf of the Corporation.

The Law Officers were requested to take the papers into their consideration and favour his Lordship with their opinion (1) as to whether Her Majesty's Government would be legally justified in giving their support to the claim to arbitration put forward by the Corporation; and (2) generally upon the case.

The papers which accompanied my previous letter are transmitted herewith, in a separate cover, for convenience of reference.

L. O. R. 1894 (Conf. 6641), p. 97.

On the 11th May the Law Officers reported that, in their opinion, Her Majesty's Government would not be legally justified in giving their support to the claim for arbitration put forward by the Corporation (Inclosure 1).

On the receipt of this opinion a letter was addressed to the Corporation (Inclosure 2) stating that, after careful consideration of the matter, in consultation with the Law Officers of the Crown, Lord Kimberley was of opinion that Her Majesty's Government would not be justified in giving their support to the claim.

On the 26th July the Corporation wrote (Inclosure 3) complaining that the grounds on which the Law Officers had based their opinion were withheld from them, and asking that the matter might be reconsidered, and if the Law Officers still held that the Corporation could not by itself alone assert and maintain the right to arbitration, whether this defect could not be remedied by joining the Imperial Bank of Persia as plaintiffs in the claim. They suggested that, otherwise, they might be forced to consider favourably an offer made by a Russian capitalist for the purchase of the concession of the mining rights.

A reply was sent to this communication on the 11th August (Inclosure 4) to the effect that, if the Bank of Persia associated itself in the demand for arbitration and would state the grounds on which it considered itself entitled to make the claim, Lord Kimberley would be willing again to consult the Law Officers as to whether the claim could be properly sustained; as regarded the transfer of their Concession to a Russian firm, they were told that his Lordship must leave the Directors to take whatever course they thought best for their own interests, subject to its receiving the Shah's sanction.

The Corporation wrote again on the 17th instant (Inclosure 5) and forwarded a copy of the Agreement of sale between the Imperial Bank of Persia and the Corporation, on which is indorsed a declaration under the common seal of the Bank (which has also been indorsed on the original Agreement) to the effect that the right to arbitration under clause 10 of the Concession referred to in the Agreement, and Article 8 of Appendix 4 thereto, was one of the rights and privileges sold and transferred by the Agreement, and in respect of which consideration was paid, and that the Agreement was made with the assent of the Shah. The letter states that by this declaration the Bank of Persia has associated itself in the demand for arbitration, and requests that the question may be reconsidered and again referred to the Law Officers.

They inclose also a copy of a letter to the Persian Minister in London, notifying the intention of the Corporation to appoint an Arbitrator forthwith.

I have the honour to request that you will take the papers now submitted into your consideration, and favour Lord Kimberley with your opinion whether their contents are of such a nature as to induce you in any way to dissent from the view expressed in their Report of the 11th May last by the then Law Officers of the Crown.

I am further to request that, if your answer to the preceding question should be in the affirmative, and you should be of opinion that, under present circumstances, the claim is one which Her Majesty's Government ought to press upon the Government of Persia, you will be good enough to indicate upon what grounds the demand of the Corporation can most advantageously and properly be supported.

I have, &c.

Report.

In our opinion the contents of the papers now submitted to us are not of such a nature as to induce us in any way to dissent from the view expressed in their Report of the 11th May last by the then Law Officers of the Crown.

We consider that Article X of the first Concession and Article VIII of the second Concession provide for arbitration only in case of disputes between the Bank and His Imperial Majesty the Shah of Persia. The same Concessions authorize the assignment of certain rights which they confer, but do not authorize the Bank to impart to others its right to claim arbitration It is alleged in the indorsement on the Agreement of the 17th April, 1890, that His Imperial Majesty has assented to that Agreement between the Bank and the Corporation, and also that the right to claim arbitration was one of the rights assigned by that Agreement. That Agreement does not contain any assignment of such right, and it is not stated that His Imperial Majesty has assented to the interpretation placed upon the Agreement in the indorsement referred to. We consider that His Imperial Majesty has agreed to arbitrate with the Bank, but with no other person or Corporation, so far as the materials before us show, and that therefore the Corporation cannot legally claim arbitration.

Draft Order in Council amending "Persian Coast and Islands Order in Council, 1889."

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, May 14, 1895.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Earl of Kimberley, the accompanying papers respecting a difficulty which has been experienced at Bushire in carrying into effect Article 33 (1) of "The Persian Coast and Islands Order in Council, 1889" (Paper A).

Article 33 (1) of the Order in Council in question requires that every civil suit in which a British subject is a defendant and a Persian subject is a plaintiff shall be heard by a Court established under the Order. To this procedure the Persian Agent for Foreign Affairs at Bushire has strongly objected (see Inclosure in Paper B), on the ground that he has no official cognizance of any Order in Council, and that a compliance with the provisions of Article 33 (1) would be an innovation in which he has no authority to acquiesce.

The Government of India have suggested that, in order to obviate this difficulty, either the Order in Council should be amended, or the formal sanction of the Persian Government obtained to the exercise of Her Majesty's jurisdiction in the cases in question.

Lord Kimberley thinks that it would be more convenient to amend the Order in Council of 1889 than to enter into correspondence on the subject with the Persian Government; and Mr. Albert Gray has, under his Lordship's instructions, drafted an Order in Council for the purpose (Paper C). In the draft Order, Mr. Gray has dealt not only with the point at issue, but with Article 34 of the Order in Council of 1889, which, for the reasons stated in his letter of the 9th January last (Paper D), seemed to him also to require amendment.

The terms of the proposed Order in Council, as drafted by Mr. Gray, have been approved by the Secretary of State for India (Paper F).

I am to request that you will take the inclosed papers into your consideration, and that you will favour Lord Kimberley with your opinion whether the draft Order in Council (Paper C) may, in its present shape, properly be laid before the Queen in Council for Her Majesty's approval. His Lordship would, at the same time, be glad to be furnished with any observations which you may wish to offer after considering the inclosed papers.

Annex.

WHEREAS by Treaty, grant, usage, sufferance and other lawful means, Her Majesty has jurisdiction in that portion of the coast and islands of the Persian Gulf and Gulf of Oman which is within the dominions of the Shah of Persia:

Now, therefore, Her Majesty, by virtue and in exercise of the powers in this behalf by "The Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890," or otherwise, in Her Majesty vested, is pleased, by and with the advice of her Privy Council, to order, and it is hereby ordered, as follows:—

1. "The Persian Coast and Islands Order in Council, 1889," is hereby amended as follows:

(1.) Article 33 is repealed.

(2.) In Article 34 the words "not being the subject of a Mahommedan Power" are repealed, and that Article shall be read and construed as if the words "Persian subject or" had been inserted before "foreigner," whenever that word occurs.

2. This Order may be cited as "The Persian Coast and Islands Order in Council, 1895."

And the Right Honourable the Earl of Kimberley, K.G., and the Right Honourable H. H. Fowler are to give the necessary directions herein as to them may respectively appertain.

Cohen and Co. against the Portuguese Government on account of the detention of their goods at Beira by the Portuguese authorities in 1891.

L. O. R. 1892 (Conf. 6347), p. 59.

I am to observe that the claim in question formed, in September 1892, the subject of a reference to your predecessors in office, who favoured Lord Rosebery with their views on the papers then submitted to them in a Report dated the 25th October, 1892.

The facts of the case are briefly as follows:—

Messrs. A. Cohen and Co., British subjects, trading at Beira in the Portuguese possessions on the East Coast of Africa, shipped from Cape Town, per the steam-ship "Norseman," a stock of goods for the purpose of opening a store at a place some distance inland from Beira.

L. O. R. 1891 (Conf. 6207), p. 19.

The "Norseman" was one of the vessels under the command of Sir John Willoughby which were stopped at Beira under circumstances fully set forth in the reference to the then Law Officers of the Crown of the 29th May, 1891, and accompanying documents, as to which they reported on the 6th July of that year.

Your immediate predecessors reported on the 25th October, 1892, that, in their opinion, Her Majesty's Government was entitled to demand, on behalf of Messrs. Cohen and Co., compensation from the Government of Portugal in respect of the acts complained of, but that the greater part of the items forming a total claim of 5,000*l.* could not be supported, and they recommended that a demand for compensation should be made to the extent of 1,000*l.* only.

Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Lisbon was thereupon instructed to prefer a claim for this amount on behalf of Messrs. Cohen and Co. The Portuguese Government replied, declining to entertain the claim on the grounds set forth in Senhor Hintze Ribeiro's note of the 18th August, 1893 (inclosure in Sir H. MacDonell's despatch No. 32, Africa, of the 23rd August, 1893, marked A).

His Excellency maintained that, so far from suffering any loss by the action of the Portuguese authorities, Messrs. Cohen had actually benefited thereby, for if, as might be inferred, their merchandize had been transhipped directly from the "Norseman" to one of the launches attached to Sir John Willoughby's expedition, which was endeavouring to proceed up the Pungwe River without the permission of the Portuguese authorities, and without obtaining clearance at the custom-house, the merchandize in question ought certainly to have been detained, whereas, in consequence of the friendly and tolerant attitude adopted by the Portuguese Government in the matter, the proceedings were suspended and the vessel and merchandize released.

Having regard to this reply, and in view of the inference drawn by the Portuguese Minister for Foreign Affairs from the facts as stated in the claim put forward on Messrs. Cohen's behalf, it was considered desirable to ascertain more precisely:—

1. On board what lighters the goods were shipped when seized, and the date of seizure.

2. The date of their release (in order to ascertain the length of detention for which compensation is claimed).

3. Whether payment of the customs dues upon the goods in question was tendered to the Portuguese authorities on behalf of Messrs. Cohen, and, if so, by whom it was proffered.

A letter was accordingly addressed to the Colonial Office on the 17th October, 1893 (see paper marked B), requesting that information on these points might be procured from Messrs. Cohen.

The result of these inquiries is contained in the sworn affidavit of Mr. Shire Alston, who was an acting partner in the firm of Messrs. Cohen and Co. in 1891, and was himself present on board the "Norseman" at Beira (see inclosure in Colonial Office letter of the 5th March, 1895, marked C).

According to this statement the goods were transhipped directly from the "Norseman" into two lighters belonging to, or hired by, Messrs. F. Johnson and Co., landing and transport agents at Beira, with whom arrangements had been made for the transport up the Pungwe River, and there can be no justification for the inference suggested by the Portuguese Government that they (Messrs. Cohen and Co.) were in any way connected with the British South Africa Company's expedition under Sir J. Willoughby.

That the goods were seized on the lighters on the 15th April, 1891, and the date on which Messrs Cohen resumed possession was the 12th May, 1891, though, as explained in Mr. Alston's statement, the goods may actually have been released earlier.

That payment of customs duties was tendered by Mr. Dorrbecker, Interpreter and Customs Agent, Beira, who acted on behalf and in the presence of Mr. Alston.

I am to request that you will take the papers submitted herewith into your consideration, and that you will favour Lord Kimberley with your opinion as to whether a further representation in support of Messrs. Cohen's claim should be put forward by Her Majesty's Government to that of Portugal, and, if so, on what special grounds such claim can in your view most advantageously be supported.

His Lordship would also be glad to be favoured with any general observations which you may desire to offer on the case.

The Reports of your predecessors referred to above, dated respectively the 6th July, 1891, and 25th October, 1892 (see papers marked D and E), are inclosed for convenience of reference.

I have, &c.

Report.

In our opinion, a further representation in favour of Messrs. Cohen's claim should be put forward by Her Majesty's Government.

We consider that the claim may most advantageously be placed upon the ground that Messrs. Cohen, after tendering, as they did, the proper duties, were entitled to send their merchandize up the river, and employed lighters belonging to Messrs. Frank Johnson and Co. (Limited) to take their merchandize from the "Norseman," but that it was seized on the lighters on the 15th April, 1891, by the Portuguese authorities, and, owing to the violent demonstrations against British subjects by Portuguese soldiers, Messrs. Cohen's representatives were obliged to leave Beira until their safety could be insured, and it was not until the 12th May, 1891, that they could return.

We desire to observe that, in their claim, Messrs. Cohen do not appear wholly consistent. In their agent's letter of the 30th November, 1891, they claim damages for reshipping and carrying back their goods to Natal, and subsequently reshipping them again and carrying them back to Beira, when the impediment to trade was withdrawn.

Mr. Alston's statutory declaration, on the other hand, states that the goods remained at Beira from the 15th April to the 12th May, 1891, and that on the latter date they were released, and protection afforded by the British Government. We do not perceive the necessity of taking them back to Natal. These two statements may be reconcilable, but we think it right to direct attention to them as the apparent inconsistency may have a bearing on the amount of damages that can legitimately be claimed by Messrs. Cohen.

Collision between "City of Mecca" and "Insulano." Claims arising out of.

Gentlemen,

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Earl of Kimberley, to transmit to you the papers noted in the accompanying list, which relate to certain claims arising out of a collision which occurred in 1875 between the British steamer "City of Mecca" and the Portuguese steamer "Insulano."

This case, in its various aspects, has on numerous occasions engaged the attention of your predecessors in office, and of the Earl of Selborne when Lord Chancellor, who have had under their consideration the jurisdiction claimed in the several Judgments of the Portuguese Courts seized of the matter; the interpretation and application adopted in those Judgments of the rules of the road at sea; and the question of referring to international arbitration the differences of opinion which have arisen between the Governments of Great Britain and of Portugal on the various points raised.

The case is, however, now submitted to you with special reference to the letters and statement addressed to Lord Kimberley by Mr. Dunlop, who prays that if Portugal continues to refuse redress and arbitration, and if Her Majesty's Government are indisposed to compel that country to pay compensation for the loss sustained by the enforcement in France, or elsewhere, of the Portuguese Judgments, they will themselves bear the loss already incurred and the expense of compromising the claims still outstanding under the Judgments in question.

Mr. Dunlop's "Statement," which will be found in the printed book inclosed herewith, contains so full a reference to the several Judgments and other papers on which he relies in support of his prayer that it is thought that for the purposes of the present letter no further explanation of the case will be required.

The papers referred to by Mr. Dunlop will be found in the accompanying volumes of correspondence laid before Parliament and of Confidential Foreign Office Print at the several places indicated in Parts 1 and 2 of the list which is subjoined and marked.

Further correspondence in manuscript, as marked in Part 3 of the list, is also inclosed; while the various Reports of your predecessors and Minutes by the Lord Chancellor, which are enumerated by Part 4 of the list, have been collected for convenience of reference in a separate wrapper.

I have the honour to request you to favour Lord Kimberley with your advice as to the answer which should be returned to Mr. Dunlop's prayer and more particularly on the following two points, viz.:—

1. Can any further representations usefully and with propriety be addressed to the Portuguese Government on the subject; having in view the lapse of time which has occurred since any communications were last exchanged between the two Governments in regard to this case?

2. Having regard to all the circumstances of the case, are there, in your opinion, any sufficient grounds either of a legal or of an equitable nature for favourably entertaining the request of the applicants to be reimbursed for their losses out of English public funds?

I am further to request that you will favour Lord Kimberley with any observations which may, in your opinion, be of assistance to his Lordship in dealing with the case generally.

I have, &c.

Report.

1. In our opinion, there was a miscarriage of justice in the Portuguese Courts, which appears to us to deserve the disapprobation which has long ago been expressed by Her Majesty's Government and by the Law Officers of the Crown.

Though twelve years have elapsed since Her Majesty's Government made their last representation to Portugal on this subject, we think the right of diplomatic remonstrance still exists, if Her Majesty's Government think it advisable to renew it.

But we desire to refer your Lordship to the strong opinions expressed upon this subject by Lord Selborne in his Minute of the 1st December, 1884, and to state our view that those opinions are still applicable.

2. We are not aware of any case in which Her Majesty's Government have compensated a British subject for losses due to an erroneous legal decision in a foreign country. We consider that the precedent would be very dangerous, and we do not think such a course could be recommended.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, October 11, 1895.

Claims arising out of collision between "City of "Mecca" and "Insulano."

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit to you the papers noted in the accompanied lists (marked A and B), which relate to certain claims arising out of a collision which occurred in 1875 between the British steamer "City of Mecca" and the Portuguese steamer "Insulano."

The papers enumerated in the list (A) comprise those which accompanied a reference to your predecessors on the 25th April last. List (B) includes a printed copy of the above-mentioned reference of the 25th April last, and the Report (dated the 18th June) of the late Law Officers in reply thereto; a letter which, upon its receipt, was, by the Earl of Kimberley's directions, addressed to Mr. Dunlop, and a copy of a question and answer in the House of Commons on the 3rd ultimo, and two further communications from Mr. Dunlop, dated the 23rd and 25th ultimo.

I have the honour to request that you will be good enough to take these papers into your consideration, and inform Lord Salisbury—

(1.) Whether you concur in the opinion expressed by your predecessors in their Report of the 18th of last June.

(2.) Whether, in your opinion, a representation to the French Government on all or any (and if so on which) of the grounds suggested by Mr. Dunlop in his letter of the 25th September might with propriety be made.

His Lordship would further be glad to be favoured with any observations or suggestions upon the present position and aspect of the case which, in your opinion, may be of assistance to him in dealing with the matter.

Report.

(1.) We concur in the opinion expressed by our predecessors in their Report of the 18th of last June.

(2.) In our opinion it would not be proper to make a representation to the French Government on any of the grounds suggested by Mr. Dunlop in his letter of the 25th September last.

The French Courts do not enforce the Portuguese judgments as of course, but only if on examination they find these judgments correct. It would appear that this examination was, in the case of the Judgment of the Court of Appeal at Rouen, of a perfunctory nature, not based upon a proper appreciation of the facts of the case. It is for Mr. Dunlop's French advisers to inform him whether in the present proceedings a proper investigation of the case cannot be obtained by reason of the previous French judgment. But, even if this be so, a mistaken conclusion in point of fact by a court of law is hardly a subject for diplomatic representation. It is quite clear that the French Court did not proceed upon any erroneous construction of the Navigation Rules.

The only ground for diplomatic representation would be if the French Courts were improperly usurping jurisdiction over the property of British subjects. In respect of the original collision, or the Portuguese judgment, the French Courts would have no jurisdiction; but the proceedings are based on the fact that the defendants had property in France, viz., the vessels, and that these have been arrested.

If the French law admits of such an arrest at the suit of one foreigner against another, the plaintiff being Portuguese and the defendants British, we cannot say that there is any principle of international law which would justify a diplomatic representation to the effect that such an exercise of jurisdiction in respect of, and to the extent of, the personal property in France is unjustifiable.

We do not see how this case can, with propriety, be reopened by diplomatic action.

RUSSIA.

No. 47.

[August 10, 1895.]

Foreign Office to the Attorney-General.

Sir,

Foreign Office, July 18, 1895.

Seizure of British sealers by Russian cruisers in Behring Sea in 1892.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, the accompanying papers relative to the seizure of certain British sealing-vessels in Behring Sea by Russian cruisers during the sealing season of 1892.

L. O. R. 1892 (Conf. 6347), p. 60 A.

The previous Reports of the Law Officers of the Crown dated the 23rd November, 1892, and the 3rd November, 1893, with the papers which were then referred to them, are annexed for convenience of reference in the packets marked (A) and (B) respectively.

With regard to the Report of the 3rd November, 1893, I am to state that the Russian Government have furnished copies of the Protocols relating to the seizures of the "Vancouver Belle" and "Carmolite," copies of the sentences of confiscation and extracts from the Reports of the Russian naval officers. These will be found in the inclosures in Sir F. Lascelles' despatch No. 23 of the 26th January last (Paper E (2)).

The views of the Russian Government with regard to the seizures are given in the Report of the Special Commission and in the note from M. Chichkine inclosed in the late Sir R. Morier's despatch No. 161 of the 12th June, 1893 (Paper D), which has already been submitted to the Law Officers.

M. Chichkine informed Her Majesty's Ambassador that the Imperial Government would not refuse to proceed to an assessment of the indemnity to be paid to the owners of the schooners "Ariel" and "Willie McGowan," but stated that the Commissioners recognized the legality of the seizures of the "Maria," "Rosie Olsen," "Carmolite," and "Vancouver Belle."

The correspondence which has passed between this Department and the Colonial Office as to the amount at which the two former claims should be assessed is inclosed (Papers L, M, N), and a summary has been prepared showing the various estimates arrived at and the arguments on which they are founded (Paper O).

It will be seen that the principal questions for decision are:—

L. O. R. 1888 (Conf. 5785), p. 81.

1. Whether any claim should be made for loss of catch. On this point the opinion given by the Law Officers in March 1888 is quoted in the letter from the Colonial Office of the 27th June, 1895 (Paper N), and the remarks of Sir J. Pauncefote are also referred to (Paper I).

2. Whether, if such a demand be not made, the loss of interest on the capital invested may not be added.

3. For what period the prospective losses should be calculated. It will be observed that the owners of the "Ariel" claim for the loss of each successive season since 1892.

4. Whether interest should be charged on the amounts claimed, and, if so, for what period.

The full claims received from the owners amount to 44,016 dollars for the "Ariel," and to 35,409 dollars for the "Willie McGowan," including estimates for the loss of the season next after the capture (1893).

The latest forms of claim received from the Colonial Office are much reduced in amount. Interest at 7 per cent. from the dates of seizure to the date at which the Russian Government admitted their liability has, however, to be added to the alternative Tables submitted.

Lord Salisbury requests that you will take the points mentioned above into your consideration, as well as the items claimed for the values of the schooners, their boats, guns, and other appurtenances, and favour him with your opinion as to what claims should be presented to the Russian Government in respect of the "Ariel" and "Willie McGowan."

The claims of the other schooners have not been admitted in principle by the Russian Government.

In accordance with the suggestion made in November 1893 by the then Law Officers a statement has been drawn up with regard to each of these vessels, which, as finally revised, will be found in the Colonial Office letter of the 10th April (Paper L).

The "Maria" was seized by the orders of the Governor of the Commander Islands, M. Grebnitzky, who was on board the Russian steamer "Kotik" at a distance of 7 miles from Copper Island, on the ground that her boats had been hunting for seals within Russian territorial waters. The master denied this and declined to sign the act of arrest drawn up to that effect. There are, it is believed, no rookeries on the east side of Copper Island where the vessel was seized, and there was therefore no special inducement to send the boats into territorial waters. The Russian account states that before the schooner was arrested two boats belonging to her were seized at a distance of 1½ miles from the shore; the latest Canadian affidavit positively denies that the boats were captured before the schooner had been seized (see Paper H).

The claim of the owners of the "Maria" amounts to 29,450 dollars, and there is a further claim of 11,368 dollars for the loss of the season of 1893. The reduced claim suggested by Mr. Anderson is 17,567 dollars (see Paper E (1)). Mr. Anderson observes that the claim for outfit, boats, &c., is absurdly exaggerated.

The "Rosie Olsen" was also seized by the "Kotik." The Russian account states that the schooner had been seen in territorial waters, but having caught sight of the smoke of the pursuing vessel, she succeeded in gaining the open sea after having given the signal of recall to her boats. Nevertheless, four of her boats were seized in territorial waters, after which the schooner herself was seized. It appeared from her log-bok that she had been hunting for thirteen days in the neighbourhood of Copper Island, and had sent her boats into territorial waters. The Canadian account is that the vessel was boarded about 38 miles from land. She was becalmed and had been so for four hours. No attempt was made to escape.

The master refused to admit that he had been in Russian waters, and, in an affidavit, swore that at no time had he been within 15 miles of Russian territory, and that his schooner was always nearer to land than his boats when out sealing.

The master and mate aver that M. Grebnitsky expressed doubts as to seizing the vessel. If this be correct, the boats cannot have been caught flagrante delicto. It is, moreover, improbable that the vessel had been hanging round the islands for thirteen days, sending her boats into territorial waters to hunt.

The claim of the owners of the "Rosie Olsen" is for 22,809 dollars. In this case there is no claim for the schooner itself, which was restored by the Russian authorities. Mr. Anderson reduces it 7,719 dollars (see Paper E (1)).

The "Carmolite" was seized by the Russian cruiser "Vitiaz." The evidence relating to this seizure is more complete than in the two previous cases, and is carefully sifted in column 3 of the statement in Paper L. It is specially to be noted that, even according to the statement of the officers of the "Vitiaz," the vessel was not within territorial waters when sighted. She was not sealing at the time, nor is it alleged that she had been doing so just before.

The papers received from the Russian Government are inclosed in Paper E (2).

The Law Officers reported on the 3rd November, 1893, that on the evidence before them the seizure was not justifiable (Paper B).

The claim of the "Carmolite" amounts to 28,649 dollars, and a further claim is made for the ensuing seasons. Mr. Anderson reduces the amount to 18,633 dollars.

The "Vancouver Belle" appears to have been seized by the "Zabiaka" on the assumption that the boats of the "W. P. Sayward" which had just previously been seized were her boats. She was not in territorial waters on the day of seizure. The Report of the Commander of the "Zabiaka" states that it appeared from the log-book that some of the seals had been killed in the strait between the islands. This was three days before the pursuit took place.

The Law Officers on the 3rd November, 1893, also reported with reference to the "Vancouver Belle" that on the evidence before them the seizure was not justifiable.

The "Vancouver Belle" claims 36,080 dollars. Mr. Anderson suggests 26,080 dollars.

The papers received from the Russian Government will be found in Sir F. Lascelles' despatch No. 23 of the 26th January, 1895 (Paper E (2)).

The boats of the "W. P. Sayward" were seized by the "Zabiaka." There is little to be said in their defence as they appear to have been sealing within 3 miles of the shore.

They claim 610 dollars. Mr. Anderson reports that the case appears to be of rather a doubtful character.

The boats of the "E. P. Marvin" and "Annie Moore" were seized on the rookery, and there is therefore no defence.

The "Marvin" claims 320 dollars.

The "C. H. Tupper" was boarded by the "Zabiaka" according to the Russian account, 47 miles from Behring Island, on suspicion that some of the boats seized in territorial waters belonged to her. The claim in this case is for the loss of the season, and not for skins seized. It amounts to 10,500 dollars. Mr. Anderson estimates it at 3,000 dollars.

The "W. P. Hall" was boarded by the "Zabiaka" merely on suspicion. There was admittedly no proof that the schooner had been sealing in territorial waters. The claim is for loss of season, as the master was ordered to leave Russian waters by the Captain of the "Zabiaka," and the definition of "Russian waters" was such as to include the whole area where seals were to be found.

The "W. P. Hall" claims 10,644 dollars. Mr. Anderson says 3,000 dollars would be sufficient.

I am to request your opinion as to whether any of the foregoing claims, and, if so, which of them, may properly be supported and to what extent. In the cases of the "Maria," "Rosie Olsen," "Carmolite," and "Vancouver Belle," the point to be settled is whether the vessels or their boats were in territorial waters when first sighted by the Russian ships. The claims for the boats of the "W. P. Sayward" and "E. P. Marvin" seem difficult of defence. With regard to the "C. H. Tupper" and "W. P. Hall," it appears that they are entitled to some compensation for having been boarded on suspicion and forced to proceed homewards.

Lord Salisbury would also be glad to receive your opinion as to the sums which can fairly be asked for on account of these claims. Mr. Anderson's reduced estimates have been quoted above, but it must be borne in mind that they were only prepared with a view to the possible offer of a lump sum by the Russian Government, and that on reference to the Colonial Office it was found that there was a strong objection to the adoption of these minimum amounts in presenting the claims severally to the Russian Government.

The figures which have been suggested in the cases of the "Ariel" and "Willie McGowan" will doubtless assist you in computing the remaining claims which should presumably be calculated on a similar basis.

Report.

In dealing with the questions enumerated at p. 3 of Mr. Bertie's letter, it will be well, in the first instance, to advert to certain general considerations which affect the question of claims for unlawful seizure. I would refer in the first place to the Report of the Law Officers of the 14th March, 1888, quoted in Paper N, which appears to me correctly to state some of the general principles applicable to such claims. As regards prospective profits or loss of catch, while I agree that the amount of prospective profits eo nomine cannot be recovered upon the ground that their acquisition or earning may be prevented by other contingencies, it is, on the other hand, undoubtedly true that the loss of the earning power of the ships wrongfully seized may be taken into consideration, and general damages awarded in respect thereof, and in the assessment of such damages regard may be had to the average earnings of vessels similar in size and equipment, taking one season with another, and all considerations fairly bearing upon the question of the probability or improbability of such profits being earned.

2. If it be determined to frame the claims so as to include a claim for damages in respect of the loss of the use of the vessels, interest on the capital invested ought not to be added.

3. No general answer can be given as to the period for which prospective loss may be taken into consideration. In each case the facts must be considered, the condition of the ship, her suitability for the employment, her probable life, and the contingencies to which the employment is liable. I think that, as pointed out in the Law Officers Report of the 14th March, 1888, to which I have already referred, the simplest way in which the claims can be framed in cases where the owners have been permanently deprived of a vessel is to claim for the value of the vessel and her equipment, together with a claim for interest thereon from the date of her seizure, and some sum in respect of loss of her employment during the season in which she was seized, with interest thereon from the approximate date of the termination of the season. If the vessel has been restored to the owners after certain detention the claim should be framed upon the basis of reasonable compensation for the loss occasioned by her non-employment during the period of detention. The above considerations apply to claims in cases in which the wrongful seizure is admitted, or it is intended to be maintained that the seizure was wrongful. If it is determined to prefer claims for loss of the employment of the ships, items for wages, provisions, ammunition, and consumable stores must not be included in the claims, as such expenses would be incurred and articles used up in the employment of the ships. I desire to add one word upon the question of the merits, whether the seizures were justifiable or not. In considering the probable truth of accounts differing, as in many of the cases in question they differ in most material points, and in determining whether a claim in respect of any particular seizure should be pressed or not, it is, in my opinion, of the first importance to consider carefully whether there are admitted facts pointing to the guilt or innocence of any particular ship. In the absence of such facts, and where the allegations are as in many of these cases wholly conflicting, the only possible way of dealing with the cases is to agree to some Tribunal before which evidence can be taken, and the witnesses, if possible, cross-examined.

I will now proceed to consider the individual cases:—

The "Ariel."

In this case the liability for the seizure is admitted by the Russian Government. The claim, which is to be found at p. 22 of the Blue Book, C.—7028, appears to be made out upon the proper principle. Following out, however, what I have suggested, if the claim for 18,746 dollars, or a corresponding amount for similar items stands, interest should be charged thereon, and a figure inserted for the loss of the use of the schooner during the season of 1892. It would be inconsistent with a claim for the total value and interest thereon from 1892 to claim for the loss of the use of the schooner in subsequent seasons, and if a claim for loss of sealing during the season is made, loss of provisions, ammunition, and stores cannot be claimed as well. I do not know upon what principle the amounts have been reduced in the Colonial Office Estimates, nor why the outfit of the schooner has been excluded; but of course, in any settlement there will have to be a considerable reduction in the gross amount. The wages of the crew cannot be claimed, as they would have been expended in any event.

The "Willie McGowan."

The claim in this case, C.—7028, pp. 31 and 102, is made out upon the right principle, except that the item 1,000 dollars for stock of provisions, &c., cannot be claimed, if the item for loss of the employment of the vessel is claimed, and I should think the claim for seal-skins would have to be reduced.

The observations I have already made in the case of the "Ariel" apply to this case.

The "Maria."

In this case the claim should, I think, at present be pressed, but, at the same time, I must add that I regard the story of the "Maria" as very suspicious. The fact that her log-book had not been kept for four days, and that the vessel had obviously been for some time in the proximity of the islands lends strong colour to the suggestion of the Russian Government that her boats had been sealing in territorial waters. I agree, however, with the remarks of the Colonial Office that nothing but a judicial investigation will elicit the truth. The claim is made out upon a right basis, except that the figures are round figures, and I should think excessive, and they should be considerably reduced. The estimate of 1,200 skins is obviously excessive, and a lump sum of 6,000 dollars for outfit is unsatisfactory. The owner ought certainly to give further particulars as to how these figures are arrived at, especially in view of the suspicion which attaches to this case.

"Rosie Olsen."

I regard this case also as one of very great suspicion, if it be true that the ship's log had not been kept for several days. I agree, however, with the Colonial Office criticisms, and think that the case cannot, at any rate at present, be withdrawn. As regards the claim, it is made out upon a right basis, but the estimate of the catch is obviously greatly exaggerated, and the items provisions, ammunition, slop chest, compasses, &c., appear to be very exaggerated, and cannot be claimed with the last item.

The "Carmolite."

In my opinion, this case cannot ultimately be pressed. If the master's story is true, that she was well out of sight of territorial waters when sighted by the "Vitiaz," I can see no reason why he should have set sail and stood to the eastward. The Canadian statement admits that the vessel was sailing away to the eastward for an hour and a-half. I have little doubt myself that the boats of the "Carmolite" had been sealing within territorial waters. As regards the claim the value of the schooner, and the amount of the season's catch seem very exaggerated, and the amount claimed for the stock of provisions must be excluded if a claim is made for the use of the schooner during the season. I think, however, that it may not be possible ultimately to press this case. The same observations apply as in previous cases as regards the non-posting of the log-book.

"Vancouver Belle."

This case should, at present at any rate, be pressed, though the evidence as to the distance of the vessel and her boats from the islands is not satisfactory, and it is to be noted that when the smoke of the cruiser was first seen, a signal was given to summon the boats, which was unnecessary, if they were well outside territorial waters. I agree, however, that the Russian statements are not altogether satisfactory. The figures of the claim are obviously very exaggerated, and the item of 10,000 dollars, including the loss of the ship for the year 1893, cannot be pressed in its entirety if the value of the ship and interest is claimed.

"W. P. Sayward."

Unless some satisfactory evidence can be obtained from the boats that they were outside the 3-mile limit, I do not think this claim should be pressed.

"E. P. Marvin," "Annie Moore."

Upon the facts before me, neither of these claims can be pressed.

1895

"C. H. Tupper."

I agree entirely with the observations made by Mr. Anderson that a claim for 10,500 dollars cannot be supported, the vessel not having been interfered with until the 10th August. Assuming, however, that there is satisfactory evidence that the vessel did abandon sealing solely by reason of the interference of the Russian cruiser, a moderate claim should be pressed.

"W. P. Hall."

The same remarks apply in the case of the "W. P. Hall."

With regard to all the above cases in the absence of a settlement, both as to the merits and as to the items, it is, in my judgment, of extreme importance that some Joint Commission should be appointed which can investigate the facts.

Seizure of British sealers in Behring Sea by Russian cruisers.

Sir,

YOUR report of the 10th ultimo relative to the seizure of certain British sealing-vessels in Behring Sea by Russian cruisers during the season of 1892 has been communicated to Her Majesty's Secretary of State for the Colonies; and I have now the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, the reply which has been received from the Colonial Office* on this subject, containing Mr. Chamberlain's observations with regard to your Report.

I am to request that you will take the letter from the Colonial Office into your consideration, and favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion thereon, and with any general observations which you may have to offer on the case.

I have, &c.
(Signed) FRANCIS BERTIE.

Report.

We have considered Mr. Chamberlain's observations on the Attorney-General's Report of the 10th August.

As matters of argument which may very properly be urged on behalf of the British ships, we recognize the justice of many of the criticisms by the Colonial Office upon the views expressed by the Attorney-General, and it is quite possible that the more intimate acquaintance with the facts and earlier correspondence possessed by the Colonial Office officials enable them to form a more trustworthy judgment on each case.

Nothing, however, is to be gained—at any rate at present—by discussing argumentatively and in detail the differences of opinion.

We concur in the course suggested by Mr. Chamberlain at the conclusion of the Colonial Office letter of the 14th ultimo, and suggest that claims should be prepared and presented in all cases as to which there appears on the statements of the masters and crews any fair ground for their presentation, and that the detailed points of difference should be discussed in consultation between the Colonial Office and the Law Officers after the draft of the claims has been prepared.

---

* Colonial Office, September 14, 1895.

With reference to the specific points referred to, we would make the following observations:—

The Attorney-General was quite aware that the posting of log-books was not compulsory. We still think that it is a circumstance of suspicion that a vessel has kept no record of her position. Even in small vessels it is usual to make some entries, and the importance of the question of position must have been fully known.

As regards attempted flight, recognizing the argument thereon, we still think vessels sealing on the high seas would not make the probably useless attempt to escape from a cruiser by flight. We think such conduct may justly be regarded as suspicious.

We do not, of course, wish the arguments urged by the Colonial Office to be withdrawn, but we think the observations of the Attorney-General well-founded.

The "Marie."—The observation that the vessel had obviously been in the proximity of the islands was founded on the fact, which we understood to be admitted, that out of 622 skins, 585 were those of females; that the vessel had been for four days in approximately the same locality, and was found not far outside territorial waters.

The Attorney-General does not, however, desire to press his view in any way against that of the Colonial Office.

The "Carmolite."—There is, we think, much force in the observations of the Attorney-General. No doubt the arguments of the Colonial Office, if the data on which they are based may be assumed to be correct, are well-founded.

The Attorney-General did not suggest the withdrawal of the claim at present.

"Vancouver Belle."—We must point out that the Attorney-General considered that the claim should at present be pressed.

As we have already pointed out, discussion in detail of arguments pro and con can at present serve no useful purpose.

If it be established that the Russian vessels were ordered to seize all vessels sealing west of a certain line, the Attorney-General's observations would, of course, have far less weight; but at present this cannot be assumed.

The observations by the Colonial Office supply valuable arguments in support of the British Case.

Colonial Office to Foreign Office.

Downing Street, September 14, 1895.

Sir,

I AM directed by Mr. Secretary Chamberlain to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 30th ultimo, inclosing copy of a Report by the Attorney-General on the seizure in 1892 of certain British vessels by Russian cruisers in the North Pacific.

Mr. Chamberlain has read with much satisfaction the general statement of the principles governing these cases which is contained in the first three paragraphs of Sir R. Webster's Report, and he is glad to observe that these paragraphs confirm in substance the views expressed in the letter from this Department of the 27th June last, and he gathers that Sir R. Webster's view is that the claims of the "Ariel" and "Willie McGowan" should be presented as in the first alternative form given in that letter.

With regard to the other seizures, the legality of which is still in dispute, Mr. Chamberlain does not understand that it is intended to present definite claims until the question of their justification has been definitely settled, but; if that is not the case, he will cause a statement of these claims to be prepared on the same lines as in the cases of the "Ariel" and "Willie McGowan."

With regard to the Attorney-General's remarks on the individual cases, Mr. Chamberlain is disposed to think that, possibly from his not being familiar with the earlier parts of the voluminous correspondence on this question, Sir R. Webster has attached undue weight to the failure of the masters in some of the cases to post the log-books up to date, and to the vessels having attempted to escape from the cruisers.

With regard to the posting of the log-book, I am to observe that the daily entry of particulars as to the ship's course and position, which is required by the Award Regulations, is not compulsory in the waters now in question. The vessels are all under 100 tons burthen, and the absence of entries in the log might also be due to the inefficiency of the class of officers found in such small craft.

Neither the "Ariel" nor the "Willie McGowan" had their logs posted up, and it appears to Mr. Chamberlain difficult to draw any conclusion unfavourable to the vessels from that fact.

With regard to the point that the vessels took to flight on sighting the cruisers, I am to observe that a foreign cruiser has no right to interfere in any way with a British vessel on the high seas, and, if such a cruiser is pursuing a British vessel, the fact of pursuit affords a presumption of unfriendly intention. Sealing vessels might naturally take alarm at the approach of the cruiser, seeing that they had for six years previously been harassed by the United States' cruisers in the neighbouring part of the North Pacific, and the fate of the "Araunah" in 1888, and the summary manner in which she was treated were so well known, that the efforts of the sealers to escape were only natural. The "Willie McGowan"—the seizure of which is admitted to have been illegal—also attempted to escape, and no doubt the "Ariel" would have done so, too, had she not been becalmed at the time.

It must not be forgotten that if there is a presumption against the sealers on these grounds, there is a still stronger presumption against the action of the Russian cruisers.

The Commanders of these cruisers had—or alleged that they had—instructions to seize all vessels found sealing to the west of the United States' water boundary and north of a line from Cape Chalutka, on the Kamschatkan coast, to the most southerly of the Aleutians. They, in fact, acted on the assumption that the whole of Behring Sea, instead of only the eastern half, had been closed to sealing. This was repeatedly stated by their officers, and the limits were actually marked on the chart of the "W. P. Hall," now in possession of Her Majesty's Government, by the Commander of the "Zabeaka." who entered on the schooner's log that she had been within Russian waters for sealing, although it was admitted that she had never been near territorial waters.

With regard to the case of the "Maria," Sir R. Webster remarks that she had "obviously been for some time in the proximity of the island," a statement which appears to be made under some misapprehension, for Mr. Chamberlain finds no support for it in the papers before him. It is, indeed, stated that for two or three days she had been in a dense fog, but it is impossible to found on that any inference as to her proximity to the islands, as she was cruising about the whole time. She had no motive for going or sending her boats into territorial waters, as on that side of Copper Island where she was seized, there is no rookery or landing-ground for seals, and to reach the territorial waters on that side, seals coming from the rookery on the other side of the island would have to round the southern extremity and double back out of their course, so that they would therefore be less likely to be plentiful in territorial waters than outside. It may also be observed that if the two boats captured by the "Kotik" were, as the master alleges, to the south-west of the vessel, the cruiser, if she captured them, as alleged, before seizing the vessel, must have passed the vessel on her way to the boats. It is not impossible that M. Grebnitzky may have confused the boats of the "Maria" wth those of the "Annie Moore," which appear to have been captured about the same time.

"Carmolite."

Mr. Chamberlain regrets that Sir R. Webster gives it as his opinion that this case cannot ultimately be pressed. He says:—

"If the master's story is true, that the vessel was well out of sight of territorial waters when sighted, I can see no reason why he should have set sail and stood to the eastward."

Mr. Chamberlain does not understand upon what this doubt of the master's statement is founded. The master's affidavit asserts that the vessel was 12 miles from land when she saw the cruiser, and at that distance, and even much further, the land and the cruiser would easily be seen from the vessel. The Attorney-General also says he has little doubt that her boats had been sealing within territorial waters, though, as has been pointed out, this is not alleged by the Russians, and the British evidence is to the effect that the boats were not out at all on the day the vessel was captured, and as the vessel, like the "Maria," was on the side of Copper Island where there are no rookeries, she was more likely to find seals outside than inside territorial waters.

"Vancouver Belle."

Sir R. Webster, in considering this case, would appear to have overlooked the connection between it and the seizure of the "Sayward's" boats. These boats were, according to the statement of the Russians, seized at a distance of 9 miles from the south-eastern point of Copper Island, and it was not till after they had been seized that the cruiser, proceeding in a south-westerly direction—away from the island—sighted the "Vancouver Belle," which must therefore have been considerably more than 9 miles from land when sighted.

No allegation is made that her boats were within territorial waters, and the only justification of the seizure is the allegation that some time previously she had caught seals between Copper and Behring Islands, but it is maintained that the allegation, if true, could not warrant the seizure on a subsequent day, even if the seals in question had been taken in territorial waters.

With regard to these last two cases—the "Carmolite" and "Vancouver Belle"—in which the full Russian accounts have been received, Mr. Chamberlain concurs in his predecessor's opinion that there is no evidence to justify the seizures, and he trusts that Lord Salisbury will concur in this view.

As to the suggestion that a Joint Commission should be appointed to investigate the disputed cases and assess the damages, I am to observe that such a Commission would have to take evidence both in Russia and in British Columbia, and it is only in the autumn, when the sealing season is over, that the British Columbian evidence would be available, and as the principal Russian witness, M. Grebnitzky, is the Governor of the Seal Islands, it is not known when or where his evidence could be taken.

There would be considerable difficulties, therefore, in the way of such a Commission, except in so far as the assessment of damages is concerned, a task which might easily be done with the aid of some person acquainted with the sealing industry.

In Mr. Chamberlain's view, only two of the four disputed cases are doubtful, the "Maria" and the "Rosie Olsen," in which the contemporary Russian accounts of the seizures have not been received, and before making to the Russian Government the suggestion of a Commission, he would suggest that a representation should at once be made to the Russian Government on the cases of the "Vancouver Belle" and the "Carmolite," for which ample materials exist in the later evidence received from Russia, and that the extraordinary contradictions in the evidence as to the "Maria" and "Rosie Olsen" should be pointed out, and the inconvenience caused by the long delay in furnishing the further evidence, pending the receipt of which Her Majesty's Government cannot ignore the fact that on the sworn evidence before them these seizures are unjustifiable, while nothing but a résumé of apparently unsworn statements has been produced on the part of the Russians, and must therefore continue to press for compensation for these vessels.

At the same time, the claims of the "Ariel" and "Willie McGowan" should be put in, and the Russian Government informed that the further claims will be presented in due course.

I am, &c.

Foreign Office, August 31, 1895.

Gentlemen,

Draft Admiralty instructions to cruisers under "Seal Fisheries (North Pacific) Act, 1895."

WITH reference to the letter from the Attorney-General of the 21st instant, approving the draft Order in Council under "The Seal Fisheries (North Pacific) Act, 1895," I have the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, a draft of revised instructions to the Commanding Officers of Her Majesty's ships,* which have been drawn up by Mr. Albert Gray, in accordance with the provisions of the new Act and of the Order in Council which has now been passed.

I am to inclose, for convenience of reference, the former Admiralty instructions,† showing the alterations made by Mr. Gray, and copies of the Act‡ and Order in Council.§

Lord Salisbury would be glad to be informed whether, in your opinion, the instructions are right and proper, and whether they may be issued forthwith.

I am, &c.

"SEAL FISHERIES (NORTH PACIFIC) ACT, 1895."

Draft Admiralty Instructions.

IN accordance with an arrangement concluded between Great Britain and Russia on the 30th May, 1893, and in conformity with the powers vested in Her Majesty's Government by "The Seal Fisheries (North Pacific) Act, 1895," and "The Seal Fisheries (North Pacific) Order in Council, 1895" (copies of which are attached), the following Regulations have been made:—

1. British cruisers are to co-operate with vessels of the Russian Imperial Navy or Government in preventing persons belonging to British ships from killing or hunting seals during the period and within the prohibited zones, and until otherwise directed by a further Order in Council.

---

* Draft instructions.

† Former instructions.

‡ Act.

2. The masters of British ships likely to be affected should be warned that they will be liable to capture if their ships are being or have been used or employed for the purpose of killing or hunting seals within those zones.

3. If any person belonging to a British ship kills, takes, hunts, or attempts to kill or take, any seal during the said period or within the said zones, or if any British ship, or the equipment or crew thereof, is or are used or employed in such killing, taking, hunting, or attempt, the ship may be stopped and examined within the prohibited zones by a British or a Russian cruiser, and in any other place by a British cruiser.

4. Where the Commander of a British cruiser stops and examines a ship, he should draw up and sign a statement in writing of the circumstances under which and the grounds on which he stopped and examined the ship. Any evidence contained in the statement should, if possible, be taken on oath in the presence of the person charged in the evidence, and that person should have an opportunity of cross-examining the person giving the evidence, and of making his reply to the evidence. Where this is done the officer making the statement should certify that the evidence was so taken, and that there was such opportunity of cross-examining and of making a reply.

5. If the Commander of a British cruiser decides to seize the ship, he is to take her for adjudication to one of the specified ports, that is to say, either Yokohama or Shanghae, or a British colonial port at which there is a competent Court. In ordinary cases, the most convenient port will be Yokohama.

6. Instead of seizing the ship, the Commander of the British cruiser may, if he thinks fit, either retain the certificate and give a provisional certificate in lieu thereof, or return the certificate with an indorsement of the grounds on which it was seized, and in either case may direct the ship, by an addition to the provisional certificate, or to the indorsement, to proceed forthwith to one of the specified ports to be named in the certificate or indorsement. Forms of provisional certificate and of indorsement are sent herewith.

7. Where the Commander of a British cruiser seizes or indorses a ship's certificate, he should on the first opportunity send the certificate or copy of the indorsement, and also the above-mentioned statement, and the witnesses, to the specified port, addressing the documents to the proper officer there. The proper officer will be the British Consul if the specified port is Yokohama or Shanghae, and the Collector of Customs if it is a colonial port.

8. ~~When the Commander of a Russian cruiser stops and examines a British ship, and seizes and detains the ship or her certificate, he will, on the first opportunity, hand over the ship or her certificate, as the case may be, to the Commander of a British cruiser or other British authority. The Russian Commander must, however, satisfy the British Commander or other authority that there were reasonable grounds for the seizure and detention, having regard to the provisions of the Act and Order in Council, and must furnish the necessary evidence for adjudication as required by the Order in Council. The Russian Commander is not authorized to indorse the certificate or to give a provisional certificate, or to send the ship for adjudication, or to detain any of the crew, or any portion of the equipment.~~

8. When the Commander of a Russian cruiser stops and examines a British ship and seizes and detains the ship or her certificate, he will on the first opportunity hand over the ship, or her certificate, as the case may be, to the Commander of a British cruiser or other British authority. The Russian Commander is not authorized to indorse the certificate, or to send the ship for adjudication, or to detain any of the crew or any portion of the equipment.

9. The British Commander or authority will take over the ship, or her certificate only if the ship or her master or members of the crew is or are charged with a specific offence which is a contravention of "The Seal Fisheries (North Pacific) Act, 1895," and "The Seal Fisheries (North Pacific) Order in Council, 1895."

10. The Russian Commander must satisfy the British Commander or other authority that there were reasonable grounds for the seizure and detention, having regard to the provisions of the Act and Order in Council, and must furnish the necessary evidence for adjudication as required by the Order in Council.

11. If the Russian Commander fails to satisfy the British Commander or other authority as above provided, or to furnish to such Commander or other authority such sufficient evidence, the British Commander or other authority who has taken the ship over from the Russian cruiser may release the ship.

~~9.~~ 12. Where the Commander of a British cruiser receives such ship or certificate from a Russian cruiser, and is satisfied that there were reasonable grounds for the seizure and detention, he is to proceed in like manner as if he had himself stopped and examined the ship and seized the ship or her certificate.

~~10.~~ 13. Where the Commander of a British cruiser either seizes a ship or deals with her certificate as above directed, or receives a British ship from a Russian cruiser, and is satisfied as hereinbefore provided, all the equipment for sealing is to be removed from the ship, and taken or sent to the proper officer at the port to which the ship is taken or sent for adjudication.

~~11.~~ 14. In any case, the Commander of a British cruiser is to record the name of every ship in respect of which he performs any act hereinbefore directed, and of her master, and he is at the first opportunity to inform the Commander-in-chief of the action taken by him.

~~12.~~ 15. In the event of a British Agent visiting the Kormandorsky Islands and Robben Island to confer with the authorities there, and to inquire into the working of the arrangement, British cruisers are to co-operate with the said Agent, and to give him any assistance in their power.

~~13.~~ 16. It is to be understood that these Regulations do not apply to those parts of the zones which consist of Russian territorial waters, and that within those waters the Government of Russia will alone exercise jurisdiction.

Foreign Office, September 2, 1895.

Gentlemen,

Claim of Central American Mint Company against Salvador Government.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, the accompanying papers relative to the claim of the Central American Mint Company against the Government of San Salvador.

A history of the case is given in the Company's letter of the 6th August (Paper E), and a Memorandum has been drawn up in this Office on the subject (Paper D).

The Company undertook to recoin 5,000,000 dollars by a Contract dated the 7th July, 1893. After the revolution, which took place during the same year, the new Government appear to have infringed the conditions of the Contract in several respects.

In reply to the representations made by Her Majesty's Legation at Guatemala, the Government of San Salvador refer to the clause in the former Contract of the 14th May, 1891, by which the Company renounced any claim to diplomatic intervention, and agreed to settle any disputes as to the interpretation of the Contract by means of arbitration.

Copies of both Contracts are inclosed in Paper E, and Lord Salisbury would be glad to be favoured with your opinion as to what measure of support Her Majesty's Government would be justified in giving to the Company, having regard to the circumstances of the case, and to their several transactions and Contracts with the Government of San Salvador.

I am, &c.

Report.

We are of opinion that the Central American Mint Company are precluded by their Contract with the Government of San Salvador from invoking diplomatic action on the part of Her Majesty's Government.

The Contract of the 20th April, 1891, stipulated against this. The Contract of the 6th July, 1893, is engrafted on the Contract of the 20th April, 1891, and provides that the original Contract of the 20th April, 1891, remains in force in so far as it has not been modified by the special Contract.

It would, in our opinion, be an unduly narrow construction to confine the stipulation that "in no case shall any claim be made through a diplomatic medium" to claims arising solely on the provisions of the original Contract. We think it must be read as applying also to such modifying Contracts as that of the 6th July, 1893.

The fact that the party invoking the diplomatic action of Her Majesty's Government on his behalf is, in so doing, breaking his Contract, is not conclusive against the propriety of such action, as there might be special circumstances rendering it proper and expedient that his claims should be supported. In the present case no such special circumstances, in our opinion, exist.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, March 16, 1895.

Exemption of Swedish vessels from compulsory pilotage in Thames.

I AM directed by the Earl of Kimberley to transmit herewith the papers enumerated in the accompanying list, which relate to the question of granting exemption from compulsory pilotage in the north channel of the Thames to the vessels of the Thule Company, a Swedish line of steamers plying between the ports of Gothenburg and London.

The international engagements and statutory enactments which have a more or less direct bearing on this question are the following:—

1. Declaration of Sweden for the abolition of certain dues affecting British commerce in the ports of Sweden, signed at Stockholm, the 24th April, 1824. (See Hertslet's "Commercial Treaties," vol. iii, p. 388 et seq.).
2. Declaration of Sweden for the abolition of certain dues affecting British commerce in the ports of Norway, signed at Helsingborg, the 16th July, 1824. (See Hertslet's "Commercial Treaties," vol. iii, p. 396 et seq.).
3. Declaration signed at Stockholm by General Bloomfield on the part of His Majesty's Government, the 24th April, 1824. (Inclosure in M. Åkerman's note of the 31st January, 1895.)
4. Note from General Bloomfield, dated the 15th July, 1824. (Inclosure in M. Åkerman's note of the 31st January, 1895.)
5. An Act of Parliament for the amendment of the Law respecting Pilots and Pilotage, &c. (6 Geo. IV, cap. 125, sec. 59.)
6. Treaty of Commerce and Navigation between Great Britain and Sweden, the 18th March, 1826 (Article X). (See Hertslet's "Commercial Treaties," vol. iii, p. 433 et seq.).
7. "Merchant Shipping Act, 1854" (17 & 18 Vict., cap. 104), section 353 (now repealed).
8. "Merchant Shipping Act, 1894" (57 & 58 Vict., cap. 60), sections 572, 598 (2), 599, 603, and 625.

I am now to call your attention to a note addressed by M. Åkerman, the Swedish Minister at this Court, to Lord Kimberley on the 31st ultimo. You will gather from this note that, relying on the provisions for according national treatment to Swedish vessels contained in the notes and Declarations of 1824, and confirmed by Article X of the Treaty of 1826, M. Åkerman, on behalf of his Government, claims for the ships and masters of the Thule Company in English waters the same treatment as regards exemption from obligatory pilotage ("l'affranchissement du pilotage obligatoire") as is accorded, in the same waters, to British ships and their masters.

The Act 6 Geo. IV, cap. 125, was repealed by the Merchant Shipping Acts' Repeal Act (17 & 18 Vict., cap. 120), but by section 353 of "The Merchant Shipping Act, 1854" (17 & 18 Vict., cap. 104), and subsequently by section 603 of "The Merchant Shipping Act, 1894," the exemption in favour of certain persons and vessels contained in section 59 of the Act of Geo. IV has been preserved and continued.

It will be seen on reference to this last-mentioned section (section 59 of 4 Geo. IV, cap. 125), which is specially cited by M. Åkerman in his note of the 31st January, that one of the conditions under which a ship trading to Norway or the Cattegat may be exempted from taking pilots is that she has a British register; while section 353 of "The Merchant Shipping Act, 1854," provides that, "subject to any alteration to be made by any pilotage authority in pursuance of the power hereinbefore in that behalf given, the employment of pilots shall continue to be compulsory in all districts in which the same was by law compulsory immediately before the time when this Act comes into operation, and all exemptions from compulsory pilotage then existing within such districts shall also continue in force."

On the repeal of "The Merchant Shipping Act, 1854," by the Merchant Shipping Act of last year, the effect of this section was reproduced with a slight difference in wording by section 603 of the latter enactment.

From the reply addressed on the 15th September last to M. Åkerman by the Board of Trade, with which Department the Minister had, as a preliminary step, entered into communication with regard to this question, it will be gathered that the Trinity House authorities considered that M. Åkerman's request could not be complied with, mainly on the ground that, inasmuch as it carries passengers, the Thule line could not claim exemption from compulsory pilotage, as the ships belonging to it do not come under the category of vessels exempted by section 379 of the Merchant Shipping Act of 1854 (see section 625, "Merchant Shipping Act, 1894,") the word "ship" in Part V of which is declared by the Act of 1889 to include a foreign ship. Section 340 of the Act of 1854 (see section 599 of Act of 1894) provides that the master or mate of any ship may apply to any pilotage authority to be examined, and, if found competent, be granted a pilotage certificate. It would therefore be competent for a master or mate of the Thule line to avail himself of this privilege as pointed out by the Board of Trade. In regard to this point the question arises as to whether it could equitably be contended that the permission granted alike to the masters and mates of British and foreign ships to serve as qualified pilots acts as a discrimination —from the point of view of Treaty interpretation—between British and foreign ships.

The Swedish Government might maintain that it does, because the British master or mate—from familiarity (1) with the English language in which the examination is conducted, and (2) with British waters—can readily obtain a certificate as pilot, while such is not the case with a Swedish subject. On the other hand, the necessity for an exact knowledge of the British waters and of the English language might, it is thought, well be urged on the ground of securing the safety of the passengers, in addition to which the same means of avoiding compulsory pilotage is open to both British and foreign ships, viz., the employment of a duly certificated pilot as master or mate.

I am also to call your attention to the cases of the "Hannah" and "Vesta," to which the Board of Trade refer in their note to M. Åkerman, as bearing on the question at issue.

The former case which was heard by Dr. Lushington in 1866 is reported in the "Law Reports," vol. i, Admiralty and Ecclesiastical Cases, pp. 283–293, and the latter—which was heard by Sir Robert Phillimore in 1882—in the "Law Reports," Probate Division, vol. vii, pp. 240–247.

It is, however, possible that the present claim of the Swedish Government, even although the correctness of the opinion of the Board of Trade as to its inadmissibility when regarded simply from the standpoint of the English statute law and judicial decisions bearing upon the subject, be assumed, may yet be well founded from the point of view of the Treaty rights of Sweden and the Treaty obligations of Great Britain in that regard.

If so, it would apparently become the duty of Great Britain either to bring the provisions of her municipal law into harmony with her Treaty obligations, or—in so far as discrepancy exists between them—to modify those obligations by denunciation or further arrangement.

I am to request that you will be good enough to take these papers into your consideration, and to favour Lord Kimberley with your opinion on the following points:—

1. Whether the letter of the Board of Trade to M. Åkerman of the 15th September, 1894, contains in your opinion a correct statement of the English municipal law bearing upon the question, or whether the views expressed in that letter require to be modified or supplemented, and, if so, in what respects and to what extent.

2. Whether the Swedish Government can, as a matter of Treaty right, and irrespective of the provisions of the existing law, properly claim that the privileges which are accorded by the joint operation of 6 Geo. IV, cap. 125, section 59, and "The Merchant Shipping Act, 1854," section 353 (for which section 603 of "The Merchant Shipping Act, 1894," must now be substituted), to certain vessels "having British registers" should be extended also to Swedish vessels of the same kind not having British registers.

3. Whether the facilities for obtaining pilotage certificates, which are accorded by section 340 of the Act of 1854 (section 599, "Merchant Shipping Act, 1894") constitute such an extent of reciprocal national treatment as the Swedish Government are entitled to claim in this respect under the Anglo-Swedish Treaty of the 18th March, 1826, and the notes and Declarations of 1824 above-mentioned.

Lord Kimberley would further be glad to be favoured with any general observations you may consider it desirable to offer as to the terms in which the reply to M. Åkerman's representation should be framed.

I have, &c.

Report.

1. The letter of the Board of Trade to M. Åkerman, dated the 15th September, 1894, contains, in our opinion, a correct statement of the British Municipal Law.

2. In our opinion the Swedish Government cannot make that claim as a matter of Treaty right.

The terms of the Convention provide reciprocal exemption from "other or higher ship duties or charges." We do not consider that, according to British construction, an obligation to employ a pilot comes within these words. That was the opinion of Dr. Lushington in the "Hannah," and of Sir R. Phillimore in the "Vesta." It is confirmed by the language of "The Customs Consolidation Act, 1855," section 14, which appears to draw a distinction between pilotage and other dues and charges on the one hand, and Rules as to the employment of pilots on the other hand. "The Customs Laws Consolidation Act, 1876," section 141, contains a similar distinction.

We desire, however, to refer your Lordship to the preambles of the Swedish Declarations of the 24th April, 1824, and 16th July, 1824, in both of which it is recited that Sir Benjamin Bloomfield had given assurances of a perfect reciprocity between vessels of the different countries. Strictly speaking, the language used in the declaratory paragraphs, and the language of the subsequent Convention, do not cover, according to the interpretation of British Judges and Statutes, the case of compulsory pilotage. But, if it be the case that this language has been construed to the advantage of British merchandize, as including compulsory pilotage by the Swedish Government, it will be for your Lordship to determine how far that consideration will affect your judgment.

3. In our opinion the facilities referred to do not constitute a perfect reciprocity in fact, if they are to be measured against a complete exemption from compulsory pilotage in Sweden.

Foreign Office, August 7, 1895.

Gentlemen,

Exemption of Swedish vessels from compulsory pilotage in Thames.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit to you the papers noted on the accompanying list, which relate to the question of granting exemption from compulsory pilotage in the north channel of the Thames to the vessels of the Thule Company, a Swedish line of steamers plying between the ports of Gothenburg and London.

This question was referred to your predecessors in office, whose Report, under the date of the 10th May last, will be found among the papers now transmitted to you. (Paper A.)

The Memorandum of the 13th May by Sir H. Bergne (Paper B) was referred privately to the Attorney-General, who stated that the arguments therein advanced did not cause him to desire any alteration to be made in the opinion expressed by the Law Officers.

The Report, together with the Memorandum thereon, was referred to the Board of Trade (Paper C), whose reply (Paper D) I am now to inclose.

The matter to be principally considered appears to be as follows:—The declarations preceding the Convention between Great Britain and Sweden, and which declarations are expressly kept in force by Article I of that Convention, do, in fact, state that the treatment accorded in British waters to national vessels in regard to pilotage dues is also extended in those waters to Swedish and Norwegian vessels.

Do the terms of these declarations taken as a whole imply that, if, under certain circumstances, a vessel having a British register, can avoid the compulsory payment of a pilot, the same immunity must be extended in similar circumstances to Swedish and Norwegian vessels, on the ground that the compulsory payment to the pilot is, in fact, a pilotage due within the meaning of the declarations in question?

In answering this question, I am to request you to take these papers into your consideration, and to be good enough to favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion on the following points:—

1. Do you concur in the opinion expressed by your predecessors in office that the Swedish Government cannot, as a matter of Treaty right, claim that the privileges which are accorded by the joint operation of 6 Geo. IV, cap. 125, and "The Merchant Shipping Act, 1854," section 59 (for which section 603 of "The Merchant Shipping Act, 1894," must now be substituted) to certain vessels "having British registers" should be extended also to Swedish vessels of the same kind not having British registers?

2. In the event of your answering the above question in the affirmative, in what terms do you advise that the claim made by the Swedish Government should be answered?

3. In the event of your answering the above question No. 1 in the negative, in what manner do you advise that the inequality of treatment between British and Swedish vessels should be removed?

4. Finally, Lord Salisbury would be glad to be favoured with any observations which you may consider it advisable to offer on the case generally.

I have, &c.

1. I agree in the opinion expressed by my predecessors that the Swedish Government cannot as a matter of Treaty right claim that the privileges which are accorded by the joint operation of 6 Geo. IV, c. 165, and "the Merchant Shipping Act" to certain vessels having British registers should be extended also to vessels having Swedish registers. It is not necessary for me to add any additional reasons, but I will observe with reference to Sir Henry Bergne's Memorandum that the difficulty really appears to have arisen from the use of the word "frais" in the Declaration of the 24th April, 1824. No doubt the word "frais" would ordinarily convey a wider meaning than the word "droits," but looking to the whole of the contemporary documents I have little doubt that the word was intended to be used in the same signification, and to refer to the amount of pilotage dues.

2. In my opinion the claim made by the Swedish Government should be answered by a statement to the following effect:—

That by the law of England the obligation that certain vessels shall be compelled to take a pilot is not regarded as the imposition of a due, but a condition imposed for the safety and benefit of the foreign ships themselves, and that Swedish vessels being charged the same amount for pilotage dues as English vessels, the terms of the Convention have not been infringed. If it is deemed desirable I see no reason why the judgment of Dr. Lushington in the case of the 'Hannah' should not again be cited.

3. This is a question of policy rather than of law, but so far as it is for me if the Foreign Office is of opinion that there is practical inequality in consequence of vessels of Swedish registry being compelled to take a pilot in cases in which vessels of British registry are not so compelled, my own view is that it would be far better to repeal the exemption in the case of British vessels, unless they are entitled to exemption on other grounds, e.g., by the master or mate having a pilotage certificate.

To concede the claim of Sweden may give rise to considerable difficulties under favoured-nation-clauses if any such exist, but apart from that I am of opinion that the mere exemption on the ground of registry without the safeguard of the qualification of an officer on board the vessel qualified to pilot her, is objectionable.

Ottoman Dominions (Courts) Order in Council.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, February 22, 1895.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Earl of Kimberley, the accompanying papers respecting an Order in Council to be entitled "The Ottoman Dominions (Courts) Order in Council, 1895," which it is proposed to issue for the purpose of carrying into effect a reorganization of the Consular and Judicial Staff at Constantinople, recommended by Her Majesty's late and present Ambassadors.

Particulars of the scheme will be found in Sir P. Currie's despatch of the 7th May, 1894 (Paper A), and in the letter from this Department to the Treasury of the 20th July, 1894 (Paper B).

It will be seen that it is proposed (inter alia) to separate the Consular and Judicial establishments, to abolish the office of Consul-General and that of Assistant Judge, to promote the present Assistant Judge to be Judge, and to appoint a gentleman of sufficient legal acquirements to be Registrar of the Court and Legal Vice-Consul.

These changes will necessitate an amendment of the Ottoman Orders in Council, 1873, 1882, and 1890, and of "The Ottoman Tribunals Orders in Council, 1891;" and in this connection I am to call your attention to the inclosed Memoranda by Mr. Middleton, a Puisne Judge of the Cyprus Supreme Court, who officiated as Acting Judge at Constantinople for some weeks during the past summer (Paper F), and by Mr. Davidson, Q.C. (Paper I); and to Mr. Albert Gray's letters of the 30th October, 1894, and the 4th February, 1895 (Papers G and J).

I am to request that you will take the inclosed papers into your consideration, and that you will favour Lord Kimberley with your opinion whether the draft Order in Council (Paper K) may, in its present shape, properly be laid before the Queen in Council for Her Majesty's approval.

OTTOMAN DOMINIONS.

(Supreme Court.)

Draft Order in Council.

WHEREAS by Treaty, Capitulation, grant, usage, sufferance, and other lawful means, Her Majesty the Queen has jurisdiction within the Ottoman dominions:

Now, therefore, Her Majesty, by virtue and in exercise of the powers in this behalf by "The Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890," or otherwise in Her Majesty vested, is pleased, by and with the advice of her Privy Council, to order, and it is hereby ordered, as follows:—

Supreme Court.

1. Subject to the provisions of this Order, there shall be one Judge of the Supreme Court who shall be appointed by Her Majesty by warrant under her Royal sign-manual.

He shall be at the time of his appointment a member of the Bar of England, Scotland, or Ireland, of not less than seven years' standing.

2. For the purposes of this Order the Secretary of State may, from time to time, appoint a fit person, being either a Judge of the Supreme Court of a British possession or of Cyprus, or a person qualified to be Judge of the Supreme Court at Constantinople, to be an Additional Judge of the Supreme Court.

3. Every appeal from the Court for Egypt, under the Ottoman Orders in Council, shall be heard and determined by the Judge and Additional Judge of the Supreme Court.

4. Any person aggrieved by any final order of the Supreme Court in a civil suit or proceeding, whether in the original or appellate jurisdiction of that Court, and not being an order made on an appeal from the Court for Egypt, may within fifteen days after the order is made apply by motion to the Supreme Court for a rehearing, and the cause or matter in which the order was made shall be set down for rehearing, and shall be reheard before the Judge and the Additional Judge of the Supreme Court.

Articles 257 and 258 of the Order of 1873, which relate to applications by motion to the Supreme Court for leave to appeal to Her Majesty the Queen in Council, shall apply only to final orders of the Supreme Court made after such rehearing as is provided for by this Article, and the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court under those Articles shall be exercised by the Judge.

For the purposes of this Article, "final order" includes any rule or order having the effect of a final or definitive judgment, decree, or sentence.

5. There shall be attached to the Supreme Court a Registrar and so many officers and clerks as the Secretary of State from time to time thinks fit.

The Registrar shall be appointed by Her Majesty, and shall hold by Commission from Her Majesty the appointment of Legal Vice-Consul.

He shall be either a member of the Bar of England, Scotland, or Ireland, or a Solicitor of the Supreme Court in England or Ireland, or a Writer to Her Majesty's Signet, or a Solicitor in the Supreme Courts in Scotland.

He shall, subject to any directions of the Judge, hear and determine by summary trial such criminal charges as may, under the Ottoman Orders in Council, be properly so heard and determined, and for this purpose shall have all the jurisdiction, power, and authority of a Judge.

6. In case of the death or illness, or the absence or intended absence from the Consular district of Constantinople, of the Judge of the Supreme Court, or the Registrar, Her Majesty's Ambassador may appoint a fit person to be Acting Judge or Acting Registrar as the case may be.

Jurisdiction in Lunacy.

7. The jurisdiction in lunacy conferred by Article 89 of "The Ottoman Order in Council, 1873," upon the Supreme Court shall, so far as the same relates to Egypt, be exercised by the Court for Egypt, concurrently with the Supreme Court, but subject to the same rights of appeal to the Supreme Court as in civil suits and proceedings.

8. A Provincial Court shall, as far as circumstances permit, have with respect to British subjects and protected persons all such jurisdiction relative to the custody and management of the persons and estates of persons of unsound mind as for the time being may be exercised in England by the Masters in Lunacy, under the provisions of "The Lunacy Act, 1890," and any Act amending the same.

In any such case the Provincial Court may of its own motion, or on the application of any person interested, take or authorize such steps as to the Court may seem necessary or expedient for the immediate protection of the person and property of any person appearing to the Court to be of unsound mind, and may from time to time revoke, or vary, or supplement any order or proceeding taken in the matter.

Subject to the provisions of this Article, a Provincial Court shall not proceed in any such matter except under and according to the directions of the Supreme Court.

General Provisions, Repeal, &c.

9. Any reference to Her Majesty's Consul-General at Constantinople, or to his Consulate-General, contained in any Order in Council relating to the Ottoman dominions, shall be read as if "Consul" and "Consulate" were substituted therefor respectively.

10. The following provisions are hereby repealed:—

In "The Ottoman Order in Council, 1873," Articles 10 to 12; Article 34 from "or may direct" to the end of the Article; Article 48; in Article 89 the words "in itself exclusively;" and in Article 266 the words "or Assistant Judge."

In "The Ottoman Order in Council, 1882," Articles 5 and 6.

In Article 2 of "The Ottoman Order in Council, 1890," the word "Assistant."

In Article 2 of "The Ottoman Tribunals Order in Council, 1891," the words "Consul-General or other person for the time being acting as the Principal."

In Regulation 1 of the Regulations respecting Assessors before Ottoman Tribunals, made pursuant to "The Ottoman Tribunals Order in Council, 1891," and approved by the Secretary of State on the 2nd December, 1891, the words "Consul-General and."

11. This Order may be cited as "The Ottoman Dominions (Courts) Order in Council, 1895," and shall be construed as one with the Ottoman Orders in Council, 1873, 1882, and 1890.

And the Right Honourable the Earl of Kimberley, K.G., one of Her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, is to give the necessary directions herein.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, April 19, 1895.

Judgment of death recorded on Ugo Fabre by Egypt Court and upheld by Supreme Court.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Earl of Kimberley, to transmit to you a despatch which has been received from Mr. Tarring, the Acting Judge of the Supreme Court for the Ottoman Dominions,* inclosing a report of a judgment of the Court for Egypt, ordering judgment of death to be recorded upon one Ugo Fabre, together with a copy of the minutes and the notes of evidence taken at the trial, and certain observations of the learned Judge thereupon.

It will be seen that the prisoner was indicted for the wilful murder of one Luigi Negroponte on the 10th November last, and that the jury brought in a special verdict which the learned Judge who tried the case interpreted as a finding of wilful murder.

On the application of the counsel for the prisoner, Sir Charles Cookson postponed judgment, and reserved a case for the consideration of the Supreme Court at Constantinople on certain points of law involved.

On the 27th February, 1895, the Acting Judge of the Supreme Court delivered judgment upholding the view of the Court for Egypt, and finding that the prisoner was by the verdict of the jury convicted of the crime of wilful murder.

Thereupon judgment of death was, on the 7th March last, entered on record against Ugo Fabre by the Judge of the Court for Egypt, and, in accordance with the provisions of Article 269 of "The Ottoman Order in Council, 1873," the matter has now been reported home, for the direction of the Secretary of State respecting the punishment to be actually imposed.

The case is one of a somewhat unusual character, and, in these circumstances, Lord Kimberley desires, before coming to any decision respecting the punishment to be imposed on Ugo Fabre, to be favoured with your opinion as to—

1. Whether the finding of the jury amounted to a verdict of wilful murder against Ugo Fabre.

2. Whether, if so, such finding and verdict was justified by the evidence.

3. What punishment, having regard to all the circumstances of the case, ought to be actually imposed.

Finally, I am to state that Lord Kimberley would be glad to receive such observations as you may be good enough to offer for his assistance generally in dealing with the matter.

I have, &c.
(Signed) H. PERCY ANDERSON.

Report.

1. In our opinion, the finding of the jury amounted to a verdict of wilful murder.

2. In our opinion, the finding and verdict were justified by the evidence.

3. In the circumstances a punishment of ten years' imprisonment with hard labour would be a proper punishment. The death of the deceased was probably the result of an accident, though the prisoner intended to shoot Frederico, who, it appears, had grossly insulted him, and attempted to strike him from behind with a bottle. The offence committed by the prisoner was in law equivalent to murder, and certainly demands a severe punishment, but, in our opinion, it is not necessary to inflict the extreme sentence of twenty years' imprisonment.

Behring Sea Award Act. Draft O. in C. and Schedule.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Earl of Kimberley, the papers noted in the accompanying list which relate to "The Behring Sea Award Order in Council (No. 2), 1894," and the form of Special Licence to be issued to sealers under it.

As this Order expired at the end of last year, Mr. Albert Gray, the draftsman of the original Order, has been instructed to prepare the draft of a new Order, with certain amendments and alterations designed to obviate the necessity for issuing a fresh Order every year; and has also been directed to amend the form of Licence attached to it, in accordance with certain suggestions that have been made by the Canadian Minister of Marine and Fisheries in a letter to the Governor-General of Canada of the 24th October last. (Inclosure 1 in A.)

I am to inclose the draft of an amended Order in Council, and of the form of Special Licence attached to it, which has now been submitted by Mr. Gray, and which has received the concurrence of the Secretary of State for the Colonies; and I am to request that you will take the papers transmitted herewith into your consideration, and will favour Lord Kimberley with your opinion whether the draft Order, with the Schedule annexed thereto, may in its present shape properly be laid before the Queen in Council for Her Majesty's approval.

I have, &c.

Annex.

"BEHRING SEA AWARD ACT, 1894."

Draft Order in Council.

WHEREAS by "The Behring Sea Award Act, 1894," it is enacted that Her Majesty the Queen in Council may make Orders for carrying into effect the provisions of the Behring Sea Arbitration Award set out in the first Schedule to that Act, and therein referred to as the Scheduled Provisions:

And whereas arrangements have been made between Her Majesty and the Government of the United States for giving effect to Articles 4 and 7 of the said Scheduled Provisions, and it is expedient that effect should be given to those arrangements by an Order in Council under the said Act:

Now, therefore, &c.:—

1. On the application of the owner or master of any British sailing-vessel intended to be employed in fur-seal fishing under the provisions of the recited Act, a Secretary of State, or any person duly authorized by him for the purpose, may, if satisfactory evidence as required by the said Article 7 has been given by such owner or master of the fitness of the men to be employed by him on the said vessel in the said fishing, grant a special licence in the form in the Schedule hereto, authorizing that vessel (for the year mentioned in the licence) to fish for fur-seals during the period in the manner and in the waters in which fur-seal fishing is allowed by the recited Act; and the said special licence, when so granted, shall be carried on board the said vessel at all times while so employed.

2. Every British sailing-vessel provided with a special licence under this Order shall show, under her national colours, a flag, not less than 4 feet square, of two equal triangular pieces, yellow and black, joined from the right-hand upper corner of the fly to the left-hand lower corner of the luff, the part above and to the left to be black, and the part to the right and below to be yellow.

3. If in the case of any vessel there is any contravention of these Regulations, a Secretary of State, or any person duly authorized by him for the purpose, whether any penalty has been recovered under the recited Act or not, may revoke the special licence, whether the same was granted by a Secretary of State or by such person.

4. This Order may be cited as "The Behring Sea Award Order in Council, 1895," and "The Behring Sea Award Order in Council, 1894," and this Order may together be cited as "The Behring Sea Award Orders in Council, 1894 and 1895."

And the Right Honourable the Earl of Kimberley, K.G., and the Most Honourable the Marquis of Ripon, K.G., two of Her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, and the Lords of the Admiralty, are to give the necessary directions herein as to them respectively appertain.

Special Licence.

Whereas the British sailing-vessel   is intended to be employed in fishing for fur-seals under the provisions of "The Behring Sea Award Act, 1894."

And whereas satisfactory evidence of the fitness of the men who are to be employed on board the said vessel in the said fishing has been given by A. B., the owner [or A. B. and others, owners, or C. D., the master] of the said vessel.

[And whereas I (name and description) have been duly authorized by a Secretary of State to grant special licences under the provisions of the above-mentioned Act and Order in Council.]

Now, therefore, in pursuance of the above-mentioned Act and Order in Council, I hereby authorize the said vessel for the year [eighteen hundred and ninety-five, or as the case may be] to be employed in fur-seal fishing during the period of time in the manner and in the waters in which fur-seal fishing is allowed by the above-mentioned Act.

This special licence is subject to revocation in case of any contravention of the above-mentioned Act or Order in Council.

[April 1, 1895.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, March 18, 1895.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Earl of Kimberley, the papers noted in the accompanying list, which relate to the seizure of the British sealing-schooner "Wanderer" by the United States' ship "Concord" in June last, for an alleged infringement of "The Behring Sea Award Act, 1894" (Paper A). The facts of the case are given in the inclosed letter from the Admiralty (Paper B).

Seizure of British vessel "Wanderer" for alleged infringement of Behring Sea Award Act.

The "Wanderer," while in the waters affected by the Award of the Arbitrators, and during the close season, was boarded, and the master warned by an officer from the United States' ship "Yorktown" of the provisions of the Award Act.

A certain quantity of arms and ammunition was produced to the officer of the "Yorktown," and was sealed up in accordance with an arrangement come to between the British and United States' Governments in May last (Paper C), and the master of the "Wanderer" signed a statement to the effect that the fire-arms, sealing implements, and ammunition then produced and specified in the statement were all that belonged to the vessel or to any person attached to her.

The seal-skins on board were counted, and the number amounted to 400.

On the afternoon of the same day the vessel was again boarded within the waters affected by the Award by an officer from the United States' ship "Concord." The master produced the arms and ammunition which had been sealed up in the morning, and the seals which had previously been placed on them were found to be intact. Further search was, however, made, and in the extreme forward part of the ship a shot-gun with thirty-nine cartridges loaded with buckshot for use with the gun were found, which the mate of the "Wanderer" said belonged to him.

The number of seal-skins found on board corresponded with the number counted by the officer of the "Yorktown" (Paper B, Inclosure 4).

The vessel was thereupon towed to St. Paul's, Kadiak Island, formally seized, sent thence with a prize crew to Unalaska, and handed over to Her Majesty's ship "Pheasant" in accordance with Article 1 of "The Behring Sea Award Order in Council, 1894" (Paper D).

The grounds for the seizure as given by the Commander of the "Concord" (Paper B, Inclosure 4) were: "the possession of an unsealed gun and ammunition in contravention of 'The Behring Sea Award Act, 1894,' clause 1, paragraph 2, and clause 3, paragraph 2, as well as of section 10 of the President's Proclamation" (Paper D).

The allusion to section 10 of the President's Proclamation, which apparently seeks to establish a presumption against a vessel found within the area comprised by the Award with sealing implements on board, although there is no corresponding provision either in the Award of the Tribunal of Arbitration, in "The Behring Sea Award Act, 1894," or in the Behring Sea Order in Council, was probably inserted through some misapprehension on the part of the seizing officer, and it is clear that, except in so far as the President's Proclamation embodies substantive provisions of the British Statute and Order in Council, it cannot be binding on British subjects outside of United States' territory.

The sections and sub-sections of the English enactment referred to provide penalties for contravening the Award Regulations, which forbid by Article 6 the use of fire-arms and explosives in the fur-seal fishing, except outside of Behring Sea during the season when it may be lawfully carried on.

The master protested (Paper B, Inclosure 7), one of the grounds of protest being that the gun and ammunition were the private property of the mate, and that they had been hidden by him (the mate) without his (the master's) orders or knowledge. On this point, in so far as it may affect the liability of the master under the circumstances, I am to refer you to section 4, sub-section 2, of "The Behring Sea Act, 1894" (Paper A).

The master also said at the time the vessel was boarded that he was making direct for St. Paul, a port in United States' territory. On the receipt of the necessary documents the Commander-in-chief on the North American Station requested Messrs. Davie, Pooley, and Luxton, the Admiralty Solicitors in Victoria, British Columbia, to give him a legal opinion as to whether a verdict in favour of the Crown would be likely if the vessel were prosecuted. Their opinion was as follows (Paper B, Inclosure 1):—

"The vessel could not be successfully prosecuted for sealing during the close season, because the sealing outfit (except the gun and ammunition mentioned, i.e., the shot-gun and thirty-nine cartridges) and the seal-skins (400) were sealed up by the officer of the United States' ship 'Yorktown,' and upon the subsequent boarding of the said schooner by the officer of the steam-ship 'Concord,' the seals that had been placed upon these several packages were unbroken, and it would therefore be unreasonable to suppose that the schooner 'Wanderer' was proceeding upon a sealing voyage with only one gun, and no charge of this nature is alleged by Commander Goodrich, commanding the United States' ship 'Concord,' in his report."

In these circumstances Admiral Stephenson, without communicating with the officer commanding the "Concord," whose action in seizing the "Wanderer" and in delivering her to a British officer was based on "The Behring Sea Award Act, 1894," and on the Behring Sea Award Order in Council of the 30th April, 1894 (Paper D), decided not to take proceedings against the "Wanderer," and requested the Collector of Customs at Victoria, in whose charge she was, to release her.

Had proceedings been instituted against the "Wanderer," they would have been taken by way of an Admiralty action in rem for the condemnation of the ship for a contravention of "The Behring Sea Act, 1894." And it is presumed that the pleadings and procedure would as a matter of fact have been cast in similar form to those in re the ship "Oscar and Hattie," which was heard on appeal from the Admiralty District of British Columbia by the Supreme Court of Canada in October 1893 (see vol. 23, No. 3, of the Reports of the Supreme Court of Canada, pp. 396 et seq., which is sent herewith).

It will be observed that on the pleadings in the matter of the "Oscar and Hattie" above referred to Her Majesty the Queen appears as the actual plaintiff, although it is believed that in other proceedings of an analogous nature taken in this country by Her Majesty's Customs under those provisions of "The Merchant Shipping Act, 1854," which are incorporated by Schedule in "The Behring Sea Act, 1894," the seizing officer is usually made the plaintiff. In such a case, should the Court be of opinion that there were no reasonable grounds for the seizure or detention of the ship, it is presumed that any order for the payment of damages to the aggrieved party would be made nominally against the seizing officer, who would be subsequently reimbursed by the Crown.

But in the case of proceedings taken by the Queen herself it is not clear against whom, if any one, the Court could make such an order.

Moreover, even assuming that in cases where a United States' officer seizes and detains a British colonial vessel, which he subsequently hands over to the British authorities for prosecution before their Colonial Courts, the procedure adopted in the case of the "Oscar and Hattie" is correct in point of form, it seems doubtful, nevertheless, in the event of the abandonment of such proceedings by the British authorities without the knowledge and assent of the United States' Government, any claim for compensation in respect of a seizure alleged to have been originally illegal can properly be put forward by Her Majesty's Government against that of the United States.

It would seem to be open to the United States' Government to argue that in such a case as that of the "Wanderer" they cannot be held in any way responsible for the consequences of Admiral Stephenson's action, with respect to which they were never consulted, which they might have deprecated if they had been consulted, and of which the result has been to deprive them of the benefit of the only decision which they are prepared to recognize as binding and authoritative upon the legality or otherwise of their officer's proceedings. The United States' Government might not improbably contend, in the event of this claim being pressed (and it is therefore relevant to the purposes of the present reference to consider the possible contention), that although they had agreed to accept as decisive of such questions the Judgment of the Tribunal nominated for that purpose by the Act under which the proceedings in the case of the "Wanderer" were taken, they must decline to be bound by, and must seriously protest against, the action of the British Admiral in withdrawing the case from the Tribunals without their consent, and in practically substituting his own opinion upon the merits of the case for the judicial decision to which they were entitled.

On the other hand, it might be argued that, as the Commander of the "Concord" appears to have seized the ship under the misapprehension that the provisions of the United States' Act applied to British vessels, and as the documents in the case did not disclose any offence against the English Statute, it was impossible for Her Majesty's Government to cause proceedings to be taken against the vessel.

A letter from the Colonial Office is also inclosed (Paper E), expressing the opinion that the seizure of the "Wanderer" was entirely unwarranted, and suggesting that Her Majesty's Ambassador at Washington should be instructed to make a representation to the United States' Government on the subject, pressing for the issue of instructions to prevent the recurrence of such unjustifiable seizures, and asking for compensation for the loss inflicted on the owners by the action of the United States' cruiser.

I am to request that you will take these papers into your consideration, and favour Lord Kimberley with your opinion as to—

1. Whether the seizure of the "Wanderer" by the officer commanding the United States' ship "Concord" was warranted by the facts of the case, and, if not, in what respects and on what grounds his proceedings were open to objection.

2. Whether, having regard to the circumstances of the case generally, and especially to the fact that the Admiral Commanding-in-chief on the North Pacific Station abandoned all proceedings against, and released, the vessel without having previously communicated with the United States' authorities and ascertained their views, Her Majesty's Government would be justified in putting forward a claim for compensation on behalf of the owners of the "Wanderer" against the United States' Government; and, if so, on what specific grounds such a claim could most properly and advantageously be based.

Lord Kimberley would be glad at the same time to be favoured with such general observations on the papers submitted as you may desire to offer.

I have, &c.

Report.

In our opinion, though this is certainly a difficult case, it is not a case in which compensation can be claimed of right against the United States' Government.

There is no Treaty or Agreement before us regulating the circumstances under which compensation should be made for improper seizure by officers either of Her Majesty or the United States. Accordingly we think that general principles must apply, and compensation cannot be claimed unless there has been a violation of the law of nations or unreasonable and unfair conduct.

When Her Majesty and the United States' Government reciprocally authorized the seizure of vessels of their own flag by the naval officers of the other State, it cannot be supposed that either intended to incur a pecuniary liability in every case in which the seizure, however reasonable, did not ultimately result in conclusive evidence of guilt.

In this particular case the Captain of the "Concord" appears to have acted upon the authority of American law, which is, of course, inapplicable to British vessels.

But if he did what he was justified by British law in doing, though he did it upon an erroneous ground, the complaint is rather technical than substantial.

Now, by British law, the pursuing of seals is an offence (Article 2 of Schedule to Act of 1894), and in the arrangement of the same year between the two Governments Article 2 makes the sealing-up of fishery implements and the entry in the log a protection to a vessel, "unless there shall be evidence of seal-hunting notwithstanding."

When the Captain of the "Concord" found a concealed gun and cartridges in the "Wanderer," and a statement by the master a few hours before that there was no such weapon on board except such as had been sealed up, and further observed, or honestly thought he observed, the "Wanderer" under such sail as she was accustomed to carry when dodging about for seals, he might reasonably think that she was seal-hunting. She would be seal-hunting even if the intention was merely to kill such seals as might come in her way on her voyage to port.

The British Act and Order in Council in terms authorize seizure only when an offence has been committed. But under section 104 of "The Merchant Shipping Act, 1854," which is incorporated with "The Behring Sea Act, 1894," no officer is responsible for seizure if it is shown there were reasonable grounds for seizure, and we think the same principle applies to the action of an United States' officer.

We further consider that the release of the vessel before she came for trial throws additional difficulties in the way of a claim for compensation. The release is not conclusive against such a claim, just as a judicial decision exculpating the accused vessel would not be conclusive in favour of such a claim. But the United States' Government have been deprived of that guidance as to the propriety of the course pursued by their officer which would have been afforded by a judicial investigation of the facts, and the decision of a legal Tribunal.

We therefore answer your Lordship's first question in the affirmative, and the second question in the negative.

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, May 21, 1895.

Gentlemen,

Seizure by United States of British sealing-schooner "Favourite."

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Earl of Kimberley, the papers noted in the accompanying list relative to the seizure of the British sealing-schooner "Favourite" by United States' war-vessel "Mohican" on the 24th August last.

The inclosed letters from the Admiralty (Paper A) and Colonial Office (Paper B) give the facts in connection with the case.

The "Favourite" cleared from Victoria (British Columbia) on the 18th June, 1894, properly provided with a licence to hunt and carrying the distinctive flag as prescribed in the Paris Award Regulations.

There were no fire-arms on board with the exception of one rocket-gun to be used for signalling purposes, and this appeared on the ship's manifest signed by the Collector of Customs.

The vessel called at Kyuquot, on the west coast of Vancouver Island, to procure the requisite crew of Indian hunters, and there had all spears on board sealed up by Her Majesty's Customs officer in accordance with the Agreement between the British ang United States' Government of May last (Paper E). She then proceeded to Akoun Island at the entrance to Behring Sea, and on the 1st August, the first day of the open season, she entered Behring Sea, and after breaking seals and releasing the spears, commenced sealing.

On the 24th August she was boarded by an officer of the United States' ship "Mohican." While the schooner's papers were under examination the master produced the signalling gun and placed it on the table before the Examining Officer. The officer expressed himself satisfied, and entered the following in the schooner's log:—

"Boarded the 'Favourite,' found log correctly kept. No violation of Regulations as per log. One shot gun unsealed."

The "Mohican" steamed off about 2 miles, but returned. The same officer boarded the "Favourite" again and ordered the master to take the schooner's papers and the signal gun on board the "Mohican," where he was informed that his vessel was seized for having fire-arms on board.

Lieutenant Wadhams, who was in command of the "Mohican" during the illness of her Commander, Captain Clark, stated the grounds for seizure to be (Inclosure 3 in Paper A), that the vessel had on board a double-barrel shot gun, which was found upon trial on board the "Mohican" to carry No. 10 gauge cartridges, and to shoot accurately at least 50 yards, and that the possession of this shot gun was in contravention of Article 6 of the Paris Award (Paper D), and of that part of section 10 of the Act of Congress (Paper E), which reads, "or if any licensed vessel shall be found in waters to which this Act applies, having on board apparatus or implements suitable for taking seals, but forbidden then and there to be used, it shall be presumed that the vessel in the one case and the apparatus or implements in the other was or were used in violation of this Act until it is otherwise proved."

The gun in question was carried for the sole purpose of firing rockets as night signals. It was described as being an old one, barely 11 inches long in the barrels, with a pistol-handle grip of 9 inches, and quite unfit for killing seals. This description is confirmed by Admiral Stephenson, the Commander-in-chief on the Pacific Station (Inclosure 1 in Paper A). Not only was the gun mentioned in the ship's manifest signed by the Collector of Customs at Victoria, but the master stated (Inclosure 3 in Paper A) that he was verbally authorized by the Custom-house official who sealed his weapons to carry it and rockets unsealed. Moreover, Commander Hunter Blair, of Her Majesty's ship "Pheasant," and Captain Clark, of the "Mohican," had agreed (Inclosure 3 in Paper A) to authorize sealing-vessels to carry the means of signalling, and the former states that had application been made to him he would certainly have permitted the "Favourite" to carry the weapon on account of which she was seized.

No cartridges, or shot of any kind, were found on the vessel.

In spite of the master's protest a prize crew was placed on board the schooner, by which she was taken to Unalaska, and there handed over to the Commander of Her Majesty's ship "Pheasant," by whom she was ordered to proceed to Victoria and report to the Collector of Customs. The latter applied to the Admiral for special instructions (Inclosure 4 in Paper A), considering that he was not justified under "The Behring Sea Award Act, 1894" (Paper F) in taking any action against the vessel for the alleged offence of having an unsealed shot gun on board, and the Admiral replied (Inclosurse 5 in Paper A) that in his opinion there was no ground for a prosecution, and therefore requested that the schooner should be released.

1895

The master of the "Favourite" has preferred a claim (Inclosure in Paper B) for 22,430 dollars, the amount at which he estimates the loss incurred by the interruption of his voyage.

The circumstances are in their main aspect similar to those connected with the seizure of the "Wanderer," and I am therefore to inclose your report on that case (Paper G), together with the papers submitted to you in my letter of the 18th March (letter and inclosures marked H), with special reference to the questions of the authority under which the officer of the United States' ship justified the seizure of the "Favourite," and of the action of Admiral Stephenson in directing that the vessel should be released without any proceedings being taken against her.

In order to avoid as far as may be possible the recurrence of the difficulties which have occurred in regard to these two cases, it would be desirable to consider whether British or United States' officers are justified in releasing on their own authority vessels which have been handed over to them after seizure for alleged offences against the Behring Sea Award Regulations, and the enactments passed to enforce those Regulations.

The provisions of the Merchant Shipping Act, recited in the 2nd Schedule to "The Behring Sea Award Act, 1894," make it lawful for "any commissioned officer" . . . . "to seize and detain any ship which has, either wholly or as to any share therein, become subject to forfeiture as aforesaid, and to bring her for adjudication before the High Court of Admiralty in England or Ireland, or any Court having Admiralty jurisdiction in Her Majesty's dominions."

"The Behring Sea Award Order in Council, 1894," provides that officers of the United States duly authorized "may seize and detain any British vessel which has become liable to be forfeited under the provisions of the recited Act, and may bring her for adjudication before any such British Court of Admiralty, as is referred to in section 103 of 'The Merchant Shipping Act, 1854,' . . . . or may deliver her to any such British officer as is mentioned in the said section for the purpose of being dealt with pursuant to the recited Act."

The United States' Act lays down, section 12, "that any vessel or citizen of the United States, or person described in the 1st section of this Act, offending against the prohibitions of this Act or the Regulations thereunder, may be seized and detained by the naval or other duly commissioned officers of Her Majesty the Queen of Great Britain, but when so seized and detained they shall be delivered, as soon as practicable, with any witnesses and proofs on board, to any naval or revenue officer or other authorities of the United States, whose Courts alone shall have jurisdiction to try the offence, and impose the penalities for the same: Provided, however, that British officers shall arrest and detain vessels and persons, as in this section specified, only after, by appropriate legislation, Great Britain shall have authorized officers of the United States duly commissioned and instructed by the President to that end to arrest, detain, and deliver to the authorities of Great Britain vessels and subjects of that Government offending against any Statues or Regulations of Great Britain enacted or made to enforce the Award of the Treaty mentioned in the title of this Act."

In each case proceedings against the seized vessel are contemplated, and the mode of procedure is to a certain extent indicated.

I am to request that you will take these papers into your consideration, and favour Lord Kimberley with your opinion as to—

1. Whether the seizure of the "Favourite" by the officer in command of the United States' ship "Mohican" was warranted by the facts of the case; and, if not, in what respects, and on what grounds, his proceedings were open to objection.

2. Whether, having regard to the circumstances of the case generally, and especially to the fact that the Admiral Commanding-in-chief on the North Pacific Station abandoned all proceedings against, and released, the vessel, without having previously communicated with the United States' authorities, and ascertained their views, Her Majesty's Government would be justified in putting forward a claim for compensation on behalf of the owners of the "Favourite" against the United States' Government; and, if so, on what specific grounds such a claim could most properly and advantageously be based.

3. Whether, in the event of a claim being preferred, the amount, 22,430 dollars, at which the master estimates the loss incurred, may be considered reasonable, and the payment of that sum be demanded from the United States' Government.

4. Whether, in cases where British vessels have been seized by United States' officers for alleged offences against the Behring Sea Regulations, and the enactments passed to enforce those Regulations, and handed over to British officers, the latter are justified in using any discretion as to bringing such vessels before the proper Court for adjudication; and, if so, to what extent that discretion may be used.

Lord Kimberley would be glad at the same time to be favoured with such general observations on the papers submitted as you may desire to offer.

Report.

1. In our opinion the seizure of the "Favourite" by the officer in command of the United States' ship "Mohican" was not warranted by the facts of the case.

We consider that a duly-authorized officer of the United States is warranted in seizing a British vessel, if he believes, and has reasonable grounds for believing, that the British law has been violated. But he is not warranted in seizing if there are no reasonable grounds for that belief, and he is not warranted in applying to British vessels the doctrine of presumptive guilt which is contained in section 10 of the Act of Congress.

In this case we do not perceive any evidence of guilt according to British law. The gun was a signal-gun, and was entered on the manifest, and voluntarily showed to the United States' officer. It was necessary for signalling in a fog, and the propriety of carrying it is evidenced by the agreement between Captain Clark and Commander Hunter Blair. Like any other gun it might carry shot a distance of 50 yards, but there was no ammunition on board, as we understand the case, beyond signalling rockets which could not practically be used for destroying seals. Under these circumstances we consider that even if section 10 of the Act of Congress applied, no presumption would be raised against the "Favourite," because no forbidden implement suitable for taking seals was on board, and if such presumption of guilt could be raised by the presence of this signalling-gun, it would be effectually rebutted by the absence of ammunition.

2. Having regard to the circumstances of the case, Her Majesty's Government would be justified in putting forward a claim for compensation against the United States' Government upon the grounds already indicated.

The circumstance of the release of the "Favourite" by the British Admiral is not conclusive against such a claim in any circumstances, though where the facts are doubtful, or the inference to be drawn from them is really disputable, such a release would throw almost insuperable difficulties in the way of maintaining a claim. In this particular instance we do not perceive that there is doubt of the facts, or room for dispute as to their significance, and though the United States' Government may possibly rely upon the absence of any judicial investigation or sentence, we do not consider that such an argument ought to prevail.

3. We do not think the master can claim an amount based upon the assumption that his vessel would have realized the highest profit of any vessel of the same size.

The damages would depend upon a computation of what profit the "Favourite" would have made had her voyage not been interrupted, taking into consideration the average profits of other like vessels during that period. We have no sufficient materials to enable us to form a judgment upon this subject. We should conjecture 15,000 dollars, but submit to your Lordship's consideration whether it would be advisable to suggest arbitration upon the question of amount.

4. In our opinion the British officers in the case put may, in the exercise of their discretion, release the British ship where the case is clear, but they should be careful not to release except in a clear case, and wherever it is practicable, without delay, they should communicate with the United States' authorities before releasing.

5. In answer to your Lordship's request that we should offer such general observations as we might desire, we beg to observe that it may become inconvenient if United States' officers pursue the practice of applying to British ships section 10 of the Act of Congress. That section is peculiar in this sense, that without affecting directly to enlarge the obligation which the Award imposes upon sealing-vessels, it creates an artificial presumption of guilt, springing from facts which otherwise might not be evidence of guilt at all, and thereby indirectly makes the Award weigh heavier on these vessels.

This Act of Congress is not applicable to British vessels, though its enactment certainly appears to show a desire on the part of the United States to enforce very strictly upon their own citizens the duties contained in the Award.

Mr. Bain's claim on account of injuries received during New Orleans riots.

Gentlemen,
Foreign Office, April 20, 1895.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Earl of Kimberley, the papers noted in the accompanying list, which relate to a claim for compensation preferred against the Government of the United States by Mr. Bain, purser of the British steam-ship "Engineer," for injuries received during the recent riots at New Orleans.

These riots originated in the ill-feeling aroused amongst the white cotton screwers by the action of the local ship agents in infringing, by the employment of negroes, the exclusive rights of loading ships with cotton which had been assumed by the white labouring organization.

They culminated on the 12th March, when 200 white men appeared on the wharves armed with Winchester rifles and revolvers, and proceeded to fire at the coloured men, killing five men, and wounding about twelve other persons, amongst whom was Purser Bain (see Papers A and B).

Mr. Bain states that shortly after 7 A.M. on the 12th March, whilst stepping from his ship on to the wharves in the discharge of his duty, he was shot at and wounded in several parts of the head and in the right arm by a body of armed men, who acted without provocation or warning.

He became unconscious, and was taken to a hospital. He suffered and still suffers much from his wounds, one of which he fears may cause the loss of an eye (Paper C).

He claims compensation in respect of the alleged neglect of the local authorities, notwithstanding ample and sufficient warning, to take proper precautions for the protection of peaceable citizens and foreigners like himself, and for the outbreak which occurred in consequence of this neglect, and which has entailed upon him sufferings and injuries of a serious character, as well as hospital and other expenses in connexion with their treatment.

I am to request that you will take these papers into your consideration, and favour Lord Kimberley with your opinion whether Her Majesty's Government would be justified in presenting a claim to the United States' Government, and, if so, on what grounds it might most suitably be based.

His Lordship will be glad to be favoured at the same time with any observations of a general nature which you may desire to offer on the case.

Report.

In our opinion, a claim for compensation may be supported in cases such as the present, wherever injury has been done to the subject of a foreign State by riot which could not have occurred but for the neglect of their duties by the local authorities. That principle is supported by good authority, and was acted upon by a Resolution of Congress on the 3rd March, 1853, upon the occasion of a former riot at New Orleans.

Upon the whole we infer, from the materials before us, that in this case there was such neglect. Previous acts of violence had occurred from a state of feeling notorious in New Orleans; remonstrances had been addressed to the Mayor without effect, and a building on the Levee was known to contain arms, which the white labourers were about to use, or likely to use. The extent and duration of the riot make it difficult to believe it was not foreseen, or, if foreseen, might not have been suppressed.

We therefore answer your Lordship's question in the affirmative.

Seizures of British sealers "Wanderer" and "Favourite" by United States' cruisers.

Sir,
Foreign Office, July 11, 1895.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, the papers noted in the accompanying list, which relate to the seizures of the British sealing-vessels "Wanderer" and "Favourite" by the United States' cruisers "Concord" and "Mohican" in the months of June and August last year, for alleged infringement of the Behring Sea Award Act of 1894.

These documents comprise references to the late Law Officers of the Crown on the above-mentioned cases, with the opinions received from them, together with an opinion given by the late Lord Chancellor (Lord Herschell) on the case of the "Wanderer" (Papers (A), (B), (C), (D), and (E)).

Upon these opinions an instruction was prepared to Viscount Gough, Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Washington, which is herein inclosed (Paper F), and I am to request that you will be good enough to inform Lord Salisbury whether, having regard to the circumstances of the two cases as set forth in the papers submitted to the late Law Officers of the Crown, you approve the terms of this instruction.

Since the date of the above-mentioned communications, the United States' Chargé d'Affaires in London has communicated a despatch (Paper G), from the Department of State at Washington, dealing further with the seizures of the two sealing-vessels, and I am to inquire whether, in your opinion, the arguments contained in this communication are such as should in any way modify the conclusions arrived at by the Earl of Kimberley, and, if so, to what extent.

If you consider that there are no grounds for modifying these conclusions, I am to say that Lord Salisbury would be glad to learn what answer should be made to the United States' contention that "additional breaches of the law could be assigned and made the subject of condemnation proceedings at any time before the trial."

Lord Salisbury would be glad at the same time to be favoured with such general observations on the papers submitted as you may desire to offer.

Report.

In my opinion, the arguments contained in Attorney-General Olney's letter of the 18th June, 1895, are not sufficient to necessitate any modification of the conclusions arrived at by the Earl of Kimberley.

Assuming a vessel to be seized upon the ground that there is reason to believe that a breach of the Act of 1894 has been committed, it would, in my opinion, be open to the seizing officers to support their claim to condemnation by evidence of an offence against the Act which had come to their knowledge subsequently to the seizure. It is possible that some mistake may have arisen owing to the fact that the Acts of 1891 and 1893 contained a provision as to onus of proof in the event of shooting implements being found on board ships. (See section 1 (5) of Act of 1891, and section 1 (6) of Act of 1893.) This provision was not re-enacted in the Act of 1894.

The possession of arms might in some circumstances be evidence of an offence under sub-section 2 of section 1 of the Act of 1894 if unaccounted for, or if coupled with other circumstances of a suspicious character.

It is, in my opinion, very undesirable that the Commander of a British vessel should take upon himself the responsibility of releasing vessels which have been seized and sent into his custody upon a charge of an offence against the Acts. He most certainly should not do so without distinct notice to the United States' authorities.

It is clearly intended that where a ship has been seized the merits should be investigated by the proper legal Tribunal.

I annex a suggested reply to Mr. Attorney-General Olney's letter.

Annex.

Reply to Letter of Mr. Attorney-General Olney.

IF the vessels in question, the "Wanderer" and the "Favourite," had been arrested for any alleged breach of "The Behring Sea Award Act, 1894," it is conceded that it would be contrary to the intent and spirit of the legislation that the British Naval authorities should release the vessels before trial before a Court of competent jurisdiction; but it must be observed that in the case of the "Wanderer" the ground of seizure, as given by the Commander of the "Concord," was the possession of an unsealed gun and ammunition, in contravention of "The Behring Sea Award Act, 1894," and section 10 of the President's Proclamation; and in the case of the "Favourite," as given by the Commander of the "Mohican," was the possession of an unsealed gun, in contravention of Article 6 of the Paris Award, and section 10 of the Act of Congress.

No allegation was made in either case that the vessels had committed, or attempted to commit, any actual breach of "The Behring Sea Award Act, 1894."

Inasmuch, therefore, as it was clear upon the face of the proceedings that the arrest was not justifiable, it does not appear that the British Naval authorities acted contrary to the intent or spirit of the legislation in question.

It is not disputed that, in the case of a vessel arrested upon an alleged breach of the Acts in question, additional breaches might be assigned, assuming the seizing officer to be in a position to adduce evidence of such additional breaches, but in this case, as has already been pointed out, there was up to the time of the release of the vessels no allegation of any such charge.

While it is conceded that it was never intended that the Naval authorities should take upon themselves to decide questions which undoubtedly could only be decided by a British Court of Admiralty, it was, on the other hand, equally never intended that vessels should be interfered with, arrested, and handed over to the Naval authorities upon any charges other than those which were the subject of the Behring Sea Award and consequent legislation.

It is quite clear from the proceedings that the seizing officer purported to act under section 10 of the Act of Congress, Public, No. 48, of the 6th April, 1894, which is not binding upon British subjects.

Sir,

WITH reference to my letter of the 11th ultimo relating to the seizures of the sealing-vessels "Wanderer" and "Favourite" in Behring Sea, I have the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, the inclosed papers respecting the application of the United States' Government for the consent of Her Majesty's Government to the appointment of Counsel to represent the United States at the trials of the "Shelby" and of other vessels seized during the present season.

Certain points are raised in the correspondence which are required to be considered in connection with the draft despatch to Lord Gough which is now before you, and Lord Salisbury would also be glad to have your opinion on the proposal for the representation of the United States' Government by Counsel at the trials before sending the instructions to Lord Gough which are suggested in the letter from the Colonial Office of the 18th ultimo.

In our opinion, it would not be proper to allow Counsel for the United States to take any part in the proceedings, to examine witnesses, or to address the Court.

The offence for which the proceedings are taken is the breach by British subjects, or a British ship, of a British Statute, and the proceedings can only be taken in a British Court. The vessel, if condemned, would be forfeited to the Crown, and any fine would belong to the Crown.

Under such circumstances, to allow a foreign nation to appear as a party, or conduct or take part in the proceedings, would not only be without precedent, so far as we know, but would, on principle, be both dangerous and undesirable.

The provisions of the General Act of the Brussels Conference do not, in our judgment, afford any precedent for permitting the United States to take part in the proceedings against British vessels or subjects for breach of British laws.

Taking over by British cruisers of British vessels seized by American cruisers.

WITH reference to my letter of the 3rd ultimo, inclosing papers in regard to the seizure of the sealing-schooner "Shelby" by the United States' revenue-cutter "Corwin," I have the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, a further letter from the Colonial Office,* in which it is suggested that the Commanders of British cruisers should be instructed to decline to take over any British vessel seized by an American cruiser unless the declaration of seizure alleges a specific contravention of the British Act of Parliament.

Lord Salisbury would be glad to be favoured with your opinion as to whether such instructions can properly be given to the officers commanding Her Majesty's ships.

Report.

We are of opinion that instructions can properly be given to the officers commanding Her Majesty's ships to decline to take over any British vessel seized by an American cruiser unless the declaration of seizure alleges a specific offence which is a contravention of the British Act of Parliament. It is only in cases of such contravention that the American cruiser can seize a British ship, and the officers commanding Her Majesty's ships ought not to take over a vessel so seized unless such contravention is alleged.

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, September 20, 1895.

Gentlemen,

Monroe doctrine. Claim of United States under, to prescribe arbitration as to British Guiana and Venezuela boundary.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, a despatch from the Government of the United States, which has been left with his Lordship by Mr. Bayard.

Lord Salisbury does not desire to trouble you at present with the first part of the despatch. Until nearly the middle of page 7 in the printed copy which I inclose, it is exclusively concerned with a frontier dispute which has been going on for many years between the Republic of Venezuela and the Colony of British Guiana. This portion of the despatch, if it is necessary to answer it, can be answered separately. But after that point it proceeds to advance views with respect to questions of international law, upon which it is desirable that the opinion of the Law Officers of the Crown should be expressed.

The argument of this part of the despatch may be summed up as follows:—

The United States have a right to protect every other independent State in North or South America from the control of any European State. Therefore, they have a right to protect every American State from any annexation of any part of its territory. The British Government claim a portion of territory adjacent to its frontier in Guiana, which Venezuela declares to belong to her. The United States cannot tell which of the two disputants is in the right. Therefore, by virtue of their prerogative of protecting Venezuelan territory from annexation, the United States insist that Great Britain shall submit the disputed issue to arbitration.

This argument rests largely on the doctrine laid down by President Monroe, which Lord Salisbury believes is now for the first time advanced in a formal communication addressed to another Power; and his demur to the control of American by European States and to European colonization in America receives a considerable development.

I am to call your attention to the treatment of this doctrine in the despatch, and to ask that his Lordship may be favoured with your opinion as to whether it is not desirable that it should be formally noticed, and that its incompatibility with international law, if such incompatibility exists, should be pointed out in reply.

Beyond this more theoretic issue there lies a further and more practical question. Whether the Monroe doctrine is true or false, it is undoubtedly within the competence of the United States to declare themselves the allies of Venezuela, and to go to war, if they please, for the boundary claimed by that Republic. But the summons by the United States to go to arbitration, in a cause which they are not themselves prepared to adopt as their own, or even to advocate, appears to Lord Salisbury to be novel, and likely to lead to anomalous results. Whenever any American State has a difference with any European State, the United States are to have a right of insisting on arbitration, without giving even such a pledge of the seriousness of the American claim as is involved in an undertaking to give it material support. I am to request you to advise whether this contention of the United States is justified by international precedent, and also to furnish his Lordship with some general observations upon this part of the case.

Lord Salisbury further desires me to call your attention to the following passages in the despatch:—

(Page 10.)—"That distance and 3,000 miles of intervening ocean make any permanent political union between an European and an American State unnatural and inexpedient will hardly be denied. But physical and geographical considerations are the least of the objections to such a union. Europe, as Washington observed, has a set of primary interests which are peculiar to herself. America is not interested in them, and ought not to be vexed or complicated with them. Each great European Power, for instance, to-day maintains enormous armies and fleets in self-defence, and for protection against any other European Power or Powers. What have the States of America to do with that condition of things, or why should they be impoverished by wars or preparations for wars with whose causes or results they can have no direct concern? If all Europe were to suddenly fly to arms over the fate of Turkey, would it not be preposterous that any American State should find itself inextricably involved in the miseries and burdens of the contest? If it were it would prove to be a partnership in the cost and losses of the struggle, but not in any ensuing benefits."

(Page 11.)—"Thus far in our history we have been spared the burdens and evils of immense standing armies, and all the other accessories of huge warlike establishments, and the exemption has largely contributed to our national greatness and wealth, as well as to the happiness of every citizen. But, with the Powers of Europe permanently encamped on American soil, the ideal conditions we have thus far enjoyed cannot be expected to continue. We too must be armed to the teeth, we too must convert the flower of our male population into soldiers and sailors, and, by withdrawing them from the various pursuits of peaceful industry, we too must practically annihilate a large share of the productive energy of the nation. How a greater calamity than this could overtake us it is difficult to see."

These passages profess only to support the doctrine that European States are not to be allowed to annex any territory on American soil which they do not now possess. But they are drawn, apparently on purpose, so as to cover equally the case of territory now in the possession of European States. His Lordship would be glad of your opinion as to whether such arguments, if passed without notice, might not plausibly be quoted in some future controversy as accepted doctrines.

In order to assist you in the consideration of these questions, I have the honour to inclose a collection of papers bearing upon the Monroe doctrine.

I am, &c.

Report.

It is desirable that the treatment of the Monroe doctrine in the despatch in question should be formally noticed. In our opinion, the doctrine propounded in this despatch is absolutely incompatible with international law.

By international law, the United States have no right to interfere in any controversy between any other State in America and a European Power unless the action of either of the parties to the dispute seriously menaces the interests of the United States.

The so-called Monroe doctrine was, and can only be regarded as, a declaration of policy: it has not always been stated in the same terms, and can only be justified on the principle that the acquisition by European Powers of political control in America may be prejudicial to the United States, as tending to involve them in international complications.

In the despatch now in question, an attempt has been made to formulate the Monroe doctrine in such a way as to extend its operation far beyond those cases, which even in America have been considered as falling within it.

It is not pretended that the settlement of the dispute as to the boundaries between British Guiana and Venezuela can affect the interests of the United States. But the right is asserted to dictate a particular mode of settlement of that dispute because the territory in question is in South America.

This appears to us to be an attempt to declare a policy, and possibly extract recognition of a principle in such a manner as to include a number of cases which in no way fall within the principle on which that policy professes to rest. In this view, and having regard to the passages marked IIX, and the three concluding paragraphs of Mr. Olney's letter, it is extremely important that, in the reply, reference should be made to the declarations and actions of the United States since 1823, inconsistent with the view now attempted to be maintained. See Memorandum 4215 (Paper B), and 4823 (Paper D), also pp. 10 and 11 of J. B. Moore's pamphlet (Paper F).

As regards the second question, it appears to us that the claim of the United States to prescribe that the dispute should be settled by arbitration is wholly unjustified by international precedent.

International law recognizes the right of one State to interfere in the concerns of its neighbours, if such intervention is necessary for the purpose of self-preservation, or if it is demanded in the interests of humanity. The claim of the United States that Great Britain and Venezuela should settle the dispute by arbitration rests solely on the fact that Venezuela is in South America. It does not appear to us that the intervention of the United States on this occasion can be justified by the most elastic interpretation which has been given to the right of intervention.

With regard to the passages quoted from pp. 10 and 11 of the despatch in question, it does not appear to us, taking the despatch as a whole, that these passages were intended to lay down the proposition that the Monroe doctrine involves the withdrawal of any European Power from its present possessions in America. These passages, however, contain expressions which, taken by themselves, might appear to bear this construction, and we certainly think it desirable that any such use of them in the future should be precluded by noticing them in replying to the despatch.

Gentlemen,

ON the receipt of your Report of the 12th instant respecting the application of the United States' Government for permission to be represented by Counsel at the trials of British sealing-vessels seized in Behring Sea, the Marquess of Salisbury proposed to the Secretary of the Colonies that Her Majesty's Ambassador at Washington should be instructed to inform the United States' Government in accordance with the opinion expressed in your Report, that Counsel for the United States could not be allowed to take any part in the proceedings, to examine witnesses or to address the Court.

Representation by Counsel of U. S. at trials of Brit. sealers seized in Behring Sea.

I have now the honour, by his Lordship's directions, to transmit to you, with other correspondence, the reply received from the Colonial Office (Paper E), in which Mr. Secretary Chamberlain points out that if such an intimation be made to the United States' Government, Her Majesty's Government may find it difficult to press on them claims for compensation for unwarrantable seizures made by United States' naval officers, and that compensation may ultimately have to be paid from Imperial funds.

Lord Salisbury also desires me to call your attention to a telegram from Sir J. Pauncefote (Paper D) explaining the wishes of the United States' Government with regard to the facilities which they wish their Counsel to have at the trials.

I am to return to you, for convenience of reference, your Report of the 12th instant, and the papers previously submitted to you (Packet marked F), and I am to inquire whether your opinion is in any way changed by the consideration of the further correspondence which is now inclosed.

Report.

In our opinion there is no objection to the proposal contained in Sir Julian Pauncefote's telegram of the 23rd September, 1895, as to the representation of the United States' Government in the cases referred to.

At any public trial any person who considers that he may be affected by the proceedings, may watch the case by Counsel; the United States' Government are entitled so to watch these cases, and that their Counsel should be permitted to examine the pleadings and make suggestions to the Government Counsel is, in our opinion, reasonable and quite unobjectionable.

This proposal is very different from the former suggestion that the United States' Government should be recognized as a party to the litigation, with a locus standi before the Court. This they are not entitled to.

The situation would be altered if the United States' Government were to enter into an agreement to be bound by the result of the trial, and to pay damages to be assessed by the Tribunal if the seizure should be held to be wrongful. They would then have an interest in the result of the case, which would make it reasonable that they should be allowed in some form to take part in the proceedings. If such an agreement as to the payment of damages can be arranged, and the United States'

1895

Government will not consent to it merely on the terms of being allowed to watch the case, and make suggestions, it might, perhaps, be carried out by allowing them to employ solicitors and Counsel to conduct the prosecution of the suit in the name of the Crown. This would insure that their case would be adequately presented to the Crown.

Gentlemen,

Alienation of property of Venezuela-Panamá Gold Mine Company by Venezuelan Government.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Earl of Kimberley, the inclosed letter from the liquidators of the Venezuela-Panamá Gold Mine Company (Limited), (Paper A), in which they apply for the assistance of Her Majesty's Government in obtaining redress for the alienation of their property by the Venezuelan Government.

The Company was formed in 1882 to acquire and work a gold mine in the Yuruari district of Guiana, the necessary formalities having been carried out in accordance with Venezuelan law.

From the outset the operations proved unproductive owing to a severe drought and an obstruction in the mine, the result being that the Company went through voluntary liquidation. The royalties due under the Venezuelan Mining Code were regularly paid for a time, but at the beginning of 1887—on the ground that these royalties were in arrear—proceedings were instituted against the Company, and judgment was given against them in the Court of First Instance. Appeal was made to the Superior Court, but the ruling at the former trial was upheld, and the titles of the Company's property were declared to be forfeited. General Guzman Blanco, then President of the Venezuelan Republic, informed the liquidator of the Company in October 1887 that he had bought the mine, and in the following month a Decree was issued conferring the rights of the mine on two of General Guzman Blanco's private clerks.

The foregoing facts are more fully set forth in a Memorandum prepared in this Department (Paper B).

Representations were made to Her Majesty's Government on behalf of the Company, and the case was twice referred to the Law Officers of the Crown, who, on each occasion, were of opinion that there was no ground for diplomatic intervention. Copies of their Reports are annexed (Papers C and D), together with the papers then submitted for consideration.

The joint liquidators now state that they have made applications to the successive Presidents and Governors of Venezuela for the restoration of the Company's property; that these applications have been met with expressions of a desire to do justice, always coupled, however, with demands with which it was impossible to comply; and, finally, that a Decree had been published in the Government official Gazettes of Carácas on the 5th and 6th December last, giving absolutely the mine to Señor Juan Mona Maninat, who, it appears, has entered into an agreement with the El Callao Gold Mine Company for working the mine.

The liquidators, therefore, appeal once more for assistance, and express a hope that Her Majesty's Government will be able, if not immediately, then at some future and more suitable time, to procure redress for the grievous wrong which, as they allege, has been inflicted on the proprietors, mortgagees, and others in the loss of their property.

I am to request that you will take these papers into your consideration, and that you will favour Lord Kimberley with your opinion as to—

1. Whether, in view of the further and fresh matter now put forward, Her Majesty's Government would be justified in making any formal diplomatic representation on behalf of the Company.

2. If so, whether it would be a proper and desirable course that a protest against the confiscation of their property should be drawn up, on their own responsibility, by the liquidators of the Company, and that this protest should be communicated to the Venezuelan Government through the German Chargé d'Affaires at Carácas, who is at present in charge of British interests, with an intimation that Her Majesty's Government reserve the claims of the Company for consideration on a future occasion.

I am to state, at the same time, that Lord Kimberley will also be glad to be favoured with any observations of a more general nature which you may desire to offer upon the papers now submitted.

I am, &c.

Report.

1. In our opinion, the answer to this question depends wholly upon one point—whether there has been fair dealing on the part of the Tribunals and the Administration who set them in motion.

Having regard to the opinion expressed by Mr. St. John in his letter of the 6th November, 1887, and the subsequent attempts of the President to make a profit on the reconveyance of the mine to its original owners, we think corruption very probable.

We consider that now all hope of restoration has disappeared, Her Majesty's Government would be entitled, at their convenience, to ask for explanation and inquiry into the circumstances of the litigation and the action of the late President, and the merits of the Judgments delivered, and, in the absence of satisfactory explanation of what is open to most legitimate suspicions, to claim compensation.

2. We think the course suggested is a proper and desirable course.

We desire to add that, though in ordinary circumstances it is difficult to impugn the decisions of foreign Tribunals, yet where the forfeiture of property has been based upon a purely technical point, and has enured to the personal advantage of the head of the Government, who subsequently has sought to traffic upon the results of the judicial Decree, and especially where the case is not an isolated case, there is a right to demand explanation, and, in the absence of satisfactory explanation, to prefer a claim. Such matters afford, until explained, a primâ facie case of unfair dealing.

REPORTS BY THE LAW OFFICERS OF THE CROWN, &c.: 1896.

AFRICA.

No. 1 A. [Colonial Office.]

[April 27, 1896.]

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Colonial Office.

Sir, Royal Courts of Justice, April 27, 1896.

Construction of Article IV of London Convention with South African Republic of 1884.

WE were honoured with your commands signified in Mr. Wingfield's letter of the 15th instant, stating that he was directed by you to request us to favour you with our opinion upon the construction of Article IV of the London Convention with the South African Republic of the 27th February, 1884.

That in November 1893 an Extradition Convention between Portugal and the South African Republic was signed at Lisbon by Plenipotentiaries of the two States, and that, that having come to the knowledge of Her Majesty's Government, the attention of the South African Government was called to the omission to communicate a copy of the Convention to Her Majesty's Government in accordance with Article IV of the "London Convention."

That the State Secretary of the South African Republic replied that the Convention with Portugal, though signed, had not been authorized either by the Portuguese Cortes or by the Volksraad, and that the Government of the South African Republic intended to submit it to Her Majesty's Government after authorization.

That the Government of the South African Republic were then informed by your direction that, to avoid possible conflict with the Volksraad, it would be better that in future all Treaties with foreign Powers should be communicated to Her Majesty's Government prior to their formal approval by that body.

That the State Secretary, in reply, stated that Extradition Treaties need not be submitted to the Volksraad, as the law of the South African Republic empowered the State President, with the advice and consent of the Executive Council, to conclude such Treaties; that his Government were waiting for the authorization of the Portuguese Cortes of the Extradition Convention, and that immediately on learning that such authorization had been obtained and the Treaty completed, they would give notice thereof to Her Majesty's Government, in accordance with the terms of Article IV of the London Convention.

That the question upon which you desired our opinion was whether, by the terms of Article IV, the Government of the South African Republic could be required to deliver to Her Majesty's Government a copy of a Treaty or Engagement between the South African Republic and a foreign Power immediately after such Treaty or Engagement had been signed, although it might require, before ratification, the authorization of the Legislature of both or one of the Contracting Parties; or whether, as contended by the State Secretary of the South African Republic, the obligation did not arise until after the authorization of the Legislature or Legislatures.

That it would, in your opinion, be desirable, in view of the negotiations which would shortly take place between Her Majesty's Government and the Government of the South African Republic, that Her Majesty's Government should be in a position to maintain that Her Majesty was entitled to have the opportunity of expressing her approval or otherwise of a Treaty or Engagement between the South African Republic and a foreign Power at the earliest possible stage, and that you wished to know whether, in our opinion, the language of Article IV would not at least sustain a claim to have that opportunity before the Treaty was submitted for the authorization of the Legislatures of the Contracting States, with a view to its subsequent ratification.

That you had already, as previously stated, informed the Government of the South African Republic that the communication of a copy of any Treaty to Her Majesty's Government, for the purpose of ascertaining whether it would be approved by Her Majesty before it was laid before the Volksraad, would have the advantage of avoiding possible conflict with that body.

That if, however, the Government of the Republic did not accept that view, and preferred to proceed at once to invite the Volksraad to authorize the Treaty, without waiting for the signification of Her Majesty's approval, such a course, though it might be objected to by Her Majesty's Government, could not be prevented. That the Government of the South African Republic might base such action upon the terms of Article XXVII of the Grondwet, according to which a Resolution of the Volksraad was required prior to the proposal, acceptance, or conclusion of any Treaty. That, at the same time, it must be remembered that in the first instance quoted hereafter (the Treaty of the 17th May, 1884, between Portugal and the South African Republic) the Government of the Republic actually asked for the approval of the Queen before submitting the Treaty to the Volksraad. But that the case of the foreign State which was a party to any such Treaty presented a further point requiring special consideration. That Her Majesty's approval had not hitherto been withheld from any Treaty, but that, were the Queen's right of disapproval to be exercised, Mr. Wingfield was to point out that it might be regarded as contrary to international comity that Her Majesty's Government should step in at the last moment, after the Treaty had been discussed and authorized by the foreign Legislature.

That a foreign Government might fairly contend that it should not be invited to seek from its Legislature authorization to ratify a Treaty or Engagement without being informed whether, if it should succeed in obtaining such authorization, the British Government would assent to its coming into force. That in case of a subsequent veto the foreign Government might not unreasonably complain that its Legislature should have been permitted to waste time in an idle discussion through the reticence of Her Majesty's Government, which might be treated as discourteous.

That on that ground, more especially, you considered it desirable to maintain that the word "completion" in Article IV referred to the signature of a Treaty by Plenipotentiaries.

That the practice hitherto followed had not been uniform, and was therefore not conclusive as to the interpretation of the Article:—

(i.) That in the case of the Supplementary Treaty of the 17th May, 1884, between Portugal and the South African Republic, the Government of the South African Republic requested the approval of Her Majesty previous to the authorization of the Treaty by the Volksraad, as would be seen by reference to p. 73 of Parliamentary Blue Book, C.—4213.

(ii.) That the Treaty between the South African Republic and Germany of the 22nd January, 1885, was submitted to and authorized by the German Reichstag before it was submitted for the approval of Her Majesty. That the records of the Colonial Office did not show at what date it was submitted to the Volksraad. That a Protocol appended to that Treaty declared that both Contracting Parties understood that the Treaty should not be ratified till it should have met with the expressed or tacit approval of Her Majesty, in accordance with Article IV of the London Convention.

(iii.) That a Commercial Treaty between the South African Republic and France, signed on the 10th July, 1885, was communicated to Her Majesty's Government after it had been authorized by the Volksraad, but before it had been authorized by the French Legislature.

(iv.) That in the case of the Commercial Treaty between the South African Republic and Switzerland of the 6th November, 1885, paragraph 2 of the Protocol attached to the Treaty was in the following terms:—

"En raison de l'Article IV de la Convention conclue le 27 Février 1884, entre la Grande-Bretagne et la République Sud-Africaine le présent Traité ne sera soumis à la ratification de l'Assemblée Fédérale Suisse que lorsque le Gouvernement de la République Sud-Africaine aura fait savoir au Conseil Fédéral Suisse que la conclusion du Traité a obtenu, en conformité du susdit Article IV, l'approbation expresse ou tacite du Gouvernement Britannique."

That that Treaty was submitted to and authorized by the Volksraad before being communicated to Her Majesty's Government, and that the Swiss Federal Assembly authorized it after the Swiss Government had been informed by the British Minister that Her Majesty's Government had no objection to it.

(v.) That the Treaty between the South African Republic and Italy of the 6th October, 1886, was authorized by the Volksraad before being submitted for the approval of Her Majesty. That at the time of the signature of that Treaty the Plenipotentiaries signed a Protocol, declaring that it was understood that the Treaty should be ratified only after the expressed or tacit approval of the British Government.

(vi.) That the Treaty between the South African Republic and Belgium, signed on the 21st April, 1888, was communicated to Her Majesty's Government before it was authorized by the Legislature of Belgium. That the records of the Colonial Office did not show whether it had been authorized by the Volksraad before such communication.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your commands, have the honour to

Report—

That, by Article IV of the Convention of 1884, the Government of the South African Republic are bound to submit to Her Majesty's Government any Treaty "immediately upon its completion." This means that the Treaty must be submitted as soon as its terms have been settled between the Plenipotentiaries, or other Agents by whom it was negotiated.

It is quite impossible that the word "completion" in this connection can denote the final conclusion of the Treaty by the ratification of the respective Governments, inasmuch as the Government of the South African Republic has bound itself by Article IV to conclude no Treaty or Engagement with other Powers until the same has been approved by Her Majesty.

After "completion" of the Treaty it must at once be submitted to Her Majesty. Her approval is to be inferred if six months elapse from such submission without notification of dissent on the grounds mentioned in the second sentence of Article IV. Upon such approval, express or implied, and not before, the South African Republic Government may "conclude" the Treaty.

We think that the Government of the South African Republic is not bound to wait for Her Majesty's approval before submitting the terms of the Treaty to the Volksraad. Whether they do so or not is a matter for their own consideration. There would certainly be some discourtesy on the part of the Government of the South African Republic if they invited the Legislature of another Power to consider the terms of a Treaty before they knew that Her Majesty, by approving the same, had given them authority to conclude it.

We are, therefore, of opinion that the Government of the South African Republic are bound to deliver to Her Majesty's Government a copy of any Treaty or Engagement immediately after such Treaty or Engagement has been signed, although it requires before ratification the authorization of the Legislature of both or one of the Contracting Parties. On the other hand, we do not think that Her Majesty's approval must be obtained before the Treaty is submitted for the authorization of the Legislatures of the Contracting States. The Treaty cannot be concluded (by ratification) till after such approval by Her Majesty.

With reference to the suggestion that it might be supposed to involve some breach of international comity if Her Majesty's Government should withhold approval after the Treaty had been discussed by the foreign Legislature, it might be worthy of consideration whether Her Majesty's Government should not, as soon as it has received a copy of any Treaty, inform the Government of the foreign State that the approval of Her Majesty's Government is necessary, that the matter is under consideration, and that until Her Majesty's approval has been given the Government of the South African Republic has no power to conclude the Treaty.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Mr. Chamberlain.

Royal Courts of Justice, July 27, 1896.

Sir,

Extradition Treaty between Netherlands and South African Republic.

WE were honoured with your commands signified in Mr. Wingfield's letter of the 24th instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 27th April, 1896, on the construction of Article IV of the London Convention with the South African Republic of the 27th February, 1884, he was directed by you to inform us that an Extradition Treaty between the Netherlands and the South African Republic was concluded on the 9th November, 1895, that ratifications of it were exchanged at the Hague on the 19th June, and that it had been published in the official Gazette at the Hague.

That Mr. Wingfield was to inclose a copy of a translation of the Decree directing its publication and copies of despatches from Her Majesty's Minister at the Hague upon the subject.*

That this Treaty had not been communicated to Her Majesty's Government by the Government of the South African Republic as required by Article IV of the Convention, nor had any communication on the subject been addressed by the Government of the Netherlands to Her Majesty's Government.

That in the preamble of the Treaty it would be observed that it was referred to as a "fresh" Treaty, but that Her Majesty's Government were not aware of any previous Extradition Treaty or Convention between the Netherlands and the South African Republic.

That in concluding and ratifying this Treaty, the Governments of the Netherlands and of the South African Republic appeared to have disregarded the stipulation of Article IV of the Convention, and that both the Marquess of Salisbury and yourself considered that representations should be made to and explanations requested from each of these Governments on the subject; and Mr. Wingfield was to request that we favour you with our opinion as to the form in which such representations should be made in each case.

In obedience to your commands we have taken the matter into our consideration, and have the honour to

Report—

That there appears to have been a clear infraction by the South African Republic of the terms of Article IV of the Convention of 1884.

We think that a represention of the facts so far as known should be made to the Government of the South African Republic; that their attention should be called to the terms of Article IV; that they should be informed that Her Majesty's Government must insist on the observance of this Article, and cannot recognize the validity of any Treaty concluded without Her Majesty's sanction; and that they should be asked for an explanation of their apparent disregard of the terms of the Article in this instance.

We think that the Government of the Netherlands should be informed of the terms of Article IV; that they should be apprised that the Government of the South African Republic have no power to conclude a Treaty except with the approval of Her Majesty, and that Her Majesty's Government cannot recognize the validity of the Treaty of Extradition which has been concluded without her sanction.

Although the particular Treaty now in question may not be in itself of great importance, the principle involved is obviously of the utmost gravity, and the breach of the Convention in this case, if condoned, would no doubt be followed by other breaches in matters of vital importance.

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, August 27, 1896.

Gentlemen,

Trial of Captain Lothaire for causing death of C. H. Stokes.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit to you the papers mentioned in the accompanying list, which relate the circumstances under which Captain Lothaire, an officer in the service of the Congo Free State, has been put on his trial for causing the death of a British subject named Charles Henry Stokes within the jurisdiction of the Congo Free State.

The first intimation of the death of Mr. Stokes reached Her Majesty's Government in August 1895, and they immediately called upon the Government of the Free State for an explanation of the circumstances. The reply is contained in the Memorandum dated the 11th August (Paper (A), p. 3). It is there stated that Stokes had been condemned to death by the Council of War of the Arab Zone, having its seat at the post of Lindi.

On the 31st August a further note was sent by the Congo Government (Paper (A), p. 8) in explanation and justification of the execution. The note stated that the Council of War had been legally constituted in accordance with the regulations for such matters, and that Captain Lothaire presided over it as Judge. Amongst other papers forwarded with the note was one (Paper (A), p. 9) purporting to be the Judgment pronounced at the close of the ordinary proceedings, which bore the signature of Captain Lothaire. After reciting the charges brought against Stokes of selling arms and ammunition to bands of persons in revolt against the Government of the Congo State, it goes on to say that the Council of War, looking at Article 10 of the Decree of the 10th March, 1892, and Article 28 of the Military Penal Code, which were read at the hearing, condemned Stokes to death by hanging on the next day, and pronounced the confiscation of his goods.

The depositions said to have been taken before the Tribunal are given at p. 10 of Paper (A), and at p. 14 of the same paper is a declaration written by Stokes on the 14th January, and addressed to Captain Lothaire, in which he protests that he had not been influenced in any of his transactions with the natives by a desire to oppose the Government.

Copies of the Articles alluded to in the Judgment are printed at p. 19 of Paper (A).

On the 9th September a despatch was addressed to Her Majesty's Minister in Brussels (Paper (A), p. 170), in which are given the reasons for which Her Majesty's Government, after a careful study of the papers connected with the trial, were unable to come to any other conclusion than that there was no justification for the execution of Stokes without allowing an appeal to the Court at Boma, to which he had the right under Article 37 of the Decree of the Congo Government of the 22nd December, 1888 (Paper (A), p. 19). Her Majesty's Minister was instructed to call attention to the arbitrary character of the proceedings, and to ask for a full statement of the views of the Congo Government in respect of the points enumerated.

The reply of that Government is contained in the note addressed to Sir F. Plunkett on the 13th September (Paper (A), p. 179), in which the irregularity of the proceedings is admitted, regret is expressed, and it is stated that Captain Lothaire would be recalled, and that, if the explanations which he would be called upon to give were unsatisfactory, the Congo Government would send him for trial before the competent Tribunal.

On the 4th October (Paper (A), p. 203), Her Majesty's Minister at Brussels, acting under Lord Salisbury's instructions, informed the Congo State Government that Her Majesty's Government would claim full compensation for the confiscation of Stokes' property, which was admitted to have been illegal, and that the question of the extent and nature of the reparation to be claimed on account of his execution would be deferred until further explanations had been received from Captain Lothaire.

On the 3rd November (Paper (A), p. 236), the Congo State Government addressed a note to Her Majesty's Minister, in which they engaged, with a view to giving full satisfaction to Her Majesty's Government, to bring Captain Lothaire before a Court competent to throw complete light on the whole question, to adjudicate on the accusations which had been made against him, and, in the event of his guilt being established, to inflict punishment proportionate to the gravity of his offence. They further offered to pay at once to Her Majesty's Government, as compensation for the irregularities in the procedure followed in the case, the sum of 150,000 fr., and to order the restitution of Stokes' property.

These offers were accepted (Paper (A), p. 238), and the money was duly paid to Her Majesty's Government.

Considerable difficulty was experienced by the Congo Government in deciding upon the Court which should try Captain Lothaire, and the method of procedure. The views of different authorities on the subject will be found at pp. 241, 242, 243, 244, 251, 253, 254, 257, 258, 259, 260, 262, 263, 264, 267, 270, 272, 273, 274, 285, of Paper (A).

Finally, it was settled, with the concurrence of Her Majesty's Government (Paper (A), p. 286), that the trial should take place in the Congo State before the Court of Appeal at Boma, on the understanding that the Public Ministry of that State would appeal to the Conseil Supérieur at Brussels if Her Majesty's Government were not satisfied with the decisions of the Boma Tribunal.

This mode of procedure was based on Article 57 of the Decree of the 27th April, 1889, and Article 1 of the Decree of the 8th October, 1890. Copies of these Decrees are printed at p. 102 of Paper (B), and p. 159 of Paper (C), and are referred to at p. 210 of Paper (A), where explanations are given as to the constitution of the Conseil Supérieur at Brussels.

After some further discussion, the Governments drew up and exchanged copies of instructions to their respective Representatives. Those addressed to the Governor-General of the Congo State are given at p. 321 of Paper (A) and the instructions to Her Majesty's Vice-Consul at p. 325 of the same paper. In the latter document will be found references to various papers printed in Paper (A), which were collected with a view to prove that Stokes was not engaged in wilfully supplying munitions of war to persons in revolt against the Congo State, but that any sales he effected were made in the ordinary course of his business as a trader in ivory.

There is also a reference to evidence printed at p. 217, and again in the form of a Memorandum at p. 219, which is of considerable importance. If the statement of Dr. Michaux given therein is correct, Captain Lothaire, when he gave orders for Stokes' execution, had no copy of the Congo State Code of Laws in his possession, and was not aware of there being any right of appeal under it. It is clear that in this case grave suspicion would arise as to the authenticity of the accuracy of the judgment, which states that certain Articles of that Code were read at the hearing, and which claims to have been delivered in accordance with certain specified Articles of the Code.

The fact is the more remarkable because in the report of the trial sent home by Vice-Consul Arthur (Paper (D)) the defence, and the ground on which Captain Lothaire was ultimately acquitted, was that Stokes was not dealt with as a civilian with powers to appeal, but as a military man who enjoyed no such right.

The Vice-Consul's report on this point is confirmed by the shorthand notes taken at the trial on behalf of the Congo Government, which will be found in Paper (E). It will be seen that Captain Lothaire's defence at Boma is based on the assertion that he knew the law under which a non-native civilian is entitled to appeal from a local Court to the Superior Court at Boma, but that the evidence in his possession justified him in looking upon Stokes as a "militaire," who was not entitled by law to appeal, and whom he was therefore justified in summarily executing.

The finding of the Court at Boma, which was a verdict of acquittal, is printed in Paper (F). On learning its nature, Her Majesty's Government instructed the Vice-Consul to request the Public Minister to exercise the right of appeal. They did so in order to keep alive the right of obtaining a re-hearing of the case pending a study of the proceedings at the trial, without which it was impossible to form an opinion as to whether the circumstances were such as to require an appeal. However, on the notice of appeal being received in Brussels, and before the proceedings could be examined by Her Majesty's Government, the date of the 3rd August was fixed for the appeal to be heard.

Her Majesty's Government then notified to the Government of the Congo State that they dissociated themselves from any responsibility for a participation in the appeal proceedings; that, in view of the early date fixed, they could make no suggestions nor express any opinion as to whether the appeal ought to be proceeded with or as to the points which it might be desirable to clear up; that the responsibility must rest entirely with the Congo Government; that it would presumably be open to the Court to adjourn the case to a later date on an application by the prosecution, but that whether such application should be made was for the decision of the Congo Government.

The proceedings began on the 6th instant.

The constitution of the Court, and the full stenographic report of the trial, is given in Paper (G), and a resumé of the proceedings by Lord Vaux, Second Secretary in Her Majesty's Legation at Brussels, who was present throughout, will be found in Paper (H). The verdict was again one of acquittal.

I have the honour to request that you will take the papers forwarded herewith into your consideration, and will favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion as to whether there is anything in the proceedings at either trial which would justify Her Majesty's Government in addressing further representations to the Congo Government on the subject, and, if so, on what grounds such representation should be based.

Lord Salisbury would also be glad to have any general observations that may occur to you in regard to the case.

I have, &c.

Report.

So far as the culpability of Captain Lothaire, or any question of further proceedings against him is concerned, we do not think that there is anything in these proceedings which would justify Her Majesty's Government in addressing further remonstrance, or making any representations to the Congo Government on the subject.

Upon the evidence, it appears to us that the hanging of Mr. Stokes was, in effect, a military execution, carried out without reference to the provisions of the Code, and in ignorance of what they were.

We regard the statement of Captain Lothaire that he considered that Mr. Stokes had no right of appeal, as he was not a "non-militaire," as a mere afterthought, and the statement in the Judgment, that the Articles of the Code were read, as untrue.

Captain Lothaire was acting at the head of a small party in a disturbed district of country. He appears to have honestly formed the opinion that Mr. Stokes had been engaged in selling arms and ammunition to the Arab Chiefs. This was, no doubt, an offence against the law of the Congo State, and Captain Lothaire appears to have drawn the conclusion that Mr. Stokes was actually stirring up war, and to have considered that the death of Mr. Stokes was necessary by way of example, and for the safety of his force, and had him hanged after a summary trial by court-martial.

We have little doubt that Mr. Stokes deserved punishment as an unscrupulous leader, but he had not by law incurred the penalty of death. The proceedings were altogether irregular if viewed, as intended to be, in the administration of ordinary law, and could be justified, if at all, only as a resort to martial law under critical circumstances and in a state of war.

But we do not think that it can be said that it follows that Captain Lothaire should have been convicted of homicide. Her Majesty's Government agreed to the proposal that the question of Captain Lothaire's guilt should be tried by the Court of Boma, and from that decision an appeal has in form been brought to the Tribunal at Brussels.

It is true that the prosecution at Boma, and the argument of the Procureur d'État on the appeal in Brussels, were not in reality serious prosecutions; the speech of the appellant's counsel—the Procureur d'État at Brussels—was in reality a speech made on behalf of the prisoner. But still, the facts were before the Court, and we do not think it probable that, in the case of such a charge under like circumstances, any jury would have convicted. We think that the defence that the circumstances warranted the application of martial law would probably have been successful.

The proceedings were in formal accordance with the arrangement made with Her Majesty's Government, and we do not think that the conduct of the prosecution is such as to warrant a representation of Her Majesty's Government so far as the culpability of Captain Lothaire is concerned. Having regard, however, to the facts as now ascertained, and with a view to the future, we think it is desirable that a protest or Memorandum should be addressed to the authorities of the Congo State respecting the proceedings in question.

The protest might with propriety call attention to the following points:—

(a.) The absence of any evidence justifying, or any necessity for, the immediate execution of Stokes.

(b.) The impropriety of treating him as a non-civilian.

(c.) The injustice of depriving him of his right of appeal.

(d.) The evident interpolation of the passage in the Judgment at Lindi to the effect that Article 28 of the Code Pénal Militaire was read to Stokes at the hearing.

(e.) The perfunctory, not to say the illusory, character of the so-called proceedings before the Tribunal at Boma and at Brussels.

The Memorandum might enforce the position that in all cases of civilians, or quasi-civilians, the right of appeal should be strictly observed, and that it is essential that the law should be strictly observed by persons in the position, or intrusted with the responsibilities and authority, of Captain Lothaire, and that any inquiry into their action should be thorough and impartial.

We have already reported (26th September, 1895) on the proposed resumption by Her Majesty's Government of extra-territorial jurisdiction in the Congo State.

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, October 3, 1896.

Asylum granted to Khaled at German Consulate at Zanzibar.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit to you the accompanying papers, which relate to the case of Khaled-bin-Muhammed, a pretender to the Sultanate of Zanzibar, and lately a refugee in the German Consulate at Zanzibar, from which the German Government have now removed him on board one of their vessels of war.

A copy is also inclosed of a Memorandum on the right of asylum prepared in this Department some years ago, which contains at pp. 3, 4, 11, 12, and 13 information which may possibly be of use to you in connexion with my present letter.

The circumstances of Khaled's case are briefly as follows:—

In the absence of any definite law of succession to the Sultanate of Zanzibar, Her Majesty's Government, in the exercise of the general and paramount authority vested in Great Britain as the Protecting Power, decided that Hamoud-bin-Muhammed should succeed to the Sultanate on the death of Sultan Hamid-bin-Thwain.

Sultan Hamid died unexpectedly and suddenly on the 24th August last. Khaled, who is also a member of the reigning family, within two hours after the Sultan's death, assured himself of the adhesion of the Sultan's guard, seized the Palace and defended it with the help of his armed supporters. He refused to surrender at the summons of Sultan Hamoud and of Her Majesty's Acting Consul-General. On the arrival of Her Majesty's ship "St. George," the Palace was bombarded, and Khaled, finding resistance hopeless, went to the German Consulate, with a number of his adherents, and was there received.

The German Government were requested to give the necessary instructions to the Imperial Consul that Khaled might be handed over to Her Majesty's Acting Consul-General, but the reply was to the effect that the Treaty between Germany and Zanzibar, a copy of which will be found among the papers accompanying this letter, secured complete extra-territoriality for German subjects in Zanzibar, that Khaled must therefore be considered as having taken refuge on German soil, and that Germany could not give up a political offender without an assurance that his life and liberty would be secured.

Her Majesty's Ambassador at Berlin was then instructed to inform the German Government that Khaled was not a German subject, and that the Treaty contained no provision converting the German Consulate into German soil. The Imperial Government then called attention to Articles XVI and XXI of the Treaty as conferring complete extra-territoriality on German subjects and on their dwellings.

Her Majesty's Acting Consul-General at Zanzibar was immediately instructed that the German Consulate should be watched, though care was to be taken not to allow the police to enter upon any land belonging to the Consulate. If Khaled left the Consulate, he was to be arrested; and if any attempt were made by the German Consul, or by persons acting under his orders, to remove Khaled from the island, an agent of the police was to make an effort to arrest him, in order to establish that the Consul was using force.

The German Government thereupon asked whether there would be any objection to Khaled being embarked on a German man-of-war's boat from the garden of the Consulate, one portion of which runs down to the sea, adding that they considered that they had a right to embark him from the Consulate, but did not wish to take any step which might be disagreeable to Her Majesty's Government.

To this communication Lord Salisbury replied that he could not admit that extra-territoriality conferred on those who possessed it the right of enabling fugitives from justice to escape out of the country in which they had committed an offence, and that as soon as Khaled left the protection afforded by the Treaty to German dwelling-houses in Zanzibar he must be arrested. At the same time it was intimated that if the rights of the Government of Zanzibar were recognized, any friendly intimation of the wishes of the German Government in regard to the disposal of the prisoner would be favourably considered.

The German Government thereupon repeated that they had a right to remove Khaled in the manner proposed, as he would not cease to be under German protection, and that they could not give up an Arab who had sought asylum in a German house, and whose offence was of a political character.

To this communication Lord Salisbury answered to the effect that Her Majesty's Government could not admit that extra-territoriality converted the ground on which German houses stood into German soil, still less that it gave the right to remove from the country a person taking refuge from the police. At the same time Lord Salisbury added that if the German Government insisted on their interpretation of the Treaty he was ready to refer it to an eminent jurisconsult belonging to a neutral State.

It appears from Sir F. Lascelles's telegram No. 15, Africa, of the 29th ultimo that the German Government have finally founded their right to remove Khaled from Zanzibar in a German ship of war, not on the right of extra-territoriality contained in the Treaty, which they put aside and on which they decline to arbitrate, but on the alleged right of uncontrolled communication between a German Consulate which can be reached by sea and a German man-of-war.

The telegram was received by the Secretary of State at midday on the 1st October. The same day Sir F. Lascelles was instructed to reply that Her Majesty's Government were entirely unable to accept the doctrine that, apart from Treaty stipulation, a German man-of-war's boat has unrestricted right of communication with a German Consulate in a foreign country because it happened to be built near the edge of the water; that even if extra-territoriality gave Germany a right over the land lying between the Consulate and the sea, which appeared doubtful, it gave no right over the 3 miles of territorial water beyond; that the German man-of-war's boat had no right to land anywhere except at the places allowed by the law of the country, nor to carry off a fugitive from justice across the territorial waters belonging to the Sultan; and, finally, that such a proceeding would be an act of violence.

It appears from Mr. Cave's telegram No. 104 of the 2nd instant that Khaled has now been carried away from Zanzibar in the manner contemplated by the German Government, the British and Zanzibar authorities having been unable to interfere, as Khaled was taken on board of a man-of-war's boat at the garden wall of the Consulate, which adjoins the sea and is accessible to boats at high water.

In these circumstances, I am to request that you will take the inclosed papers into your consideration, and that you will favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion as to whether the view taken by Her Majesty's Government of the rights claimed by the German Government is correct and should be maintained.

I am also to state that Lord Salisbury would be glad to be favoured with any observations which may occur to you as to the case generally.

I have, &c.

Treaty between Germany and Zanzibar, 1886 (in "Africa No. 3, 1887") (Parliamentary No. 3123).

Report.

In our opinion the view taken by Her Majesty's Government of the rights claimed by the German Government is correct, and should be maintained.

Article XVI of the Treaty of the 20th December, 1885, confers on German subjects the rights of extra-territoriality, but these rights are personal, and the contention that their houses are thereby made German soil seems to us untenable and inconsistent with the limited protection which is given by Article XXI.

Article XVII negatives the idea that the jurisdiction of the Sultan is excluded in the case of persons other than servants by the fact that they have found their way into the premises of German subjects.

Article III confers upon German Consuls in Zanzibar the privileges of Consuls of the most highly-favoured nation. We presume that there is not any Treaty conferring on the Consul of any nation in Zanzibar the right of extra-territoriality as regards his residence, and in the absence of any such Treaty a Consul has certainly no such privilege.

The proposition that as Consul the German Consul can grant an asylum to alleged criminals, whether political or ordinary, cannot, in our opinion, be sustained. It is true that such a privilege has been exercised by Diplomatic Representatives in Spain and in South America, and by Consuls in Persia, but there is, in our opinion, no doubt that this right of asylum, even in the case of Ambassadors, can be properly conferred only by the consent of the countries to whom they are accredited. It is in no way necessary for the discharge of an Ambassador's duty that his house should be an asylum for persons charged with crime of any description, and no such privilege can be properly asserted by an Ambassador, still less by a Consul. There is nothing in the Treaty with Germany to confer such a privilege, and we assume that there is no Treaty to that effect with any other nation which would be incorporated by Article III of the German Treaty.

The right of communicating by sea with the Consular premises extending to the shore appears to be relied on by the German Government as justifying their action. Such a contention is, in our opinion, untenable. The sea for 3 miles from the shore belongs to Zanzibar as territorial water, subject to the right of passage which the ships of all nations enjoy. German ships have no special privilege by reason of the contiguity of their Consular premises, and are subject to any law which may exist in Zanzibar as to the spots where embarkation and debarkation are permitted. They cannot lawfully use these waters to carry off a criminal to whom they have not the right to give asylum.

If any similar incident should occur in the future, regard must be had to Article XXI of the Treaty. The German Consul would be bound to give his assistance in the entry on any German premises, including the Consulate, for the purpose of arresting any person charged with crime, whether political in its nature or not. If he refused the entry, arrest might be made without his concurrence, as the right of asylum does not exist, and the attempt to assert it would be an abuse of the rights conferred by the Treaty.

Having regard to the course which events have taken in the present case, we do not think that Her Majesty's Government ought to insist on the surrender of Khaled even if it were on other grounds desirable. But we would suggest that the views of Her Majesty's Government as the Protecting Power and on behalf of the Sultan of Zanzibar, upon the whole subject should be communicated to the German Government, and that they should be notified that the right of asylum claimed cannot be recognized.

We have, further, only to remark, that while the question of the right of asylum claimed for the German Consul may become of importance, it is, in our opinion, entirely overshadowed by the claim of extra-territoriality for the premises of Germans which was at one time put forward, a claim, the successful assertion of which might have consequences of the greatest gravity, involving as it does the question of sovereignty over these premises on shore and the waters adjacent to them.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Mr. Chamberlain.

Sir, Royal Courts of Justice, October 21, 1896.

Bill relative to expulsion and residence of Aliens in South African Republic.

WE were honoured with your commands, signified in Sir Robert Meade's letter of the 5th instant, stating that he was directed to lay before us the correspondence relating to a Bill which had been passed by the Volksraad of the South African Republic authorizing the banishment by order of the Executive of foreigners who were dangerous to the public peace and order, and the regulation by Executive order of the place of residence of foreigners or burghers who were dangerous to the public order and peace.

That no copy of the Bill as passed had been received, but that we would observe that the British Agent in the South African Republic, in his telegram to the High Commissioner, reported in the High Commissioner's telegram of the 25th September, stated that the Bill had passed the Second Reading practically in the same form as the draft forwarded by him to the Acting High Commissioner in his despatch No. 41, dated the 20th July (a copy of which was inclosed in General Goodenough's despatch No. 497 of the 27th July), and that it might be assumed for the purpose of the reference to us that it passed the Third Reading in the same form.

That Sir Robert Meade was also to inclose copies of the Convention of 1884 between Her Majesty and the South African Republic, and a translation of the Grondwet of the South African Republic.

That it would be seen that Mr. Searle, the Legal Adviser of the High Commissioner, had advised that the Bill infringed, and was contrary to the letter and spirit of, Article XIV of the Convention, by authorizing the banishment of foreigners, and the restriction of the place of residence of foreigners, without, in either case, a judicial decision that the person banished or restricted had not conformed to the laws of the South African Republic, and by placing foreigners as regarded the right to reside in any part of the Republic on a different and less favourable footing than burghers.

That Sir Robert Meade was also to inclose for reference a copy of the Parliamentary Paper C.—7911 of 1895, relating to the Arbitration Case before the Chief Justice of the Orange Free State referred to in Mr. Searle's Report.

That he was to request that we would favour you with our opinion on the following questions:—

1. Whether the enactment of the Bill in question would be an infringement of the Convention of 1884?

2. Whether an order made under the Bill, if it were enacted, banishing a foreigner from the South African Republic, or ordering a foreigner to reside in a certain place, or prohibiting a foreigner from residing in a certain place or places, without, in either case, the decision of a competent Court of Justice that such foreigner was not conforming himself to the laws of the South African Republic, would be an infringement of the Convention?

3. Whether it would be desirable that Her Majesty's Government should object to the enactment of the Bill, or, if it had become law, should insist on its repeal, or should reserve the right of objecting to any action taken under its provisions?

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your commands, have the honour to

Report—

1. That the enactment of the Bill in question will, in our opinion, be an infringement of the Convention of 1884. The XIVth Article of that Convention secures to all persons, other than natives, conforming themselves to the laws of the South African Republic, full liberty to travel or reside in any part of the Republic.

We should not regard it as an infringement of this Article if the Volksraad had enacted that any foreigner who failed to conform to the laws of the Republic might be summarily expelled by the Executive without conviction in a Court of Law.

The XIVth Article does not, in our opinion, secure to foreigners the right of residence unless they have been convicted, after trial in Court, of a breach of the law, but leaves it open to the Republic summarily to expel any foreigner contravening the law. If he were expelled when, in fact, he had conformed to the law, it would form the subject of diplomatic representation.

But the Act of the Volksraad now before us goes much further, and provides that any foreigner who is dangerous to public peace and order can be banished by the Executive of the Republic.

Circumstances may well exist in which the presence of the particular foreigner might be rightly considered dangerous to the public peace and order, although he had conformed in every respect to the laws of the Republic. His position and influence might be such as to lead the Executive of the Republic to the conclusion that the public safety demanded his expulsion, although he was not himself charged with having broken the law. The Act now in question confers upon the Executive the right to expel any foreigner with regard to whom they have come to this conclusion, without requiring that they should also be satisfied that he has failed to conform to the law of the Republic.

The Act is, therefore, in our opinion, of itself an infraction of the Convention. The enactment of such a measure must occasion a sense of insecurity among the foreigners in the Transvaal, and constitutes a breach of the XIVth Article.

2. An order made under the Bill, if it is enacted, banishing a foreigner, or ordering him to reside in a certain place, or prohibiting him from residing in a certain place would, in our opinion, be an infringement of the Convention, if the foreigner in question had, in fact, conformed himself in all respects to the laws of the South African Republic. The British Government are not, in our opinion, entitled to insist upon the decision of a competent Court of Justice as a condition precedent to the right of the Republic to expel a foreigner who, in fact, has broken the law; his expulsion in such case may be effected simply by the action of the Executive. But the expulsion of the foreigner who has conformed to the law, merely on the ground that his presence is regarded as dangerous to the public peace and order, would be an infringement of the Convention.

3. It is, in our opinion, desirable that Her Majesty's Government should object to the enactment of the Bill, or, if it has become law, should insist on its repeal or amendment so as to bring it into conformity with the Convention.

The mere existence of such a law must interfere with the settlement of foreigners in the Transvaal, and with the business and social arrangements of those who are already there.

Although, as a matter of strict right, Her Majesty's Government are not, in our opinion, entitled to insist on conviction by a Court of Law as a necessary preliminary to expulsion, it would, we think, be much more satisfactory, and much more likely to prevent friction in future, if the law were amended so as to confine the right of expulsion to the case of a foreigner legally convicted.

We further think that Her Majesty's Government should reserve the right of objecting to any action taken under the provisions of the Bill in question.

[December 4, 1896.]

The Law Officers of the Crown to Mr. Chamberlain.

Royal Courts of Justice, December 4, 1896.

Sir,

Act relative to expulsion of Aliens in South African Republic.

WE were honoured with your commands, signified in Mr. Wingfield's letter of the 28th ultimo, stating that, with reference to our report of the 21st October last on the subject of the Bill recently passed by the Volksraad of the South African Republic relating to the expulsion of aliens, he was directed by you to lay before us the inclosed copy of the Act as passed.

That it would be seen that the wording of the Act differed considerably from that of the Bill, and that Mr. Wingfield was to request that we would inform you whether our Report applied to the Act, or whether we would desire to modify it in view of the difference between the Act and the Bill.

That Mr. Wingfield was also to draw our attention to the Report of the Law Officers to the Foreign Office of the 1st November, 1883, on the case of the expulsion of the Salvationists from certain Cantons of Switzerland, and especially to the passage beginning, "We do not think it would constitute a violation," which might be thought to place a somewhat different construction upon a clause in the Treaty between Great Britain and Switzerland similar in language to Article XIV of the Convention with the South African Republic from that which we placed upon that Article.

That Mr. Wingfield was also to refer us to Wharton's Digest of International Law of the United States, Section 206 (vol. II, pp. 516 et seq.) as showing the views of the Government of the United States of America upon the effect of Treaty provisions similar in character to Article XIV of the Convention, and to ask us to consider whether by treating the Act of the Volksraad as an infringement of Article XIV of the Convention Her Majesty's Government would give a handle to foreign Governments, with which Great Britain had Treaties containing similar Articles, to object on Treaty grounds to such legislation as the Aliens Bill introduced by the Marquess of Salisbury in the House of Lords in 1894.

We have taken the matter into consideration, and, in obedience to your commands, have the honour to

Report—

That our Report of the 21st October last does not apply to the Act of the Volksraad as passed.

That Act renders liable to expulsion, or confinement, to a particular place of residence, aliens who have been guilty of acts or proceedings imperilling the public peace. Such acts or proceedings are, it must be assumed, in contravention of the law of the Transvaal. We think, as stated in our previous Report, that Her Majesty's Government are not entitled to insist that there should have been a conviction in a Court of Law before the Transvaal Executive could take summary proceedings.

The difference between the Bill and the Act seems to us to be vital. The former did, and the latter does not, render liable to expulsion or restriction aliens who conform to the law.

In view of the wording of the Act, we do not recommend that Her Majesty's Government should protest against it as in itself an infraction of the XIVth Article of the Convention of 1884. At the same time, as it is manifestly capable of being abused so as to infringe that Article, we do not recommend that there should be any admission of its validity. We would suggest that the Transvaal Government should be notified that Her Majesty's Government in view of the XIVth Article of the Convention, cannot admit the right of the Transvaal Government to expel or restrain any foreigners who are not shown to have failed to conform to the laws of the Republic, and reserve the right to object to any proceedings under the Act which may amount to an infraction of the Convention.

The passage in the Report of the Law Officers of the 1st November, 1883, which is referred to in the third paragraph of the despatch to which we are now replying had not escaped our attention, and was fully considered by us before making our Report. We only think it necessary to observe that a consideration of the general question was not involved in the case then submitted to the Law Officers which turned upon the question whether the Municipal Law of Switzerland had been observed.

The passages in Wharton's Digest referred to in the fourth paragraph of the despatch relate to the importance of the right of excluding foreigners who are dangerous to the public peace, but not to the construction of any particular Treaty, or method of exercising such right.

We have, &c.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Mr. Chamberlain.

Sir, Royal Courts of Justice, December 9, 1896.

Law regulating admission of aliens into South African Republic.

WE were honoured with your commands, signified in Mr. Wingfield's letter of the 30th ultimo stating that, with reference to his letter of the 30th ultimo on the subject of the Law passed by the Volksraad of the South African Republic relating to the expulsion of aliens, he was directed by you to transmit to us a copy of a telegram from the High Commissioner for South Africa giving the text of a further Bill introduced by the Government of the South African Republic, and passed without amendment, which purports to regulate the admission of aliens to the Republic.

That Mr. Wingfield was to inclose a translation of an extract from a Law passed by the Volksraad in 1885 to which you thought that section 7 of the new Law must refer, and which hitherto, according to statements in the South African press, had not been generally enforced.

That you would be glad to be favoured with our opinion whether the new Law constitutes a violation of Article XIV of the London Convention; and, if so, what steps should be taken by Her Majesty's Government.

That with reference to the requirements of passports in connection with Treaty obligations, Mr. Wingfield was to draw our attention to the Lewisohn case (Law Officers to Foreign Office, 1881 and 1882).

We were also honoured with a further letter, dated the 4th instant, from Mr. Wingfield, inclosing a translation of the new Law.

We have given the matter our careful consideration, and, in obedience to your commands, have the honour to

Report—

That, in our opinion, this new Law constitutes a violation of Article XIV of the London Convention.

That Article stipulates that all persons other than natives, conforming themselves to the Laws of the South African Republic, shall have full liberty to enter, travel, or reside in any part of the South African Republic.

The new Law provides that such persons shall not be at liberty to enter or reside in the Republic unless they can show affirmatively that they have the means or ability to support themselves. The only condition imposed by the Article is that they should conform to the Laws of the Republic. The new Law imposes a further condition of a burthensome nature, which it might be difficult for many of the poorer, though perfectly respectable, immigrants to satisfy.

The condition is to be fulfilled by production of a passport, certifying means or ability, granted by the Government of the immigrant, and visé by a Consular official of the Republic, or by proof to the satisfaction of the Field-Cornet or other official, that the immigrant is possessed of such means, or is able to support himself.

We are unable to regard this Law otherwise than as imposing a new and important modification upon Article XIV of the Convention.

Before, however, any remonstrance is addressed to the Transvaal Government upon the subject of this Law, we think that there ought to be consultation with the Foreign Office, inasmuch as there are provisions similar in their character to this Article in some Treaties concluded by England with foreign Powers: for instance, Article XI of the Treaty with Russia of the 12th January, 1859, and Article I of the Treaty with Switzerland of the 6th September, 1855.

It may be necessary to consider whether the considerations governing the construction of such an Article in the case of a Treaty between two independent Powers, providing for the mutual admission of their subjects respectively, are the same as those which apply in the case of a Convention like the present, defining the terms upon which a qualified independence had been granted to what was previously British territory, and providing for the free admission into the Transvaal of all aliens other than natives.

The question how far any possible legislation as to immigrants into the United Kingdom might be affected in the light of Treaties with foreign Powers by any action taken with reference to this Law of the South African Republic deserves consideration.

The subject is of such great importance that we think it right, at present, only to indicate these considerations, and to suggest that, before any step is taken, it should be considered in all its bearings.

We have, &c.

AUSTRIA.

No. 3.

[May 11, 1896.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, May 2, 1896.

Importation of ore for iron-works at Trieste in Austrian ships only.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit to you herewith the papers noted in the accompanying list which relate to certain provisions in a concession granted to an Austrian Company by the Government of Austria-Hungary for the purpose of setting up iron-works at Servola, near Trieste.

Her Majesty's Government were at first led to believe that among the stipulations contained in this Concession were the two following:—

(1.) That ore for smelting was to be imported from Greece and Spain only, and
(2.) That it should only be imported in Austrian bottoms.

Her Majesty's Ambassador at Vienna was accordingly instructed to address a representation to the Austro-Hungarian Government on both these points, but as it appears, from their reply, that there were no grounds for the first assumption, and that ore may be imported from all countries alike, it is only to the second point that I need for the present invite your attention.

Article I of the Treaty between Great Britain and Austria-Hungary of 1868 contains the following proviso:—

"British ships and their cargoes, in all the dominions of His Imperial and Royal Apostolic Majesty . . . . from whatever place arriving, and whatever may be their place of destination, and whatever may be the place of origin or destination of their cargoes, shall be treated in every respect as national ships and their cargoes."

I am next to direct your attention to the representation that Her Majesty's Ambassador at Vienna addressed to the Imperial and Royal Government on the 22nd February last, and to the reply which the latter returned thereto on the 28th ultimo. These notes form the inclosures in Sir E. Monson's despatches Nos. 6 and 17 Commercial, of the 23rd February and the 3rd April respectively (marked papers D and F).

The Austrian Government's reply, you will observe, characterizes the contention advanced by that of Her Majesty as a strained interpretation of the terms of Article I of the Treaty above referred to, and expresses the opinion that the Article is not susceptible of the construction in question.

In the view of the Austro-Hungarian Government, the Article in question lays down the principle on which reciprocal Navigation Treaties of other nations are usually based, namely, that, as regards the treatment of ships and their cargoes, no difference is to be made between foreigners and natives. This stipulation, they proceed to urge, has not, however, been considered prejudicial to the passing of laws in most States for the protection of their respective commercial navies, or for the subsidizing of native shipping companies, neither can Treaty rights be appealed to when the Concession of advantages to Austrian shipping is imposed on an Industrial Company which has requested favourable treatment from the State as regards freedom from taxation, &c. An arrangement of the nature referred to creates—according to the view of the Austro-Hungarian Government—no inequality in the treatment of native and foreign shipping, but only combines a proviso which is consistent with the legitimate functions of the State with a special Concession made by the latter, and cannot be regarded as a question which comes within the domain, or which is to be decided by considerations of International, as distinguished from Municipal Law.

I am to request that you will take these papers into your consideration, and favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion

(1.) As to whether the language of Article I of the Treaty between Great Britain and Austria-Hungary of 1868 is properly susceptible of the interpretation that has been placed upon it by Her Majesty's Government, and by the terms of Sir E. Monson's note of the 22nd February, so far as that note relates to the point under consideration.

(2.) Whether, in the event of your reply to the above question being in the affirmative, there are any additional arguments that could properly be cited in support of that view.

His Lordship would further be glad to receive any observations which you may be disposed to offer on the reply of the Austro-Hungarian Government, and on the matter generally, which raises a question of principle of great international importance.

I have, &c.

Report.

The interpretation to be put on Article I of the Treaty of 1868 with reference to the action of the Austrian Government raises questions of considerable difficulty, but, in our opinion, the view taken by Her Majesty's Government, and embodied in Sir E. Monson's note, is correct.

We understand the Austrian Government to contend that the Article relates merely to the treatment to be accorded to British vessels and their cargoes, when they have got them, and does not extend to prevent legislation putting British ships at a disadvantage as compared with Austrian in competition for freights. This appears to us to be an unduly narrow construction of the Article. If correct it would leave it open to the Austrian Government to impose penalties upon their subjects for employing foreign vessels, and it seems to us impossible to say that legislation of this sort would be consistent with equality of treatment.

On the other hand, we are disposed to agree with the contention of the Austrian Government that the Article leaves them at liberty to encourage Austrian shipping by subsidies, or in other analogous ways.

In the present case, the Austrian Government proposes to exempt the Company from taxation if they employ Austrian ships only, thus, in effect, penalizing the employment of British vessels. If this is not an infraction of the Treaty it would be open to the Austrian Government to make it a condition of licensing any industry in Austria that Austrian vessels only should be employed, either for import or for export, thus in effect, though not in name, excluding British vessels altogether from Austrian ports.

It is undoubtedly difficult to draw the line, but we are, on the whole, of opinion that what has been done in this case does constitute an infraction of Article I of the Treaty.

Supplementary Convention with Belgium to amend Extradition Treaty of 1876.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, the accompanying Papers respecting a proposed Supplementary Convention with Belgium, to amend the Extradition Treaty between Great Britain and Belgium of the 20th May, 1876 (Paper A), in regard to the procedure to be adopted in this country in the case of persons whose extradition may be applied for by the Belgian Government.

L.O.R. 1895 (Conf. 6796), p. 40.

The object of the proposed Convention is to give effect, as regards Belgium, to "The Extradition Act, 1895" (Paper B), and it has been drafted, mutatis mutandis, on the basis of the Convention recently concluded with France, which formed the subject of your Reports of the 30th September, 1895 (Paper C), and the 20th February, 1896 (Paper D).

I am to request that you will take the inclosed Papers into your consideration, and that you will inform Lord Salisbury whether, in your opinion, the draft Convention, as amended in the manner indicated by the Home Office (Paper H), may, in its present shape, properly be submitted to the Belgian Government. His Lordship would also be glad to be favoured with any general observations which you may wish to offer on the subject of the proposed Convention.

Draft Convention between Great Britain and Belgium, modifying the Extradition Treaty of May 20, 1876 (as modified in accordance with Home Office letter of May 1, 1896).

HER Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, Empress of India, and His Majesty the King of the Belgians, being desirous to render more efficacious the provisions of Articles II and IV of the Treaty between Great Britain and Belgium of the 20th May, 1876, for the mutual extradition of fugitive criminals, have named as their respective Plenipotentiaries for this purpose, that is to say:

Her Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, Empress of India,

And His Majesty the King of the Belgians;

Who, after having communicated to each other their respective Full Powers, found in good and due form, have agreed upon the following Articles:—

ARTICLE I.

The text of Article II of the Extradition Treaty of the 20th May, 1876, is amended by the substitution of the words "a Magistrate" for the words "the police Magistrate who issued the warrant, or some other police Magistrate in London," in the first sentence of the third ("fourth in French text") paragraph of section I, and by the omission of the word "police" in the second sentence of the said paragraph, and in both paragraphs of section II.

ARTICLE II.

The text of Article IV of the aforesaid Treaty is amended by the substitution of the words "a Magistrate" for the words "a police Magistrate in London."

ARTICLE III.

The text of Article VII of the aforesaid Treaty is amended by the omission of the word "police."

Anglo-Belgian Extradition Treaty Order in Council.

WITH reference to your Report of the 19th May last (Paper A), I have the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, the accompanying draft of an Order in Council (Paper B), applying the Extradition Acts, 1870 to 1895, in the case of a Convention between Great Britain and Belgium, signed at London on the 27th August last, amending certain Articles of the Extradition Treaty between the two countries of the 20th May, 1876 (Paper C), to which the Extradition Acts, 1870 and 1873, were applied by an Order in Council, dated the 21st July, 1876 (Paper D).

The terms of the draft Order in Council are concurred in by Her Majesty's Secretary of State for the Home Department (Paper E).

I am to request that you will take the inclosed papers into your consideration, and that you will favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion whether the draft Order in Council (Paper B), may, in its present form, properly be laid before the Queen in Council for Her Majesty's approval.

His Lordship would also be glad to be furnished with any general observations which you may wish to offer, after perusal of the accompanying papers.

WHEREAS by the Extradition Acts, 1870 to 1895, it was, amongst other things, enacted that, where an arrangement has been made with any foreign State with respect to the surrender to such State of any fugitive criminals, Her Majesty may, by Order in Council, direct that the said Acts shall apply in the case of such foreign State; and that Her Majesty may, by the same or any subsequent Order, limit the operation of the Order, and restrict the same to fugitive criminals who are in, or suspected of being in, the part of Her Majesty's dominions specified in the Order, and render the operation thereof subject to such conditions, exceptions, and qualifications as may be deemed expedient.

And whereas a Convention was concluded on the 27th day of August, 1896, between Her Majesty and His Majesty the King of the Belgians, amending certain Articles of the Extradition Treaty of the 20th May, 1876, for the mutual extradition of fugitive criminals, which Convention is in the terms following:—

[See Treaty Series No. 16, 1896.]

And whereas the ratifications of the said Convention was exchanged at London on the 30th day of September, 1896:

Now, therefore, Her Majesty, by and with the advice of Her Privy Council, and in virtue of the authority committed to her by the said recited Acts, doth order, and it is hereby ordered, that from and after the * day of , 1896, the said Acts shall apply in the case of Belgium, and of the said Convention with His Majesty the King of the Belgians, and of the said Extradition Treaty as modified by the said Convention.

Provided always that the operation of the said Acts shall be and remain suspended within the Dominion of Canada so long as an Act of the Parliament of Canada passed in 1886, and entitled "An Act respecting the Extradition of Fugitive Criminals," shall continue in force there, and no longer.

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, October 26, 1896.

Gentlemen,

Expulsion of Mr. Ben Tillett from Antwerp.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit to you herewith the papers noted in the accompanying lists which relate to the arrest and imprisonment of Mr. Ben Tillett at Antwerp, and his expulsion from Belgian territory.

Mr. Tillett's version of the affair is given in a letter addressed by him to this Office on the 25th August, inclosing an extract from the "Daily Chronicle," which, Mr. Tillett states, is, with certain amendments and additions, an accurate account of what took place.

From this account (see List A, Paper 1) it appears that on his arrival at Antwerp by the Harwich boat on the morning of Thursday, the 20th August, Mr. Tillett was met by a force of police, who arrested him. In reply to his protestations, he was informed that the Minister of Justice had issued instructions to the effect that he was not to be allowed to address a public meeting, and that unless he consented not to do oi, he was to be summarily expelled. Mr. Tillett was taken to the police office, and after an hour was allowed to go free without knowing the precise conditions on which he was liberated. He had stated his desire to observe the law of the country, adding that he would not address a public meeting that would tend to disorder, but would confine himself to meeting the trade-union men with an address on purely trade-union matters. Following up these declarations, Mr. Tillett proceeded to a meeting place in the rear of the branch (of the Union?) premises, and addressed the members of the trade-union, the general public being, according to his statement, excluded. His address dealt only with trade-unionism, and the need for international combination.

On the following day (Friday), Mr. Tillett again addressed a similar meeting on the details pertaining to international combination. He had barely finished his address when the police burst in, arrested Mr. Tillett, and took him to the police office, where he was interrogated, and, in answer to his inquiries, was informed that no specific charge was preferred against him. No other reason for his detention was given to Mr. Tillett but that he was arrested by the orders of the Minister of Justice. The police official communicated the fact of the arrest to the authorities at Brussels, and requested that instructions should be sent as to what further action was to be taken. This message was sent at 4 P.M. on Friday, thus allowing three hours for a reply before the boat left in which Mr. Tillett had arranged to cross to England. No answer having arrived before the departure of the boat, Mr. Tillett was taken from the police office to the gaol.

Mr. Tillett then proceeds to describe how he was subjected to a treatment which he states was that of a common felon: how his request to communicate with his wife and friends and with the British Consul was ignored until two hours before his liberation: how he was under arrest and in gaol for twenty-six and a-half hours, and how at 6 o'clock on Saturday evening he was liberated and conducted by a detective to the steamer which was about to leave for England.

Mr. Tillett concludes by asserting that his detention occasioned him loss of time and additional expenses, and that, in consequence of the prison treatment and the foul cell in which he was placed, he had suffered in health, being stripped naked, searched, and kept without proper food.

Her Majesty's Consul-General at Antwerp, in a brief Report to Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Brussels (see List A, Paper 2), stated that Mr. Tillett was informed by the police that he could not be permitted to hold meetings at Antwerp; but that, in spite of this warning, Mr. Tillett addressed an open-air meeting on Friday, and on the evening of that day was arrested and placed in confinement.

I am now to draw your attention to Sir F. Plunkett's despatch No. 151, Commercial, of the 15th September, inclosing a copy of the reply (dated the 14th September) of the Belgian Government to the inquiries made by Her Majesty's Minister at Brussels under instructions from Lord Salisbury (see List A, Papers 3, 4, and 5).

M. de Favereau in his observations on the charges brought by Mr. Tillett defends the action of the police, by stating that Mr. Tillett had been warned that he must not engage in any public propaganda, and that he undertook not to do so. In spite of this undertaking he spoke at a public meeting. M. de Favereau adds that inquiry had established that Mr. Tillett never asked leave to communicate with persons outside the prison, but that he telegraphed to his family: that Mr. Tillett was submitted to the ordinary discipline of the prison, and that his detention until the following day was the result of an accidental delay in the transmission of the orders of the Minister of Justice.

In a letter from Mr. Villiers, dated the 18th September (see List A, Paper 6), the papers on this case were referred to Her Majesty's Attorney-General, and it will be seen from Lord Salisbury's Memorandum of the 17th September that his Lordship requested that he might be favoured with an opinion as to whether, as no prosecution of Mr. Tillett was intended, the Belgian Government were justified in inflicting upon him the various indignities which resulted from his imprisonment. Sir Richard Webster's Memorandum on the subject is included in the inclosed papers (see List A, Paper 7).

In accordance with the suggestions of the Attorney-General, Sir Francis Plunkett was instructed to formally request the Belgian Government to inform him as to the character of the offence which Mr. Tillett was alleged to have committed, and to show that the law of Belgium justifies arrest and imprisonment for such an offence (List A, Papers 8 and 10). At the same time, the observations of Mr. Tillett with respect to M. de Favereau's note of the 14th September were invited. It will be observed that Mr. Tillett, in his reply dated the 5th October (List A, Papers 9 and 11), adheres to every part of his original statement, and lays stress on his contention that the meetings he addressed were private and not public, admission being by ticket only: he also relates in detail his attempts to communicate with the British Consul and with his friends.

In Sir F. Plunkett's despatch No. 168, Commercial, of the 14th October (List A, Paper 14), will be found the reply of the Belgian Government to the formal inquiries which Sir F. Plunkett had, by the advice of Sir Richard Webster, been instructed to make.

You will notice that, in M. de Favereau's note, the Belgian Government practically justify their treatment of Mr. Ben Tillett, on the ground that it flows from, and is ancillary to, the sovereign right of the Belgian Crown to exclude foreigners from

Belgian territory. They do not ground their justification on the violation by Mr. Tillett of any special Belgian law, but on the broad international principle referred to above. They state that immediately on his arrival Mr. Ben Tillett was warned that he would be sent out of the country if he did not keep the engagement which he then took to abstain from organizing, or being the cause of, public meetings of dock labourers at Antwerp: that he failed to keep this engagement, and that his arrest was the necessary consequence. It was owing to an accidental circumstance, as stated in M. de Favereau's note of the 14th September, that Mr. Tillett was detained in custody until the following day.

M. de Favereau maintains that there was nothing unusual in the treatment extended to Mr. Tillett, and claims that, under such circumstances, the foreigner must necessarily be kept in temporary detention, or the practical object of his arrest, viz., to prevent his disturbing the public peace by addressing meetings, might be frustrated.

His Excellency further asserts that foreigners are placed for the time that elapses between their arrest and expulsion in the "quartier des passagers," and that Mr. Tillett's treatment differed in no respect from that usually accorded to such persons.

Sir F. Plunkett observes that M. de Favereau disposes very summarily of the precise question which had been put to his Excellency in his (Sir F. Plunkett's) note, and would seem to claim that the expulsion of foreigners is a matter of pure sovereign right, uncontrolled or unmodified by any special provisions of Belgian Municipal Law. Moreover, M. de Favereau adduces no proof that the prison authorities did not exceed their powers during the time in which Mr. Tillett was in the so-called "quartier des passagers."

I am to request that you will take these papers into your consideration, and favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion—

1. As to whether any further representations should be made to the Belgian Government on the subject.

2. In the event of your reply to the above question being in the affirmative, as to the grounds on which such representations should be based.

His Lordship would also be glad to receive any observations which you may be disposed to offer on the case generally.

I am further to inclose a collection of papers (see List B) with regard to the expulsion of Mr. Havelock Wilson, M.P., and Mr. Tom Mann from Antwerp, which you may consider it useful to peruse in connection with the present question.

An extract from the "Réforme" on the legal aspect of the case is annexed (List B, Paper 11), and also a medical opinion transmitted by Mr. Tillett on the state of his health (List B, Paper 12).

Report.

We think that further representations should be made to the Belgian Government on the subject.

The right of the Belgian Government to expel Mr. Ben Tillett is undoubted. But the arrest and detention, and the various circumstances of hardship with which they were accompanied are, in our opinion, altogether in excess of anything which could be justified as incidental to the right of expulsion. It is not suggested that these proceedings were preliminary to a criminal prosecution, which was afterwards abandoned for expulsion, or even that Mr. Tillett had committed any offence which would justify arrest, imprisonment, and searching before trial.

In cases of urgency, arrest, as a preliminary to expulsion, may possibly be justified as a measure of precaution. In this case it seems to have been quite unnecessary. Mr. Tillett might have been kept under police supervision till the departure of the next boat. The arrest was followed by a detention quite unnecessary in its duration, and even if, as alleged, this was the result of mistake or accidental delay, for that the Belgian authorities are responsible—it was in no way occasioned by Mr. Tillett. We cannot see how it could be thought proper to have Mr. Tillett searched. The attempt to excuse the various hardships to which Mr. Tillett was exposed during his detention on the ground that the same treatment is accorded to other foreigners under similar circumstances seems to us to be no answer at all.

A foreigner in Belgium while there is subject to the procedure of the Belgian law, but ought not to be subjected to arbitrary penalties of this sort.

We think that any further representations to the Belgian Government should be based on the foregoing considerations. We suggest that the Belgian Government ought to express regret for what has occurred, and make some compensation to Mr. Tillett. The Belgian authorities probably acted under a very natural feeling of irritation on the intrusion of a foreigner engaged in what they probably regarded as an incendiary campaign, but what they have done is, in our opinion, quite unjustifiable.

BORNEO.

No. 7.

[July 2, 1896.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, June 19, 1896.

Alleged breach of faith by British North Borneo Co. in respect to Spanish deserters from Manilla.

Gentlemen,

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, the papers noted in the accompanying list, which relate to proceedings in connection with certain deserters from the Spanish army in the Philippines who had taken refuge in the territory of British North Borneo.

The following statement of events is taken from the Reports received from the Governor of British North Borneo, and, through him, from the Commandant of Police, who was sent to arrest the deserters (Paper A, pp. 4–7; Paper D, pp. 1–3, 6–11).

On the 4th September last a Spanish cruiser arrived in North Borneo under the orders of a Commodore sent specially to warn the Governor of the supposed presence in British North Borneo of twenty-five Spanish soldiers who had deserted from the Philippines after murdering the officers of the garrison, carrying off some women, one of them the wife of an officer. They had stolen a considerable sum of money, had taken with them all their arms and accoutrements, and were well provided with ammunition. They were all good marksmen, and all bore bad characters.

The Commodore offered to assist in the search, and, if the men could be traced, in their capture. His offer was accepted conditionally by the Governor, who ordered Mr. A. Jones, a European officer, to proceed with fifteen native Dyak police on board the small unarmed cruiser "Petrel" to search for the mutineers. In consequence of disturbances in the northern part of North Borneo no larger force of police was at the time available for this expedition.

The instructions drawn up for Mr. Jones by the Governor in Council will be found at pp. 8 and 9 of Paper (D).

The "Petrel" and the Spanish cruiser started on the 5th September, and received information the same evening from another vessel that the mutineers were at the Tunku River. The two ships at once proceeded thither, and arrived at midnight. Leaving the Spanish cruiser at Tunku, the "Petrel" went to Silam to call for Mr. Dunlop, the Resident of the district. Finding that he was absent, Mr. Jones returned with the "Petrel" to Tunku, arriving there at 1 P.M. on the 7th. He was then informed by a native, Salleh, that the mutineers were encamped up one of the small rivers difficult of access, and that they had expressed a determination to fight to the last rather than surrender to the Spanish authorities. It appears that the landing of the mutineers at Tunku had caused great consternation among the natives. They had taken by force whatever they required, and had threatened with their weapons those who resisted. Some natives who had gone near their camp reported that they had been fired at, and that firing was going on all day, the mutineers firing at random at anything moving in the neighbouring jungle. The natives had collected and armed themselves for the purpose of attacking the mutineers, but were restrained by Salleh and the Chiefs. The mutineers had threatened to attack the Rajah's Kampong.

The British flag was flown by the Spanish cruiser for a few hours on the afternoon of the 7th in order to reassure the natives, who were in great alarm on account of the presence of the mutineers on shore, and the detention on board the Spanish ship of some of their Chiefs, who had boarded her in the morning and who were detained there pending Mr. Jones' return, as until his arrival they could not communicate with the Spaniards for want of an interpreter. The flag could not, however, have been seen by the mutineers as they were a long way inland.

Mr. Jones sent Salleh to the mutineers to inform them that he had arrived with Government police, and to call upon them to surrender. They at first attempted to make conditions, but at last agreed to surrender unconditionally to the British North Borneo Company's police next morning at daybreak. In the meantime they agreed to give up their arms, and Salleh returned at 10 P.M., bringing twenty-three rifles, but he stated that they had retained their side-arms and ammunition.

Mr. Jones informed the Spanish Commodore of what had taken place, and requested him to land a party to be in readiness to arrest the mutineers on their arrival. Three officers and twenty men from the Spanish cruiser accordingly landed at 3 A.M. the following morning (8th September). Mr. Jones placed these in concealment, and arranged to give them a signal when the time came to arrest the mutineers. At 6 A.M. the latter arrived, twenty-three in all, some still dressed in uniform and others as Sulus. Mr. Jones then told them that they would be given up to the Spaniards, and gave a signal to the Spanish officer to arrest them. As soon as the mutineers saw the Spanish sailors approaching they took to flight. They were called upon to stop, but took no notice of the summons. The Spaniards then fired upon them and sixteen were killed; the remaining seven were captured. A few of the Dyak North Borneo policemen joined in the firing, but were stopped by Mr. Jones. Some of the Dyaks who made a rush at the mutineers with their weapons were driven back by him. The Spanish cruiser left soon after with the seven prisoners.

There are several points in connection with these proceedings on which Lord Salisbury would be glad to be favoured with your opinion.

The view taken by the British North Borneo Company of the action of Governor Beaufort and of Mr. Jones will be seen from the letters and telegrams of Mr. R. Biddulph Martin, M.P., the Chairman of the Company, to Mr. Beaufort, which will be found in Paper (D).

Lord Salisbury does not doubt that you will concur in the Company's condemnation of Mr. Jones' action in inducing the mutineers to lay down their arms by leading them to believe that they were surrendering to the forces of the North Borneo Government. The stratagem employed is not excused by the argument that it would otherwise have been necessary to employ force, and that in that case the loss of life would probably have been greater than it was.

It does not appear that fault can be found with the British North Borneo authorities for handing over the mutineers to the Spanish Commodore. Your opinion is, however, desired on this point. British North Borneo is, according to the provisions of the Charter granted to the Company by Her Majesty, to be regarded as an independent State under the protection of Great Britain. No Extradition Treaty exists between Spain and Great Britain on behalf of British North Borneo. The law of the country is based on the Indian Penal, Criminal Procedure, and Civil Procedure Codes, with adaptations of certain British Colonial Acts. According to the letter from the Chairman of the Company to Governor Beaufort of the 17th January, 1896 (Paper (D), p. 11), the surrender of the mutineers to the Spanish authorities was not contrary to the laws of North Borneo, and there does not appear to be any ground for doubting the accuracy of this view.

A further point on which you are requested to give an opinion is whether, supposing the authorities of North Borneo to have been justified in giving up the mutineers to the Spanish Commodore, they were, in the circumstances of the case, acting correctly in surrendering them without trial.

The use made by the Chairman of the British North Borneo Company in his letter to Governor Beaufort of the 17th January, 1896 (Paper (D), p. 11), of the expression "comity of nations," in connection with the relations between Spain and the Government of North Borneo, seems to call for remark. It is suggested that the phrase is inappropriate where a Protectorate is concerned. The international relation to which the comity attaches would appear to be between the Protecting Power (Great Britain) and Spain, and not between the Protectorate and Spain.

In conclusion, Lord Salisbury requests to be favoured with your opinion whether, in the circumstances of the case, as they appear from the inclosed papers, the authorities of British North Borneo were justified in availing themselves, without previous communication with Her Majesty's Government, of the offer of the Spanish Commodore to assist is arresting the mutineers in the territory of British North Borneo. It is suggested that the Governor may have thought it unsafe to allow these dangerous men to remain in the country until he had had time to communicate with Her Majesty's Government and that the urgency of the case justified his immediate action.

I am to request that you will take the papers transmitted herewith into your consideration, and that you will favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion on the questions submitted in this letter, and with any general observations which you may have to offer on the case.

I have, &c.

Report.

We agree in the condemnation by the Company of the stratagem employed by Mr. Jones to induce the mutineers to lay down their arms.

We do not think that any fault could have been found with the Company for merely handing over the mutineers to the Spanish Commodore. It appears that there is no ground for supposing that such a surrender would be contrary to the laws of British North Borneo. It is quite clear that any State, unless it has fettered its action by its own municipal laws, is at liberty to arrest foreign criminals who have landed on its territory, and to hand them over to the authorities of their own country. This may be a necessary measure of self-protection.

It does not sufficiently appear whether there is anything in the laws of British North Borneo which rendered a trial necessary before handing over the mutineers to the Spanish Commodore. Of course, if there is, the municipal laws of the territory have been violated, but we must point out that any trial would, under the circumstances of the case, have been a mere formality. There appears to be not the slightest doubt that the men were mutineers who had murdered their officers, and who had established themselves in the territory of British North Borneo, with arms and ammunition, under such circumstances as to be a source of terror and disturbance in the neighbourhood.

The British North Borneo Company has no relations with foreign Powers, and the phrase "comity of nations" is not strictly applicable as between the Company and Spain. The question of international relations is for the Protecting Power, Great Britain.

We think that the authorities of British North Borneo were justified in availing themselves, without previous communication with Her Majesty's Government, of the offer of the Spanish Commodore to assist in arresting the mutineers. The case was one of emergency, and disaster might have ensued if the delay necessary to communicate with Her Majesty's Government had been permitted. The circumstances under which the assistance of the Spanish Commodore was rendered were most unfortunate, but if proper precautions had been taken, we see no reason to think that it would have been improper for the authorities of British North Borneo to accept Spanish aid.

P. Wilson's claim for compensation for injuries caused by Brazilian troops.

Gentlemen,

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you herewith, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, correspondence relating to the claim of Peter Wilson against the Brazilian Government for compensation in consequence of injuries received by him from the fire of Brazilian troops whilst on board a boat belonging to the British steamship "Severnbank."

There is much conflict of evidence in regard to the circumstances in which the boat was fired at, as will be seen from the inclosed Memorandum (Paper H). The latest reply from the Brazilian Government (Paper G) states that the boat carried neither flag nor ensign, and the application for compensation is refused on the ground that she did not obey the order to stop within speaking distance.

Lord Salisbury would be glad to be favoured with your opinion as to whether Her Majesty's Government would be justified in pressing for the payment of 100*l.* to Peter Wilson in view of the statements made on either side respecting the facts of the case, and having regard to the state of revolution existing at the time in the harbour of Rio de Janeiro.

In our opinion, this claim should not be pressed.

There appears to be a conflict of testimony as to whether the boat was showing the red ensign, and it is, moreover, alleged by the Brazilians that the boat did not stop when hailed. These statements, taken in conjunction with the disturbed state of Rio at the time, make the case one in which it is difficult for Her Majesty's Government to insist upon payment of compensation.

Claims for detention of vessels at Rio during civil war.

Gentlemen,

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, the papers noted in the accompanying list respecting the claims of British ship-owners for the detention of their ships in the harbour of Rio de Janeiro during the civil disturbances in 1893–94.

L.O.R. 1894 (Conf. 6641), p. 17.

I am to call your attention to the Report given by the Law Officers of the Crown on the 16th March, 1894 (Paper B), as to the reply which it was, in their opinion, desirable to return to a letter from the Clyde Sailing-ship Owners' Association.

L.O.R. 1894 (Conf. 6641), p. 19.

The Report of the Law Officers in the case of the "Arethusa" (Paper F) is also annexed for reference. Many other applicants have received replies similar to those which were based on these Reports.

The Petition from ship-owners at Liverpool and Glasgow, which is inclosed in Mr. Bigham's letter of the 20th instant (Paper H), sets forth the circumstances in which they have applied to Lord Salisbury for assistance in pressing their claims on the Brazilian Government, after having failed to recover damages from the charterers or consignees by taking legal proceedings against them.

In view of the importance of the interests at stake, Lord Salisbury would be glad to be favoured with your opinion—

1. As to whether any such liability attaches to the Brazilian Government in respect to the detention of the vessels at Rio as would justify Her Majesty's Government in presenting claims for compensation on behalf of the British ship-owners concerned; and

2. Generally on the papers now submitted to you.

I have, &c.

Report.

In our opinion, no such liability attaches to the Brazilian Government in respect of the detention of the ships at Rio as would justify Her Majesty's Government in presenting claims on behalf of the British ship-owners concerned. Foreigners must take the risks of civil war in any State to which they come, and the Government of the State cannot by international law be required to compensate them for injuries sustained by reason of civil war or insurrection.

To sustain any such claim it would be necessary to show that there has been on the part of the State some breach of duty under international law. The occurrence of an insurrection, or the failure at once to put it down, does not constitute such breach of duty.

In the present case we can see nothing to lay the foundation for any claim against the Brazilian Government.

WITH reference to your Report of the 10th instant, a copy of which is inclosed, I have the honour to transmit to you, by the direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, a letter from the Liverpool Ship-owners' Association* respecting the detention in the harbour of Rio de Janeiro of certain vessels carrying coal consigned to Messrs. Lage Irmãos.

It appears from the Memorandum which accompanies the letter from the Association that, during the insurrection, the Brazilian Government ordered all merchant ships to withdraw from the island of Vianna, where Messrs. Lage's coal stores were situated, and that although Messrs. Lage applied for permission to return to the island immediately after order was restored, on the 13th March, 1894, it was not until the 31st July that they were allowed to have access to their premises. In the meantime the coal ships were detained, and a schedule is appended to the Memorandum showing the period during which each vessel remained in the harbour.

I am to request that Lord Salisbury may be favoured with your opinion as to whether any claim for compensation may properly be presented to the Brazilian Government on behalf of the ship-owners, in respect of those vessels which were compulsorily detained for a considerable period after the close of the disturbances.

His Lordship would be glad at the same time to be favoured with any general observations which you may desire to offer on the matter.

I have, &c.

Report.

Upon the facts before us, we do not think that Her Majesty's Government should press this claim. If, as a consequence of the disturbances in the port, the Brazilian Government prevented Messrs. Lage using their island until the 31st July, we do not think that this claim can be pressed any more than the claims for detention while the disturbances were in actual progress.

In order to justify a claim it would have to be shown that the act of the Government in preventing the re-establishment of the trade until July was for their own purposes, and for reasons not connected with the rebellion, of which we see no evidence.

We, therefore, do not advise that Her Majesty's Government should present any claim for compensation on behalf of the ship-owners.

Foreign Office, February 1, 1896.

Gentlemen,

Trial of Chinese servant on H.M.S. "Esk" for killing a native at Ichang.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, the papers marked in the accompanying list, respecting the case of a Chinese servant employed on board Her Majesty's ship "Esk," who, whilst on shore at Ichang, accidentally shot and killed a native Customs official.

The local authorities have demanded the surrender of the servant for trial, but the Crown Advocate at Shanghae holds that the British Courts are competent to deal with the offence committed, and that the Chinese are not entitled to insist on the surrender.

The Acting Chief Justice of the Supreme Consular Court, on the other hand, is of opinion that Her Majesty's Consular Court has no jurisdiction to entertain proceedings in such a case, although he agrees with the Crown Advocate in considering that the accused can properly be tried by naval court-martial under the provisions of "The Naval Discipline Act, 1866."

Lord Salisbury is not, however, satisfied as to the correctness of this view, and would therefore be glad to be favoured with your opinion on the question, and also generally as to what instructions should be sent to Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Peking.

Report.

In the absence of any Treaty for extradition, the delivery up of criminals who have taken refuge on board a British man-of-war rests on the comity of nations, and the principle that such refugees should be put on their trial in the only Court in which a trial can be had.

In the present case, the Chief Justice and Crown Advocate are agreed in thinking that the Chinese servant can be tried under "The Naval Discipline Act, 1866," and we are not prepared to dissent from this view.

The refusal to deliver him up would not secure immunity from trial, and as the man belonged to the vessel and was borne on the books, he is not in the position of a criminal who merely escaped to the vessel in the hope of avoiding trial for an offence committed on shore.

We therefore recommend that he should not be given up, but put on his trial under the Naval Discipline Act; the Chinese authorities may, but purely as a matter of courtesy, be invited to send a Representative to watch the trial.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, May 22, 1896.

Claim on China for loss of "Kow-Shing."

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, the papers noted in the accompanying list relative to the sinking of the British steam-ship "Kow-Shing" by the Japanese man-of-war "Naniwa" on the 25th July, 1894.

These papers include the depositions and statements made by persons who were on board the "Kow-Shing" (Paper A, pp. 1–9, 21–26, and 35, and Paper D), the Report of the proceedings before a Naval Court held at Nagasaki (Paper A, p. 10), and the charter-party (Paper A, p. 27), under which the vessel was engaged by the Chinese Government to convey troops to Corea.

The previous Reports of the Law Officers of the Crown on this subject, and two Memoranda, dated respectively the 10th November and 29th October, 1894, by the then Lord Chancellor (Lord Herschell), and the legal adviser to this Department, are also inclosed in a separate printed paper (Paper B), to which are annexed two letters, dated the 2nd and 6th August, 1894, respectively, to the "Times," from Professors Westlake and Holland.

I am also to submit to you a statement (Paper C) which was drawn up for presentation to the Chinese Government, and which purports to inclose the claim put forward by the owners of the "Kow-Shing."

Before proceeding to apply to the Chinese Government, Lord Salisbury wishes to refer the case to you for further consideration. It seems to his Lordship that it is difficult to lay down, on the opinions of Lord Herschell and Sir Robert Reid, as they stand, that China is bound to pay compensation for the destruction of the "Kow-Shing." It may perhaps be said that the circumstances have been held to justify the action of the "Naniwa," and that the Japanese Government are thus exonerated from liability, but even so, it is not clear that the Chinese Government can be made responsible for the disaster which ensued.

I am to request that his Lordship may be favoured with your opinion as to the course which should now be followed, and as to what steps (if any) can be taken to obtain compensation for the owners of the vessel, for those Europeans who survived, and for the families of the Europeans and Asiatics who were lost.

I have, &c.

Report.

In our opinion, a claim may properly be made on the Chinese Government for compensation.

The Chinese Government, having chartered the vessel, put Chinese troops on board her. These troops refused to allow the captain and crew to follow the Japanese man-of-war into port—the only reasonable course—and took possession of the vessel for the purpose of resistance, a course which naturally ended in the destruction of the vessel and loss of life.

No claim can be sustained against the Japanese Government, who were within their rights in treating as they did, in time of war, a vessel engaged in a belligerent operation which refused to surrender.

The Chinese Government are, in our opinion, responsible for the conduct of their troops on board, especially as it was led and directed by the Chinese Generals in command, and the loss of the vessel was the direct result. The vessel would have been brought safe into port if they had allowed the captain and crew to act as they desired. It is true that she might have been confiscated by the Japanese Government as having been engaged in an act of belligerency, but it is not certain that this right would have been insisted on as against a British vessel under the circumstances, and the loss of life to the crew would certainly not have taken place. Moreover, in our opinion, the Chinese Government cannot set up the possible loss of the ship in some other way as an answer to a claim against them for a loss occasioned by the action of their officers, assuming they are responsible for such action.

The Chinese Government were the charterers, and if their representatives on board take a course likely to cause, and which does cause, the loss of the vessel, and loss of life among the crew, it appears to us that they are liable.

A private charterer, whose representatives on board acted in this way, would be liable in an action at law, and, in our opinion, there is a claim against the Chinese Government which may properly be pressed by diplomatic action. We approve of the proposed letter.

Annex.

Draft of a letter to the Chinese Government.

THE "Kow-Shing," a British registered ship, the property of the Indo-China Steam Navigation Company, was chartered by the Chinese Government to convey troops to Corea. She left Taku on the 23rd July. On the 25th July, while on her way, she was stopped and boarded by the Japanese vessel of war "Naniwa." The purpose of her journey having been ascertained, she was ordered to follow the "Naniwa." The European officers were ready to obey this order, but the General commanding the Chinese troops refused to consent, and this being communicated to the "Naniwa," she fired a torpedo and broadside into the "Kow-Shing," sinking her almost immediately. Some of the European officers were saved, including the master, Captain Galsworthy, the mate, Mr. Tamplin, and a German officer, Captain von Hanneken, who was in Chinese employ as military instructor. The Chinese officers and about 1,100 troops went down with the ship.

Her Majesty's Government have most carefully considered all the circumstances connected with the destruction of the "Kow-Shing."

The notification that a state of war existed between China and Japan was made by the Japanese Government on the 1st August, but, as a matter of fact, hostile operations between the naval forces of the two countries had actually occurred upon the 25th July, before the "Kow-Shing" was stopped and boarded by the "Naniwa," for a few hours previously an engagement had taken place between a Chinese and one or more Japanese war-vessels, a Chinese man-of-war had passed the "Kow-Shing" bearing marks of injury from shot, and flying the Japanese colours as a ruse and the "Naniwa" herself had a shot in her boiler-room.

Hostilities had therefore begun, and it is recognized in practice, and is not inconsistent with the principles of the law of nations, that war may be commenced and a state of war exist without any formal declaration of war.

The service upon which the "Kow-Shing" was engaged, though it may have been peaceable and lawful in its inception, was of such a nature as, when war had broken out, to warrant the exercise of belligerent rights on the part of Japan, and to subject the vessel, if she wished to preserve her neutrality, to the obligations of a neutral. She was employed in carrying Chinese troops and materials of war to Corea.

Japan was entitled to refuse to permit this, and to insist that she should not proceed to her destination. The master was ready, in discharge of his neutral obligations, to acquiesce in the orders given with this object by the Captain of the "Naniwa," but the Chinese military officers on board the "Kow-Shing" forcibly took the command into their own hands, and did this with belligerent intentions, having in view active opposition to the naval forces of Japan. The "Kow-Shing" was then no longer under the control of her neutral British Commander. She had become, in fact, a belligerent.

The Captain of the "Naniwa," who was acquainted with this state of affairs, was therefore entitled to treat her as a belligerent, and there is no principle of international law on which a claim for redress on the part of the owners against the Government of Japan can be based.

It must also be borne in mind that at the date, the 17th July, when the "Kow-Shing" was chartered, the possibility of war between China and Japan was contemplated, as it was specially provided in the charter-party that, in the event of hostilities breaking out between China and Japan, the vessel should at once be dispatched to Shanghae, when the charter would terminate, the alternative being reserved to the charterer to purchase the ship outright.

In view, therefore, of the facts that the "Kow-Shing" was engaged in the service of conveying Chinese troops to the seat of war after the actual commencement of hostilities, and that the British master of the "Kow-Shing" had been divested by duress of his command of the vessel, whose actual control had passed into the hands of the Chinese military officers on board, Her Majesty's Government were advised on the highest legal authority that the liability rests with China to make good the losses caused to British subjects and property.

It is, therefore, the duty of Her Majesty's Government to present to the Chinese Government the claim put forward by the owners of the "Kow-Shing." As will be seen from the inclosed statement it is divided into two parts. According to the charter-party the sum which the Chinese Government engaged to refund in the event of the "Kow-Shing" not being returned to her owners amounts to 205,000 dollars. In addition to this sum, compensation is claimed on behalf of the Europeans and Asiatics who were on board the ship, and interest at the rate of 7 per cent. is charged on the aggregate.

Her Majesty's Government request that the Chinese Government will appoint some person to discuss with the Foreign Office the details of the claim put forward by the owners of the ship.

Detention of Sun Yat Sen in Chinese Legation in London.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, the accompanying collection of printed papers relative to the detention of a person of Chinese origin named Sun Yat Sen or Sun Wen, in the Chinese Legation in London.

There is some discrepancy in the accounts of the parties concerned as to the circumstances under which Sun Yat Sen visited the Chinese Legation, but there can be no doubt that, having come inside on the 11th October, he was kept a close prisoner till, through the intervention of this Department, he was released on the 23rd October, after the Chinese Minister had made a formal reservation of his diplomatic rights.

In the note addressed to the Chinese Minister, which is also inclosed, demanding the release of the prisoner, Lord Salisbury stated that the man's detention against his will in the Chinese Legation was, in the opinion of Her Majesty's Government, an infraction of English law, which was not covered by, and was an abuse of, the diplomatic privilege accorded to a foreign Representative. But in view of the reservation made by the Chinese Minister, and in order to prevent the recurrence of so flagrant a violation of municipal and international law, his Lordship has thought it advisable that the views entertained by Her Majesty's Government on the subject should be formally recorded in a communication to be made to the Chinese Government by Her Majesty's Minister at Peking. For this purpose a draft of a despatch to Sir Claude MacDonald has been prepared, and is now inclosed for your consideration. I am to request you to be good enough to state whether you concur in its language, and, if not, in what respects you think that its terms can with advantage be either altered or amended.

Lord Salisbury will be glad at the same time to receive any observations of a general nature which you may desire to offer upon the case.

Report.

The only suggestions we have to make are the following, viz., that for "visited" should be substituted the word "entered," as it is by no means clear that Sun Yat was not taken into the Embassy by force, and

That the language of the despatch should be guarded, so as to avoid the appearance of an admission that even a member of the Legation can be forcibly detained. There is a good deal of uncertainty as to the rights of an Ambassador over the members of his suite, and the point should, we think, be reserved.

As altered and initialled by us, we approve the draft despatch.

Foreign Office, December , 1896.

Sir,

THE inclosed collection of printed correspondence will make you acquainted with what has passed in regard to the detention of a person of Chinese origin named Sun Yat Sen or Sun Wen, in the Chinese Legation in London.

This individual states that he was born at Hong Kong, and, if this assertion be correct, he is, in contemplation of English law, a British subject. He appears to have been concerned in a conspiracy to overthrow the Viceroy and Government at Canton. His extradition, with that of two fellow conspirators, was demanded by the Canton authorities, but was refused by the Governor of Hong Kong on the ground that the offence with which they were charged was a political one. Sun Yat Sen had, however, left the Colony, and the Governor, considering that his return to Hong Kong would be very undesirable, issued a Decree of banishment against him. Sun Yat Sen went in the first instance to Hawaii. From Hawaii he came on to England, passing through the United States, and his departure from New York for Liverpool was reported by telegraph by the Chinese Legation at Washington to that in London. Sir Halliday Macartney thereupon called at this Office and inquired whether the extradition of a Chinese subject from this country could be obtained under Article XV of the Convention of the 1st March, 1894, relative to Burmah and Thibet, which provides for the mutual surrender of criminals, subjects of either country, on due requisition being made. He was informed that the Article obviously related only to extradition between China and Burmah, and that extradition of criminals from the United Kingdom could only be obtained in virtue of Conventions concluded in accordance with certain Acts of Parliament, and notified by Order in Council in the manner directed in those Acts. No such Convention, as he was aware, existed between this country and China.

There is some discrepancy as to the circumstances under which Sun Yat Sen ~~visited~~ entered the Chinese Legation, but all accounts agree that, having come inside the Legation on Sunday, the 11th ultimo, he was thereafter kept a close prisoner. He was confined in an upper room, the window of which was barred; the door was locked and carefully guarded; every precaution was taken to frustrate attempts on his part to communicate with his friends, and the window was nailed up on its being found that he had thrown notes out of it for that purpose. In consequence of the measures taken, the fact of his detention within the Legation did not become known to any one outside of it for more than a week, when his friends at last received information of the fact, and, upon depositions on the subject being brought to the knowledge of Her Majesty's Government, I at once addressed a note to the Chinese Minister, pointing out that his detention was an abuse of the diplomatic privilege enjoyed by the Chinese Legation, and requesting his immediate release. This request was complied with on Friday, the 23rd ultimo, after the man had been for twelve days in confinement, the Chinese Minister at the same making a reservation of his diplomatic rights.

I must request you to represent to the Chinese Government that, in the absence of any Treaty stipulations giving the Chinese Representative in this country extra-territorial jurisdiction over Chinese subjects, the detention within the Legation house of any person, ~~not belonging to the staff of the Legation~~, even though such person should be an undoubted subject of China, is a serious abuse of the privileges and immunities which are granted to foreign Representatives, and which have for their sole object to secure for such Representatives complete freedom and independence in the discharge of their mission. Her Majesty's Government are convinced that in no other European capital would such an act have been tolerated, and they consider that if persisted in or repeated, it would justify the use of whatever measures might be necessary for the liberation of the captive, and a demand for the immediate departure from this country of any persons responsible for his imprisonment. They trust, therefore, that the Chinese Government will give strict instructions to their Minister in London to abstain carefully for the future from any acts of the kind.

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, April 2, 1896.

Gentlemen,

Diseases of Animals Bill. Exceptional treatment of Iceland.

I HAVE the honour, by the direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to submit to you the papers enumerated in the accompanying list, in connection with the amendments to the Diseases of Animals Bill which now stand in the Order Book of the House of Commons, and the object of which is to accord by Statute exceptional treatment, either to the Colonies as a whole, or to certain specified Colonies, viz., Canada and New Zealand, and to one foreign country, viz., Iceland.

It is important that Her Majesty's Government should know, before the discussion in the House of Commons of these amendments, which may probably take place on the 13th instant, how far the proposals to grant such exceptional treatment would be consistent with the existing Treaty engagements of Her Majesty with other Powers.

A copy of the Bill is inclosed (marked Paper A), from which its precise provisions will be learnt. Copies of the amendments above referred to are also annexed to the Bill for convenience of consideration.

It will be seen that the Bill which amends the Diseases of Animals Act, 1894 (Paper B), provides that all foreign cattle imported into the United Kingdom shall be slaughtered at the port of entry, and that it is desired to make exceptions in the case of cattle introduced from the places above mentioned.

With regard to the question of preferential treatment in favour of British Colonies, little doubt is felt that the proposed amendments would not conflict with our existing Treaty stipulations with foreign Powers. This view is supported by the L.O.R. 1882 (Conf. 4783), p. 42. inclosed Report of the 14th January, 1882, from the then Law Officers of the Crown (Paper C), who, when considering the position of the Colonies with reference to the most-favoured-nation clauses in various Treaties between this country and foreign Powers, stated, inter alia, that they concurred "in the view that the most-favoured-nation clause does not affect the right of this country to extend to the produce of its Colonies more favourable treatment than it accords to the produce of foreign or third countries; and that the question of admitting colonial produce on more favourable terms than similar produce of foreign countries with which Great Britain has entered into most-favoured-nation stipulations is entirely a question of policy."

Copies of the Treaties to which it is thought desirable to draw attention in this connection are inclosed, and special reference will be made to their provisions later on in the present letter.

His Lordship's attention has been called to the stipulations of the Anglo-Swiss Treaty of the 6th September, 1855, a copy of which is also inclosed (Paper D) as bearing upon this point, and it is, therefore, thought expedient to bring to your notice its provisions, which are exceptionally wide, although it is presumed that it will be held not materially to affect the immediate question at issue.

Article VIII of that Treaty provides that:—

"In all that relates to the importation into . . . . . and the exportation from their respective territories of any article of lawful commerce, the two Contracting Parties engage that their respective subjects and citizens shall be placed upon the same footing as subjects and citizens of the country."

It is, perhaps, open to question whether this might not be held to preclude preferential treatment in favour of any British Colony, but so wide an intertpreation of the Article would confer privileges of an unprecedented character, and would seem clearly opposed to the intention of the framers of the clause. Lord Salisbury is disposed, therefore, to think that the privileges granted to Swiss citizens by this Article would not form any obstacle to the exception which it is proposed to make in favour of Canada and New Zealand.

With regard to Iceland, the differentiation of treatment would, it is thought, infringe the stipulations of British Treaties with foreign Powers.

It seems probable that Article III of the Convention between this country and France of the 28th February, 1882, of which a copy is inclosed (Paper E), might be held to preclude such treatment. Under Article III, the High Contracting Parties engage not to enforce, one against the other, any prohibition of importation or exportation which shall "not at the same time be applicable to all other nations;" and this Article, when considered in reference to a permanent prohibition, rather than a temporary restriction, would seem scarcely to permit preferential treatment, even when read in connection with the conditional restrictions contained in the previous Article.

Article II provides that "each of the High Contracting Parties reserves to itself to decide, as regards goods and merchandize passing from one or other of the two countries, on such prohibitions or temporary restrictions of import, export, or transit which [sic] they may think necessary to inforce for sanitary reasons to prevent the spread of cattle diseases or the destruction of crops, or in the event of war."

The provisions of Article V of the Treaty of 1865 with the Zollverein, of which a copy is inclosed (Paper F), are still more explicit, and Treaties containing similar clauses have been concluded with many other Powers. As, however, that with the Zollverein is a typical example of such Treaties, it is not thought necessary for the purposes of the present reference to trouble you with copies of others.

Article V declares "that no prohibition of importation or exportation shall be established by either of them (the High Contracting Parties) against the other which shall not, at the same time, be applicable to all other nations."

This is not qualified, as is the case in the French Treaty, by any saving clause as to precautions against cattle disease, &c.

Its application would, therefore, appear conclusive against the proposed exception in the Bill in favour of Iceland.

I am to request that you will take the various papers transmitted herewith into your consideration, and that you will favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion on the following special points, viz.:—

Whether the exceptional treatment contemplated in the amendments to the Bill is consistent with the Treaty obligations of this country with other foreign Powers—

(a.) In the case of British Colonies generally, or of the Colonies specified in particular.

(b.) In the case of Iceland.

As well as with any observations of a more general nature which you may be disposed to offer on the subject of this reference.

Report.

1. In the case of British Colonies generally, and of the Colonies specified in particular, we are of opinion that the exceptional treatment contemplated in the amendments to the Bill which relate to these Colonies is consistent with the Treaty obligations of this country to foreign Powers.

Article VIII of the Treaty with Switzerland of the 6th September, 1855, appears to us in no way to fetter the power of this country to confer such a privilege upon cattle coming from Canada or any other Colony. Article VIII confers the same privileges on Swiss citizens as may be enjoyed by subjects or citizens of the most favoured nation or by the subjects of Great Britain. Swiss citizens will, if the Colonies be excepted, be exactly in the same position with regard to the importation of cattle into the United Kingdom as subjects or citizens of the most favoured nation, or as British subjects themselves, whether belonging to the United Kingdom or the Colonies. Cattle coming from an excepted Colony, by whomsoever imported, need not be slaughtered. Cattle coming from another country or Colony not excepted, by whomsoever imported, must be slaughtered.

Articles II and III of the Treaty with France of the 28th February, 1882, guaranteed to France the same treatment as may be accorded to other nations. But a British Colony is not, in our opinion, included within the words "most favoured nation" or "other nations," and these Articles have, therefore, no application.

The same observation applies to Articles II and V of the Treaty with the Zollverein of the 30th May, 1865. A British Colony is not a "third country" within the meaning of Article II, nor is it comprised within the term "other nations" in Article V.

Article VII of the same Treaty seems to us also to have no application, as we think that, both in its express terms and in the incorporation of Articles I to VI, as applied to the Colonies, its object was merely to place the Colonies in the same position with reference to the Zollverein as the United Kingdom, and its provisions relate only to traffic between the Colonies and the Zollverein, and cannot, either directly or indirectly, affect traffic between the Colonies and the United Kingdom.

2. In the case of Iceland, we are of opinion that the exceptional treatment contemplated by the amendments to the Bill is not consistent with the Treaty obligations of this country to foreign Powers.

Iceland is part of a foreign country, being a dependency of Denmark, and it appears to us clear that privileges extended to any part of a foreign country must, under the most-favoured-nation clauses and in such Treaties as those with France and Germany, be extended also to the countries with which these Treaties have been made.

In strictness, perhaps, it might be said that a provision that cattle shall be slaughtered as soon as landed is not a prohibition of their importation. But, in substance, it is, and we think that it must be treated as falling within the terms of Article III of the French Treaty and Article V of the German Treaty. Even if this point were arguable, Article II of the German Treaty, with reference to the treatment of the produce of the States of the Zollverein imported into this country, would render impossible the enforcement, in their case, of a provision for slaughter on landing of cattle which did not apply to cattle from all foreign countries.

The last clause of Article II of the French Treaty appears to us to relate only to prohibitions or restrictions of a more or less temporary nature, and not to such a permanent prohibition as is contemplated by the Bill.

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, December 10, 1896.

Gentlemen,

Interference of Icelandic authorities with British trawlers.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit to you herewith the printed correspondence, as marked in the accompanying list, which relates to the interference of the Icelandic authorities with British trawlers for contravention of the Icelandic Fisheries Law in waters adjacent to the coast of Iceland.

The text of the Law in question is contained in the despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at Reykjavik of the 27th August, 1894* (marked Paper A).

It will be seen that under section 1 of the Law, fishing by means of trawls is prohibited within the territorial waters of Iceland, and that under section 3 a fishing-vessel found within such waters with a trawl on board, although not engaged in fishing, is liable to a fine of 200 to 2,000 kroner, unless the ship is seeking a harbour in distress.

Heavier penalties are incurred for a repetition of the offence.

This Law received Royal Assent on the 10th November, 1894, and came into effect in the middle of the February following. Public notice thereof was given to British fishermen in the "London Gazette," through the Board of Trade Journal for December 1894, and by handbills distributed through the Board's officers at the ports concerned.

A considerable outcry was raised by the fishing community in this country, and the new enactment aroused a good deal of attention in Parliament and elsewhere, Her Majesty's Government being strongly urged to make representations to the Danish Government with a view to its repeal. Her Majesty's Government felt, however (see Board of Trade letter of the 15th March, 1895, Paper C), that the right of a country to prohibit foreigners from fishing in its waters and to make Regulations for the police of those waters was generally recognized, and that diplomatic representations could only properly be made in the event of penalties for a disregard of such prohibition or Regulations being absolutely of an unreasonable character.

The imposition of penalties for the mere presence of a vessel in territorial waters with a trawl on board was felt, however, to involve other considerations, and Her Majesty's Government were advised (see also Paper C) that on this head the Icelandic Law was not consonant with international comity.

Mr. Scott, Her Majesty's Minister at Copenhagen, was accordingly instructed to make a representation to the Danish Government with reference to the excessive severity of section 3. In reply to this representation, the Danish Government stated that they had no power to alter the provisions of the Law, but they would always be able practically to prevent, either by an act of grace or by abstaining from prosecution, its unjust application. They also stated that they were under the impression that trawling grounds did not exist outside the territorial waters of Iceland, the inference being that vessels would not come with trawls on board except to fish in territorial waters. Complete evidence to the contrary was, however, furnished by Her Majesty's Government (see Board of Trade letters of the 15th May and 17th July, 1895, Papers D and D 2), and Mr. Scott pressed for an alteration of the Law.

* Although therein referred to as a Bill, it will be seen from Mr. Scott's subsequent despatch (Paper B) that the Bill was ultimately passed in these precise terms, with the addition of the enacting words.

After considerable delay the Danish Government promised to use every effort to induce the Althing (Icelandic House of Representatives) to make such an alteration as would meet the objections raised by Her Majesty's Government.

It was pointed out, however, that any alteration of the Law could only be made by the Althing, which only meets every second year; that that body would not meet again till July 1897, and that, consequently, any amendment, even if enacted, could hardly be put in force until after the close of the trawling season for that year.

Up to the commencement of the recent fishing season section 3 of the Law had practically been suffered to remain in abeyance, but in the course of this summer its provisions were enforced with marked severity in the cases of a large number of British trawlers. Of these only one was fined for fishing within Icelandic waters, while three, the "Caspian," the "Porpoise," and the "Germania," were (as will be seen from the despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at Reykjavik of the 11th July, Paper E) fined 12*l.* each for passing inside the Westmann Isles on the way to their fishing-grounds, and thus crossing the territorial waters; and others, viz., the "St. Lawrence," "Oregon," and "Niagara," were also fined a similar amount for entering the harbour of Reykjavik in order to buy ice and provisions.

(The fines in the last six cases have either been or are about to be remitted as an act of grace by the Danish Government.)

The harsh measures above referred to produced great discontent and irritation among the trawlers, and, in view of this state of affairs, it was thought well to take advantage of the presence of the training squadron in those waters to investigate matters, and to obtain a report on the situation. A copy of Commodore Atkinson's report is inclosed in the letter from the Admiralty of the 23rd July, Paper (F), to which I am to call your attention as throwing valuable light on the whole subject.

Several interviews took place between the Governor of Iceland, the Commodore, and Her Majesty's Consul at Reykjavik. The harshness of the measures adopted was recognized by the Governor, but it was contended that the Icelanders were justified in using all lawful means to keep the trawlers away from their shores, as they were practically driving the native fishermen away from the banks, where the latter had gained their living from time immemorial, and the population of the district around Faxe Bay, who live almost exclusively by fishing, were likely to be reduced to starvation if the present state of affairs continued. The fishing banks in the Faxe Bay, which is the largest and most important fishing district in Iceland, lie for the most part at a distance of more than 3 miles from the coast, and are thus outside territorial limits It being admitted that there was a grievance on both sides, it seemed advisable to come to some compromise in the interests of both parties, and a temporary agreement or modus vivendi was arrived at between the Governor of Iceland and the Commodore to the following effect:—

"That, pending further arrangements between the Governments of Great Britain and Denmark, British trawlers may use and enjoy the hospitalities of any port in Iceland from this 10th day of July, 1896, on the west coast, and from the 25th day of July on the east coast, and use the waterways between Westmann Islands and Iceland, and between Reykjanes Point and the Fuglasker Rocks, providing their trawls are stowed, and not ready for fishing.

"In consideration thereof trawlers are not to trawl east of a line drawn from Ilunypa (near to Keflavik) to Thorsmodssker Islet, and are not to interfere with lines or nets set by the Icelanders to the east of this line."

The Board of Trade, to which Department this agreement was submitted with a view of considering how far it was suitable to form the basis of a more formal instrument, observe, in a letter of the 1st October, Paper (G), to which I am to invite your special attention, that:—

"The arrangement in question is to the effect that the Icelandic authorities will recognize the innocent use of their territorial waters and ports by our trawlers, provided that the latter do not attempt to fish in those waters or inside a special line drawn across Faxe Bay.

"An examination of the chart, of which a copy is inclosed, Paper (H), shows that, if our trawlers maintain respect for the above line, they will be relinquishing their right of fishery over an area of between 50 to 100 square miles lying outside the ordinary 3-mile limit, and the question arises whether they are to receive any corresponding benefit in return.

"It should at the outset be remarked that, in offering to recognize on terms the use of Icelandic waters and ports by our trawlers, the Governor is regarding as a concession that to which the trawlers are already entitled as a matter of international right; and it is necessary to place the question on a proper footing in this respect as a preliminary to considering the proposed compromise upon its merits. In this connection the Board are advised that:—

Firstly, the sovereignty of a State over its territorial waters is subject to the acknowledged right of merchant-vessels to innocent passage for the purpose of navigation.

Secondly, it is at least deemed to be an unfriendly act to refuse commercial intercourse with another nation, even if it cannot be said to amount to a breach of international law.

"Thirdly, to treat as a criminal offence the peaceful and innocent presence of a foreign vessel in the harbours of any State, when due to accident or stress of adverse circumstances (treating as the only exception a vessel seeking a harbour in distress) is a flagrant breach of the international duty of hospitality towards a friendly State."

In support of their view in regard to the first point, i.e., the right of innocent passage, the Board quote the observations of the late Mr. W. E. Hall in his "Treatise on International Law" (4th Edition, p. 164).

"Section 42. In all cases in which territorial waters are so placed that passage over them is either necessary or convenient for the navigation of open seas, as in that of marginal waters or of an appropriated strait connecting unappropriated waters, they are subject to a right of innocent use by all mankind for the purposes of commercial navigation. . . . . For more than 250 years no European territorial marine waters which could be used as a thoroughfare, or into which vessels could accidentally stray or be driven, have been closed to commercial navigation, and during the present century no such waters have been closed in any part of the civilized world. The right, therefore, must be considered to be established in the most complete manner."

Mr. Hall states, in a note, "that the case of gulfs or other inlets would seem to be upon a different footing, except in so far as they are used for purposes of refuge. Any right to their navigation must be founded on a right of access to the State itself." This right is treated of by the Board under head 2, which has reference to commercial intercourse.

It seems, however, unnecessary to take into account, in the present case, the unsettled state of international law with respect to gulfs, bays, or other inlets, for the Governor of Iceland himself practically admits that the present question is one of concession on the part of foreign Powers, while the Danish Government, at any rate for the last forty years, does not seem to have claimed to include Faxe Bay within the territorial waters of Iceland.

In support of the second point, viz., as to the right to use the ports of a State for the purposes of provisioning, &c., the Board again rely on the opinion of Mr. Hall, who, in treating of the moral obligations or duties of States as between themselves, observes (§ 13, p. 58) that there are but two—both arising out of the duty of sociability—which can at all be said to put in "a serious claim to fall within the boundaries of law." One of these relates to commercial and other intercourse, with respect to which Mr. Hall writes as follows:—

"It is not uncommonly said that nations have a right to maintain intercourse, if it so pleases them, with other nations; that an entire refusal on the part of a State to allow of intercourse, by being a denial of a fundamental obligation, is a renunciation of the advantages of international law, so that a nation becomes an outlaw by isolating itself, and that, in particular, the innocent use of the land and water communications within the territory of a State cannot be withheld from other States, and the privilege of trade in articles of necessity cannot be refused. The doctrine is no doubt limited by the qualification that a State may take what measures of precaution it considers needful to prevent the right of access and intercourse from being used to its injury, and may subject foreigners and foreign trade to regulation in the interest either of its own members or of States which it wishes to favour. In the last resort, however, there would still remain a right, taking priority of the rights of independence and property, and capable of being enforced, if broken by war."

There is, of course, a wide distinction between the "regulation of foreigners and foreign trade," and the entire refusal of commercial intercourse.

With regard to the third point, the Board observe that if the right to commercial intercourse, or the purposes of trade can be placed so high as in any degree to amount to "a serious claim to fall within the boundaries of law," the pretension of the Althing to exclude a trawler from territorial waters when without intention to trade or to trawl would be altogether unwarranted and inadmissible. But it is pointed out that the Althing has gone even beyond this, and has made it a criminal offence for "a vessel to be found within territorial waters having a trawl on board, although not actually engaged in fishing at the time."

The Board consider it clear that a variety of causes short of the necessity of seeking a harbour in actual distress, but wholly consistent with legitimate business and innocent navigation, may compel or lead a trawler with a trawl on board unintentionally to infringe this law. It is, in their opinion, not too much to say that this treatment is a flagrant departure from the usages of civilized nations, and a Law which expressly sanctions it, is really intolerable. A Law of this kind becomes still more serious when it is admittedly directed against the vessels of a single nation, and is both rigidly interpreted and rigidly enforced as it has been this summer.

It might, it is thought, be competent for the Althing to enact, as a matter of "regulation," that when in territorial waters a trawl shall be stowed, but that this would be the extent of its powers.

In these circumstances it would be, in the opinion of the Board, unjust to British trawlers even to take the proposed arrangement into serious consideration without a preliminary recognition by the Danish Government upon all the points in question that the trawlers' claims to redress are a matter of right on their part, and not a matter of favour or concession on the part of the Icelandic authorities, and, further, without an absolute pledge for the abrogation of the portion of the Icelandic Law of November 1894 which embodies the obnoxious enactment above referred to.

In view of these considerations, Lord Salisbury would wish, before going further in the matter, to be favoured with your opinion as to whether it is a matter of international obligation, either as an accepted principle of international law or as a matter of international comity and right conduct as between civilized States:—

1. To permit the innocent passage of merchant-vessels through the territorial waters of the State for the purpose of navigation.

2. To permit commercial intercourse with another State.

3. To permit the presence of trawlers within territorial waters when not fishing or intending to fish or to trade.

His Lordship would also be glad to receive any observations which you may be disposed to offer on the case generally.

Besides the papers to which I have been directed to draw your special attention, a printed collection of papers bearing on the subject is also sent herewith in case you should desire to refer to them.

I am to add, for your information, that the Iceland fishing season being now at an end no British trawlers will, in the natural course, again resort to the coasts of Iceland until next spring, but in the meantime communications will be made with the owners of trawlers engaged in the Iceland fishing with a view either to secure their observance of the terms of Commodore Atkinson's Agreement, or to induce them in some other way to meet, as far as possible, the reasonable complaints of the Iceland fishermen.

I have, &c.

Report.

1. That, it is an accepted principle of international law that the innocent passage of merchant-vessels for the purposes of navigation should be permitted through territorial waters. But this right is subject to any reasonable restrictions which the State may impose with the object of preventing the right of passage being abused for the commission of acts forbidden in its territorial waters. In the present case we should be of opinion that it would be quite reasonable for the Icelandic Government to permit the passage of trawlers, only if their trawls were properly stowed. The use of trawls in the territorial waters is illegal by the law of Iceland, and it is only a reasonable precaution against the evasion of this law to require that trawlers passing through territorial waters should have their trawls properly stowed, and not ready to be shot.

2. There is no principle of international law imposing upon any State (apart from Treaty) the duty of permitting commercial intercourse.

It would, however, be a violation of international comity and of right conduct as between civilized States to forbid such intercourse without some adequate reason.

In the present case the Government of Iceland allege that the trawlers by their operations outside the territorial waters, but in the vicinity of Iceland, are making the prosecution of the line fishery by the Icelanders impossible, and destroying the fishery beds, and they decline to allow their ports to be used as a base for such operations.

We do not think that Her Majesty's Government can properly treat this as a breach of international comity or right conduct. We think the reason for the exclusion of trawlers is adequate.

The trawlers are entitled to prosecute their industry outside the territorial waters, although this inflicts injury and may entail ruin on the Iceland fishermen, but, in our opinion, the Icelandic Government is within its rights in refusing the use of Icelandic ports for the prosecution of an industry so detrimental to their subjects.

3. There is no obligation of any kind on the Government of Iceland to permit the presence of trawlers within territorial waters, except for the purpose of innocent passage as above defined.

The arrangement made by the Commodore seems to us to be reasonable, and, so far as we can judge, in the interests of the British trawlers.

FRANCE.

No. 15 A. [Home Office.]

[January 15, 1896.]

Case for the Law Officers of the Crown.

Extradition of Cornelius Herz.

ON the 14th August, 1876, a Treaty for Extradition was concluded with France, which was ratified at Paris on the 8th April, 1878.* On the 16th May, 1878, the Extradition Acts were applied in the case of France by an Order in Council, which duly recited and embodied this Treaty. Copy of this is annexed.†

Article VII of the Treaty provides that when in this country a person has been apprehended in pursuance of a claim made by the French Government for his surrender, "he shall be brought before the Police Magistrate who issued the warrant, or some other Police Magistrate in London."

Before the present year the evidence in support of any claim for extradition could not be heard elsewhere than at some proper place within the jurisdiction of the Police Court of Bow Street. On this point the Law Officers are referred to an Opinion given by their predecessors on the 23rd October, 1893, which is sent herewith.

Cornelius Herz, whose extradition is claimed by France, was arrested at Bournemouth on a warrant issued by the Chief Magistrate, and his health being such as not to allow of his being brought to London, the law did not permit of his case being heard at all, and he remains in custody at Bournemouth.

---

* Treaty No. 619.

† Confidential Paper No. 3623.

To meet this difficulty the Act, of which a copy is annexed, was passed last Session, and gives power to the Secretary of State in certain circumstances to issue his order for the hearing of a case under the Extradition Acts elsewhere than at Bow Street.

In the course of drafting the Bill, a difficulty arose in consequence of the fact that the French and certain other Treaties appear to provide for the hearing of the application for extradition in London only. Power could not, therefore, be given to the Secretary of State simply to order the hearing to take place elsewhere without a violation of the rights of foreign nations under such Treaties. To effect this object the words in section 1, "if it appears to him" (the Secretary of State) "consistent with the Order in Council under 'The Extradition Act, 1870,' applicable to the case" were inserted. The intention was that, in the first place, a modification of the Treaty should be agreed on between the Powers, and then that an Order in Council under section 2 of the Act of 1870 should be issued applying this new Convention.

The French Government have been approached for the purpose of arranging a modification of the existing Treaty, but though they have agreed to such an arrangement being made, and have, moreover, expressed their desire that advantage may be taken of the Act of last Session to deal as speedily as possible with the case of Cornelius Herz, no formal arrangement has yet been concluded. No fresh Order in Council can therefore be made, and the question arises whether to hear the case in question at Bournemouth would be consistent with the Order in Council of the 16th May, 1878.

The procedure contemplated in Article VII of the Treaty was undoubtedly that in every case the hearing should be at Bow Street and nowhere else, but it has been contended that the words used do not clearly preclude another course being adopted, and that it would not be inconsistent with them for the accused party to be brought before the Police Magistrate who issued the warrant of arrest at some place elsewhere than in London. The question is whether the words "in London" in Article VII, clause (a), paragraph 3, apply only to the words, "some other Police Magistrate" immediately preceding, or to the whole of the sentence. If they apply only to the words immediately preceding—that is, whether they specify the place to which the fugitive is to be brought or are merely descriptive of the Magistrate before whom he is to be brought—the examination can be conducted at Bournemouth by the Police Magistrate who issued the warrant. It is urged that the French text of the Treaty supports this view, but it is submitted that the French text cannot be used to interpret the law binding on English Courts.

It is, however, to be observed that there is no ambiguity in the French words, while the English words are ambiguous, and as the Treaty must if possible be read as having the same meaning in both the French and English versions, the unambiguous words of the French Treaty ought to be adopted.

The Law Officers are asked to advise whether, in view of the terms of Article VII of the Treaty and the procedure which was undoubtedly contemplated when those terms were made, it would or would not be consistent with the Order in Council embodying the Treaty of 1876 for the Secretary of State to issue directions for the hearing of Herz' case by the Chief Magistrate at Bournemouth.

Opinion.

We are of opinion that it would not be consistent with the Order in Council to issue directions for the hearing of Herz' case at Bournemouth.

The Order in Council applies in the case of this Treaty the Acts 33 & 34 Vict., and 36 & 37 Vict. We entirely agree with the Opinion given by the Law Officers in 1893, that, under these Acts, the hearing must take place in London.

The proposed Order would be inconsistent with the Order in Council which applied to the Treaty the procedure of these Acts.

Foreign Office, January 22, 1896.

Gentlemen,

Pillage by French troops of deserted houses of British Indians in Madagascar.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you herewith, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, the papers noted in the accompanying list which relate to the claims of certain British Indian subjects in Madagascar arising out of the pillage of their stores at Mevatanana in June last by troops forming part of the late French punitive expedition.

The British Vice-Consul at Mojanga, in his despatch of the 20th November, 1895 (Paper A), reports that on the taking of Mevatanana on the 10th June by the advance guard of the French expedition, several stores belonging to British Indian subjects, which had been left without any one in charge of them, were either pillaged or their contents taken by order of the French Commander for the use of his troops.

Mr. Knott forwards copies of a correspondence which took place between himself and the French military authorities with regard to a claim made by a British Indian in respect of goods taken from his stores in these circumstances, from which it will be seen that the French Commander-in-chief has declined to admit, or even to discuss, claims of this character, on the ground that, by the laws of war, the victor is entitled to consider any uninhabited house as being without an owner, or as belonging to the enemy, and to dispose of it according to his requirements.

On receipt of Mr. Knott's despatch, the chief recognized authorities on international law were examined, but no allusion could be found to any rule of war with regard to the special treatment of deserted houses, and Lord Salisbury thereupon asked to be favoured with the opinion of the Secretary of State for War with reference to the principle put forward by General Duchesne.

The reply received from that Department is inclosed (Paper B), in which it is stated that, in the opinion of the military advisers of the Secretary of State, property in an unoccupied house might fairly be considered as belonging to the enemy, and as such liable to seizure. At the same time it is stated that although the "Official Manual of Military Law" contains certain paragraphs (which are mentioned) bearing generally on the question, there is nothing in that Manual which exactly meets the case in point.

In a later despatch, dated the 13th ultimo (Paper C), Mr. Knott states that the French Commander-in-chief declines to take any cognizance of claims of the nature above referred to.

In these circumstances, I am to request that you will be good enough to take the matter into your consideration, and to favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion on the contention of the French military authorities with regard to property found by a belligerent in uninhabited houses, and whether, in the event of your seeing reason to dissent—either wholly or in part—from the principle laid down by General Duchesne, you consider that the claim now more particularly in question can properly be supported diplomatically by Her Majesty's Government, and, if so, to what extent, and on what grounds.

I am, &c.

Report.

Property belonging to a neutral in an enemy's country stands in strictness on the same footing with property belonging to the enemy. The question in each case is whether the property has been dealt with in accordance with the laws and usages of war.

A neutral, however, whose property has been dealt with otherwise than in accordance with the laws and usages of war, may, through the medium of his own Government, be able to obtain redress which might be denied under like circumstances to a member of the State against which the war is being waged.

The limits within which private property on land may be seized and appropriated in the case of military operations are not very clearly defined by international law.

The principle put forward by General Duchesne that if the owner has relinquished possession it may be dealt with at pleasure, appears to us to be absolutely unsustainable. The owner, whether neutral or enemy, by seeking safety in flight, cannot be considered as abandoning his property to the invading army.

The right to levy contributions for the support of the invading force is generally recognized, but such contributions ought, as far as possible, to fall equally upon all the inhabitants of the place or district where they are levied.

The right of seizing food or forage, or other articles immediately wanted for the supply of the invading army, is one that is commonly exercised, and cannot, we think, be regarded as contrary to international law. The practice of paying for any articles taken seems to be peculiar to England.

It does not appear very clearly whether the Hindoo's property was taken for the immediate supplies of the French army, or was pillaged.

We think that the French authorities should be informed that the principle contended for by them with regard to property in uninhabited houses cannot be admitted by Her Majesty's Government. A claim may fairly be put forward for compensation, if on investigation, to be conducted by or with the concurrence of the French authorities, it should appear that this property has really been pillaged by the French troops or made away with as alleged. But if it should appear upon such investigation that the property was taken by the authority of the Commanding officer for the supply of the troops, we do not think that compensation could be insisted on, as a matter of international right, as the practice of English Commanders in these matters has not been generally adopted as binding upon belligerents.

Foreign Office, February 18, 1896.

Gentlemen,

Extradition Treaty with France. Draft Order in Council, applying.

WITH reference to your Report of the 30th September last (Paper A), I have the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, the accompanying draft of an Order in Council (Paper B), applying the Extradition Acts, 1870 and 1873, in the case of a Convention between Great Britain and France, signed at Paris on the 13th instant (Paper C).

This Convention amends Articles VII and IX of the Extradition Treaty between the two countries of the 14th August, 1876 (Paper D), to which the Extradition Acts, 1870 and 1873, were applied by an Order in Council dated the 16th May, 1878, (Paper E).

The terms of the draft Order in Council are concurred in by the Secretary of State for the Home Department; but it has been suggested that it might perhaps be desirable to recite in the preamble the Extradition Act, 1895 (Paper F), and to apply the Extradition Acts 1870 to 1895 in the case of the Convention of the 13th February, 1896.

Lord Salisbury has, moreover, some doubt whether, in view of the fact that the Convention only modifies the existing Treaty, in so far as the Treaty stipulates that cases shall be heard at Bow Street, it is necessary to make any reference in the draft Order to the Canadian Act of 1886, and to the Order in Council of the 17th November, 1888, suspending the operation in Canada of the Extradition Acts 1870 and 1873.

I am to request that you will take the inclosed papers into your consideration, and that you will favour his Lordship with your opinion whether the draft Order in 1896

Council (Paper B) may, in its present form, properly be laid before the Queen in Council for Her Majesty's approval, or whether you are of opinion that modifications (and, if so, what modifications) may advantageously be made in its present wording for the purpose of meeting the suggestions indicated above, or otherwise.

I am, in requesting that you will be so good as to indicate on the draft such alterations (if any) as you may consider desirable, to add that his Lordship would alos be glad to be furnished with any general observations which you may wish to offer after perusal of the accompanying papers.

As it is expected that the ratifications of the Convention of the 13th February, 1896, will be exchanged almost at once, Lord Salisbury is anxious that the draft Order should be ready to be laid before the Queen at the Council which it is intended to hold on Saturday next, the 22nd instant.

I have, &c.

We are of opinion that the draft Order in Council (Paper B), as modified by us, may properly be laid before the Queen in Council for Her Majesty's approval.

We have made the modifications which we consider desirable upon the draft in red ink initialled by us.

We think it is unnecessary to recite the Canadian Act and Order relating thereto, but the proviso as to Canada is, we think, necessary to prevent it being supposed that the application of the Extradition Acts to the Treaty, as modified by the Convention, extends to Canada.

Annex.

WHEREAS by the Extradition Acts, 1870 to 1895, it was amongst other things enacted that, where an arrangement has been made with any foreign State with respect to the surrender to such State of any fugitive criminals, Her Majesty may, by Order in Council, direct that the said Acts shall apply in the case of such foreign State; and that Her Majesty may, by the same or any subsequent Order, limit the operation of the Order, and restrict the same to fugitive criminals who are in or suspected of being in the part of Her Majesty's dominions specified in the Order, and render the operation thereof subject to such conditions, exceptions, and qualifications as may be deemed expedient; ~~and that if, by any law made after the passing of the Act of 1870 by the Legislature of any British possession, provision is made for carrying into effect within such possession the surrender of fugitive criminals who are in or suspected of being in such British possession, Her Majesty may, by the Order in Council applying the said Acts in the case of any foreign State, or by any subsequent Order, suspend the operation within any such British possession of the said Acts or of any part thereof, so far as it relates to such foreign State, and so long as such Law continues in force there and no longer~~:

~~And whereas by an Act of the Parliament of Canada passed in 1886, and entitled "An Act respecting the Extradition of Fugitive Criminals," provision is made for carrying into effect within the Dominion the surrender of fugitive criminals~~:

~~And whereas by an Order of Her Majesty the Queen in Council, dated the 17th day of November, 1888, it was directed that the operation of the Extradition Acts, 1870 and 1873, should be suspended within the Dominion of Canada so long as the provision of the said Act of the Parliament of Canada of 1886 should continue in force and no longer~~:

And whereas a Convention was concluded on the 13th day of February, 1896, between Her Majesty and the President of the French Republic amending Articles VII and IX of the Extradition Treaty of the 14th August, 1876, for the mutual extradition of fugitive criminals which Convention is in the terms following:—

[Here follows the Convention of the 13*th February*, 1896.]

And whereas the ratifications of the said Convention were exchanged at Paris on the * day of , 1896.

Now, therefore, Her Majesty, by and with the advice of Her Privy Council, and in virtue of the authority committed to her by the said recited Acts, doth order, and it is hereby ordered, that from and after the † day of , 1896, the said Acts shall apply in the case of France, and of the said Convention with the President of the French Republic and of the said Extradition Treaty as modified by the said Convention.

Effect of Diseases of Animals Bill on Anglo-French Commercial Treaty of 1882.

Gentlemen,
Foreign Office, May 2, 1896.

WITH reference to your Report of the 13th ultimo, on the subject of the Bill now before Parliament for the purpose of amending the Diseases of Animals Act, 1894, I have the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit herewith a Memorandum, communicated to his Lordship by the French Ambassador at this Court, taking exception to the terms of the Bill on the ground that they conflict with the provisions of Article II of the Commercial Convention between this country and France of the 28th February, 1882.

I am at the same time to submit a draft of the reply, which Lord Salisbury would propose to return to Baron de Courcel, and to request that you will be so good as to take it into your consideration and inform his Lordship whether its terms meet with your concurrence, or whether on the other hand its language may, in your opinion, with advantage be modified or amended, and if so in what respects.

A copy of the Anglo-French Convention of 1882 is also annexed for convenience of reference.

I am, &c.

We approve of the draft reply.

We think it right to point out that the clause at the end of Article II is a qualification of the right to treatment of the most-favoured nation. Differential treatment may be justified under that clause if it falls within its scope.

Sir,

I REFERRED to the Board of Agriculture the Memorandum communicated to me on the 22nd March last by Baron de Courcel, in which exception was taken by your Government to the terms of the Bill to amend "The Diseases of Animals Act, 1894," as conflicting with the provisions of Article II of the Commercial Convention between this country and France of the 28th February, 1882.

The last paragraph of Article II of that Convention is as follows:—

"It is understood that each of the two High Contracting Parties reserves to itself to decide as regards goods and merchandize passing from one or other of the two countries, on such prohibitions or temporary restrictions of import, export, or transit, which they may think necessary to enforce, for sanitary reasons, to prevent the spread of cattle diseases or the destruction of crops, or in view of events of war."

Article III stipulates that "the High Contracting Parties engage not to enforce one against the other any prohibition of importation or exportation which shall not at the same time be applicable to all other nations."

I have the honour to observe that the impression that the Bill would be inconsistent with these provisions appears to be due to a misconception of its practical scope and object.

It is simply proposed to enact, as a sanitary precaution, that all cattle landed shall be slaughtered within a specified time after importation, internal sanitary measures of such a character being clearly within the exclusive competence of Her Majesty's Government.

In such circumstances no discrepancy could arise between the international obligations of Her Majesty under the Convention and the provisions of English municipal law, unless in the case of the application of differential treatment in favour of any particular country. No such treatment is, however, contemplated in the Bill.

For this reason Her Majesty's Government are of opinion, after careful consideration, that the present Bill in no way infringes the Convention; but I have further to observe, with reference to the point raised by the French Government, that if it were proposed by legislation to prohibit, for sanitary purposes the importation of live cattle, the principle of such prohibition, if not differential, is expressly admitted by the terms of the IIIrd Article of the Convention as above quoted.

"The Mail-ships Act, 1891." Interpretation of "real security" in § 3.

WE are of opinion that the words "real security," in section 3, sub-section 2 (a), of "The Mail-ships Act, 1891," must be read as meaning security upon land.

For this purpose only the words of the Act can be looked at, and the words "real security" have, in English law, a well-defined technical meaning, and denote security on land. It follows that the words cannot, in our opinion, be read as meaning that the security is to be real in the sense of substantial.

We do not think that Article III of the Convention can be read as stipulating that a mere personal security should be accepted. The English as well as the French version must be looked at, and even assuming that the French word "caution" denotes personal suretyship only, the English version provides that the bond must be guaranteed by security within the jurisdiction of the Tribunals of the country in which the bond may have been entered into, thus leaving it open to Great Britain to determine whether the security should be merely personal or should be upon property of some kind.

The French Government have, however, in our opinion, legitimate ground of complaint, on account of the hard and fast line laid down by "The Mail-ships Act, 1891," that the security must be real security. We therefore recommend that the words complained of in section 3, sub-section 2 (a), of the Act should be got rid of. For this purpose we are of opinion that legislation is necessary.

Power is indeed given by the Act to apply it with "exceptions" or "modifications," but we think that a fresh Order in Council applying the Act with the exception of the words in question would violate the express enactment of the Legislature.

The power to make exceptions would apply to the manner of application, or the subject to which the Act was to be applied, but would not extend to altering its provisions by leaving out some words from a section.

With respect to the amendment of the sub-section, the following amendment would, in our opinion, give proper effect to Article V of the Convention:—

"The security shall be the bond of the owner guaranteed either:

"(a.) By the personal security of one or more responsible sureties within the jurisdiction of the High Court; or

"(b.) By the payment or transfer into Court of cash or consols, as the case may be."

Foreign Office, June 6, 1896.

Gentlemen,

Effect of Madagascar becoming a French Colony on Treaties with foreign Powers.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, the papers noted in the accompanying list, which relate to the position of affairs created by the new relations between France and Madagascar.

It will be seen from the text of the Ministerial statement made by the French Minister for Foreign Affairs in the Chamber of Deputies on the 30th ultimo (Paper B), that the French Government has submitted the draft of a law declaring the island of Madagascar and the islands dependent upon it to be a French Colony. One reason for this step is stated to be the wish to settle the question of the claims of foreign Powers arising out of Treaties with the Queen of Madagascar, and it is assumed by the French Government that these Treaties will cease to be operative on the passage by the Chambers of the proposed law.

There is no doubt that there are many circumstances in which annexation may take place which would justify the French assumption. The Report by the Law Officers of the Crown of the 18th December, 1885 (Paper C), on the occasion of the conquest of Burmah by Great Britain, ran as follows:—

"The conquest of the King of Burmah, and the military occupation of his territory have given the Crown the right to extinguish the independent existence of the State of Upper Burmah. If the Crown thinks fit to exercise this right, all Treaties which the King of Burmah or his predecessors may have made with foreign Powers will thereupon cease to exist."

When Germany, in 1890, acquired the territories of the Sultan of Zanzibar, on the East Africa mainland, which now form part of the German possessions, it was claimed by the German Government that the annexation had extinguished the Sultan's Treaties, and the claim has not been disputed.

But there are circumstances connected with the French position in Madagascar which render it of an exceptional character.

On the 27th December, 1885, the French Government authorized its Representative in London to give to Her Majesty's Government the following explicit assurance regarding the Treaty between France and Madagascar of the 17th of that month:—

"Le Traité ne change rien aux Traités actuellement existants entre le Gouvernement Hova et les autres États. Au surplus, il n'est jamais entré dans notre pensée de

There is no doubt that there are many circumstances in which annexation may take place which would justify the French assumption. The Report by the Law Officers of the Crown of the 18th December, 1885 (Paper C), on the occasion of the conquest of Burmah by Great Britain, ran as follows:—

"The conquest of the King of Burmah, and the military occupation of his territory have given the Crown the right to extinguish the independent existence of the State of Upper Burmah. If the Crown thinks fit to exercise this right, all Treaties which the King of Burmah or his predecessors may have made with foreign Powers will thereupon cease to exist."

When Germany, in 1890, acquired the territories of the Sultan of Zanzibar, on the East Africa mainland, which now form part of the German possessions, it was claimed by the German Government that the annexation had extinguished the Sultan's Treaties, and the claim has not been disputed.

But there are circumstances connected with the French position in Madagascar which render it of an exceptional character.

On the 27th December, 1885, the French Government authorized its Representative in London to give to Her Majesty's Government the following explicit assurance regarding the Treaty between France and Madagascar of the 17th of that month:—

"Le Traité ne change rien aux Traités actuellement existants entre le Gouvernement Hova et les autres États. Au surplus, il n'est jamais entré dans notre pensée de mettre obstacle par ces arrangements au libre développement des intérêts privés qui pourraient se fonder à Madagascar, de quelque nationalité qu'ils relèvent."

This explicit assurance was further confirmed by the Declarations exchanged between the British and French Governments on the 5th August, 1890 (Paper B), in which the former agreed to recognize the Protectorate of France over Madagascar with its consequences, and the latter engaged that the establishment of the Protectorate should not affect any rights or immunities enjoyed by British subjects in the island. When the expedition to Madagascar was authorized by the French Chamber, the most explicit assurances were given that the object of the expedition was to establish and secure the French Protectorate, an assurance which, under the circumstances, implied that the object of the expedition was not inconsistent with British Conventional rights. It is submitted that there is a broad difference between the invalidation by conquest of the promises made by the conquered party, and the invalidation by conquest of the confirmatory promises given by the conqueror. The case is of exceptional importance, because the case of Tunis stands behind it.

I am to request that you will take the papers transmitted herewith into your consideration, and that you will favour the Marquess of Salisbury with your opinion as to whether the engagements entered into by France in these documents are such as to entitle Her Majesty's Government to claim that the rights confirmed to this country under them have not been annulled, and still exist, notwithstanding the annexation of the island by France, and generally with any observations which you may have to offer on the position of this country in view of that annexation.

Report.

There is no doubt as to the existence of the general rule that Treaties made by a State are determined on its conquest by another Power, and are not binding upon the conqueror. The application of this rule, however, assumes that the conquering State is itself under no engagements to the Powers with whom the conquered State had made these Treaties.

In the present case, we think that a remonstrance may properly be addressed to the French Government against the proposal to put an end to the Treaty-rights of Great Britain. This remonstrance may be rested on the following considerations:—

The Declarations exchanged on the 5th August, 1890, show that the establishment of a French Protectorate in Madagascar was not to affect any rights or immunities enjoyed by British subjects in that island. When the French expedition into Madagascar was about to be undertaken, the French Foreign Minister stated, in the most explicit terms in the French Chamber, that the expedition was to establish the Protectorate. He cited the Declarations exchanged with England, and, stating that there was a complete parallelism between the cases of Zanzibar and Madagascar, he affirmed that France was quite at liberty to dispatch the forces necessary to insure the exercise of the Protectorate, and that the prudence and loyalty of the foreign Powers were a sure guarantee that they would not intervene. These Declarations were obviously made not to the French Chamber only, but through it to the foreign Powers concerned, and involved the assurance that the expedition to Madagascar would not prejudice the Treaty-rights of Great Britain in that country.

The Law Officers are not quite agreed as to the extent and nature of the liability of France to Great Britain with regard to these Treaties.

The Attorney-General thinks that if this case is to be decided with reference to principles of international law already established, it will be exceedingly difficult for Her Majesty's Government to maintain successfully that the French Government are under any binding engagement which prevents them from passing the proposed law, or from disregarding the rights of Great Britain founded upon pre-existing Treaties with Madagascar. He thinks that no contract or engagement exists that France will not annex Madagascar, and if Madagascar becomes part of French dominions, that there is no engagement to prevent France from legislating for that part of her dominions independently of the rights which were conferred on Great Britain and other countries by the pre-existing Treaties. But, at the same time, the case appears to him to be somewhat novel, and not to be precisely governed by the same considerations which apply in ordinary cases of conquest or annexation such as are referred to in Sir H. P. Anderson's letter of the 6th June, and under the circumstances he thinks that a remonstrance ought to be presented upon the grounds above indicated.

The Solicitor-General thinks that France is under engagements to this country which render it inconsistent with good faith that she should, by converting her Protectorate into dominion, determine the Treaty-rights of Her Majesty's Government in Madagascar. The French Foreign Minister stated that the expedition was merely to establish the Protectorate, the continuance of which involved the maintenance of existing Treaties with the Hova Government. The "Exposé des Motifs" prefixed to the "Projet de Loi" set out in "Le Temps" of the 31st May, 1896, indicates very clearly that it is intended by annexation to get rid of these Treaties altogether. In other words, the success of an expedition which was accompanied with assurances that it would not prejudice these Treaties is to be utilized to annul them. The Solicitor-General thinks that there has been no change of circumstances to justify a fresh departure of this nature, and that Her Majesty's Government is entitled to require that our Treaties with Madagascar shall be respected.

Trial of Émile Arton for offences other than those for which he was extradited.

Sir,

I AM directed by Secretary Sir Matthew Ridley to forward herewith a letter he has received from the Foreign Office, with inclosures, relative to the proposed trial of Émile Arton for offences other than those for which he was surrendered to France by Her Majesty's Government; and I am to request that you will be good enough to submit the same to the Law Officers of the Crown, and obtain their opinion with the least possible delay on the questions—

1. Whether M. Arton's letter of the 3rd instant to the Procureur-Général at Paris can be held to relieve the French Government of the obligation under which they are placed by Article IV of their Extradition Treaty with this country of the 14th August, 1876?

2. Whether the proceedings against M. Arton, alluded to in M. Geoffray's note to Lord Salisbury of the 10th instant would constitute a breach of that Treaty?

3. What reply should, in their opinion, be returned to M. Geoffray's communication of the 16th November?

I am, &c.
(Signed) KENELM E. DIGBY.

Inclosure.

Foreign Office to Home Office.

Foreign Office, November 16, 1896.

Sir,

WITH reference to your letter of the 12th February last, enumerating the charges in respect of which Émile Arton was surrendered to France, I am directed by the Marquess of Salisbury to transmit herewith a copy of a note, and of its inclosure, from the French Minister at this Court, from which it appears that it is the intention of the French judicial authorities to place Arton on his trial on all the counts of the accusation brought against him, and that the Minister of Justice holds that he must be tried again on the charges which led to his conviction, par contumace, in 1893.

This course of procedure seems to Lord Salisbury to be in contravention of the terms of Article IV of the Extradition Treaty between Great Britain and France of the 14th August, 1876, which provides that a "person surrendered shall not be tried for any crime or offence committed in the other country before the extradition other than the crime for which his surrender has been granted."

The French Government state that the voluntary renunciation by Arton of the right conferred on him by the Treaty cancels the limitations imposed by its provisions. They accordingly confine themselves to simply informing Her Majesty's Government of the course they intend to adopt, and abstain from asking for the concurrence of this country, a course which even Arton himself, from the terms of his letter, clearly considers necessary.

It appears to be open to very grave doubt whether it is within Arton's competence to renounce a stipulation in the Treaty (whether such stipulation operates in his favour or against him) so as to relieve one of the High Contracting Parties to that Treaty of its international obligation to the other Contracting Party, which, in the present case, is the obligation not to try Arton for any crime or offence other than that for which his surrender has been granted.

The Law Officers of the Crown, in advising on another subject in 1865, expressed the following opinion in a Report, of which a copy is inclosed:—

"Treaty engagements, it must be remembered, are with the Government of Great Britain, not with its individual subjects. Consequently it is not competent for individual British subjects to renounce the benefit of those engagements."

Similar opinions were expressed by the Law Officers of the Crown in 1867 and in 1872 in Reports, copies of which are also inclosed.

I am to request that you will move Secretary Sir Matthew Ridley to take M. Geoffray's note, and the observations contained in this letter, into his early consideration. As the matter is one that involves an important question of principle, he may not improbably think proper to refer it to the Law Officers of the Crown, with the view of ascertaining what reply should, in their opinion, be returned to M. Geoffray's communication, which, for the present, has been simply acknowledged.

I am, &c.

Report.

We are of opinion that as a matter of principle an individual cannot waive the stipulations of a Treaty. The obligation under the Treaty is on the part of the French Republic to Her Majesty's Government, and it is for Her Majesty's Government to decide whether in view of Arton's wishes they will consent to his trial upon other charges.

The French Government are not entitled to proceed with such trial merely upon Arton's consent. They ought also to apply for the consent of Her Majesty's Government. If such an application should be made in this case, we think Her Majesty's Government might consent to Arton being tried for the alleged offences on the ground that Arton himself desires to be tried. Sub-section (2) of section 3 of the Act of 1870 shows that such trials were contemplated under some circumstances, but Article IV of the Treaty of 1876 prohibits any such trial taking place.

We see no reason, however, why Her Majesty's Government should not in this case consent to Arton being tried, as he raises no objection, if they see none, but we think it very important that it should be made clear that the case is not to be used as a precedent for the trial of extradited prisoners upon charges other than those on which they were extradited, and in that view it is essential that consent should only be given upon application by the French Government.

We therefore suggest that the French Government should be informed that the trial cannot properly, having regard to the Treaty, take place without the consent of Her Majesty's Government, but that if such consent is desired formal application should be made by the French Government.

Foreign Office, February 13, 1896.

Gentlemen,

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, the accompanying draft of an Order in Council, which has been prepared by Mr. Albert Gray (see Paper B), for the purpose of making regulations for Her Majesty's Consular Service similar to those which have been applied to the Civil Service by the Order in Council of the 15th August, 1890 (Paper A).

Lord Salisbury has substituted the passages printed in italics for those erased in the inclosed draft Order, and the terms of the draft, as thus amended, are concurred in by the Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury (see Paper C).

I am to request that you will take the inclosed draft Order in Council (Paper D) into your consideration, and that you will favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion whether it may, in its amended form, properly be laid before the Queen in Council for Her Majesty's approval. His Lordship would also be glad to be furnished with any general observations which you may wish to offer after perusal of the inclosed papers.

I have, &c.

Annex.

Draft Order in Council regulating the Consular Service.

WHEREAS, by an Order in Council made on the 15th August, 1890, Her Majesty was pleased to make certain Regulations in order to secure greater uniformity in the rules governing officers of higher rank than the Second Division in the several Departments of the Civil Service:

And whereas it is expedient that similar Regulations, so far as circumstances admit, should be made with respect to pensionable officers in the Consular Service of Her Majesty:

Now, therefore, Her Majesty, by and with the advice of her Privy Council, is pleased to order, and it is hereby ordered, as follows:—

1. This Order shall apply to all such Consular officers and other persons employed in or in connection with the Consular Service as are entitled to receive superannuation allowances under the Superannuation Acts, 1834 to 1892, and any Acts amending those Acts.

2. ~~Except in the case of any appointment with respect to which it appears to the Secretary of State to be necessary that a Royal Commission should immediately be issued,~~ Except in the case of officers appointed by Commission from Her Majesty, every person hereafter certificated by the Civil Service Commissioners for appointment to the Consular Service shall be subject to a strict probation for a period of two years, during which his conduct and capacity in the transaction of business shall be subject to such tests as may be determined by the Secretary of State, and he shall not be finally appointed to the Consular Service unless his probation shall furnish to the Secretary of State satisfactory proof of his fitness to be permanently employed in the Consular Service.

3. Promotion of officers in the Consular Service shall be strictly according to merit, and shall take place subject to the following conditions:—

(1.) That there is a vacancy which, under the arrangements sanctioned for the time being by the Commissioners of the Treasury, it is competent for the Secretary of State to fill up;

(2.) That the work of the Consular Service requires such vacancy to be filled up;

(3.) That the officer proposed for promotion appears to the Secretary of State to be fit to discharge the duties of the higher office.

4. Every officer hereafter appointed to the Consular Service shall be required to retire at the age of 65 on such pension as by the length of his service he is qualified to receive.

Officers heretofore appointed to the Consular Service shall be required to retire at the age of 70.

If in any special case the Secretary of State is satisfied that the retirement of an officer would be detrimental to the interests of the public service, he may, with the concurrence of the Commissioners of the Treasury, from time to time extend that officer's employment for such period or periods, not exceeding five years, as he may determine.

Nothing in this Article shall affect any existing power of the Secretary of State to require any officer to retire from the Consular Service if he has ceased, from whatever cause, to be fully competent for the performance of his duties.

5. ~~All Consular officers shall discharge their duties in accordance with~~ The Consular Service shall be governed by such instructions as may from time to time be issued by a Secretary of State, with the approval, in so far as such instructions may affect the expenditure of public funds or the receipt and application of fees, of the Commissioners of the Treasury.

6. This Order may be cited as "The Consular Service Order in Council, 1896."

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen,

Foreign Office, August 14, 1896.

Silk Industry in Cyprus. Effect of proposed Law on Treaty obligations.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit herewith the papers noted in the margin,* which relate to a proposed legislative measure to provide for the development and improvement of the silk industry in Cyprus.

You will perceive, on reference to the Colonial Office letter inclosed, that the Legislative Council of the Island of Cyprus has recently passed a Law with the object above referred to, but that, in consequence of the opinion of the Acting Queen's Advocate for the island, the High Commissioner has reserved it for the confirmation or disallowance of Her Majesty, as provided by the Order in Council of 1878.

Section 2 of this Law provides that: "The High Commissioner shall, with the advice of the Board of Agriculture, select and determine the foreign persons or firms from whom it shall be lawful to procure eggs and import the same into Cyprus;" and, further, that "the names of such persons or firms, hereinafter referred to as approved firms, shall be notified in the official Gazette, not later than the 1st August in each year."

Commenting on this section, the Acting Queen's Advocate expresses the following opinion:—

"This Law will practically confer upon the selected firms a monopoly of imported silkworms' eggs into Cyprus. The result may be that some countries, such as Italy, Greece, or France, who have hitherto had a share in that trade, may be entirely excluded. I am, therefore, of opinion that the provisions of this law might prove to be inconsistent with Treaty obligations, and I cannot advise that this Law is one to which the High Commissioner can assent on behalf of Her Majesty."

It has, accordingly, to be determined whether Her Majesty should be advised to confirm or disallow the Law in question.

I am to inclose a Return of the most-favoured-nation clauses in Treaties of commerce and navigation between Great Britain and various foreign Powers, including Italy, Greece, and France, the countries specially mentioned by the Acting Queen's Advocate. This Return also comprises the prohibition which, on sanitary grounds, are specially provided for.

You will observe that the Treaty engagements with some countries—for example, that with the Zollverein of the 30th May, 1865 (Blue Book, p. 20)—contain a provision that—"No prohibition of importation or exportation shall be established by either of them against the other which shall not at the same time be applicable to all other nations," but do not contain any express reservation as to restrictions for sanitary, agricultural, or other purposes such as those defined in the last portion of Article II of the Treaty with France of 1882 (Blue Book, p. 19).

I am to request that you will take these papers into your consideration, and favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion as to whether section 2 of the Law as it now stands constitutes an infraction of the Treaty obligations between Her Majesty's Government and either or all of the three countries mentioned by the Acting Queen's Advocate in Cyprus, and with any observations you may think it desirable to offer on the bearing of the clause on the principle of most-favoured-nation Articles generally.

I have, &c.
(Signed) GEORGE N. CURZON.

Report.

In our opinion, the second section of the proposed Law as it now stands does not of itself constitute an infraction of the Treaty obligations of Her Majesty's Government with any of the three countries mentioned by the Acting Queen's Advocate in Cyprus.

It puts all foreign countries on precisely the same footing. Trustworthy firms are to be selected from whom eggs may be procured for importation into Cyprus. If the Law is fairly worked, no advantage will be conferred on one nation beyond another, as the selection will be impartially made without regard to nationality, and solely with regard to capacity to supply healthy eggs.

Of course, if the Law were administered so as to confer a preference on certain foreign firms because they belong to a particular country, this would constitute an infraction of our Treaty obligations with the countries in question.

No doubt the administration of such a Law as this might be abused with the object of giving indirectly, by selection of firms, a preference to a particular nation which could not be given directly, and this would constitute an infraction of the most-favoured-nation clause in any Treaty; but we assume that experts in the matter can indicate the conditions which insure that eggs of a suitable quality will be supplied, and, these conditions having been laid down, foreign firms of any nation may be selected as able to supply eggs in accordance with such conditions.

The possibility of such machinery being resorted to by other countries for the purpose of evading their Treaty obligations with us, and the possibility of complaints by foreign nations as to the administration of the Law being such as to create a breach of favoured nation clauses, may be taken into account on the question of policy in determining whether it is desirable that we should initiate such legislation; but we have no doubt that such a law fairly and impartially administered in the sense we have indicated would not constitute an infraction of Treaty obligations. The preference would not be as between countries, but as between different firms, as to their ability to meet the requirements prescribed to insure healthy eggs; the conditions would be the same for all countries.

Foreign Office, November 28, 1896.

Gentlemen,

Expulsion of Mr. Tom Mann from Hamburg.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit to you herewith the papers noted in the accompanying list, which relate to the expulsion of Mr. Tom Mann from Hamburg.

On the 19th September Mr. Mann addressed a letter to this Office (see Paper 5) containing a statement to the following effect:—

Mr. Mann, as Chairman of the International Federation of Ship, Dock, and River Workers, was instructed by the Council of that body to hold meetings at Hamburg, Altona, and Bremerhafen.

On the 31st August application was made through an agent to the police at Hamburg for permission to hold a meeting, of which the subject was to be Trade-Unionism, in that town. This authorization was granted, and on the strength of it Mr. Mann proceeded to Hamburg, where he arrived on the 15th September.

Shortly after his arrival he was arrested and taken to the Stadthaus, where he was informed that he could not hold any meeting, and that he must forthwith quit Hamburg territory.

At his request Mr. Mann was conducted by a police official to the British Consulate-General, whence he returned to the Stadthaus, accompanied by Mr. Pogson, the Acting Consul-General.

It then transpired that the police intended that Mr. Mann should leave Hamburg the same evening by steam-boat to London.

Mr. Pogson pleaded on behalf of Mr. Mann that the latter should be allowed to proceed to Altona or Bremerhafen, where arrangements had been definitely made, with the assent of the local authorities, to hold meetings, but permission was refused.

Mr. Mann concludes his statement by requesting that inquiry might be made in regard to the action of the Hamburg police in thus forcibly preventing him from proceeding from the Free State to other places in the German Empire.

I am to call your attention to the actual document (Inclosure in Paper 5) authorizing the expulsion, which states that Mr. Mann's further stay within the Free State was prohibited, that he should leave Hamburg immediately, and that failing to do so he would be liable to compulsory deportation.

The Report of the Acting British Consul-General at Hamburg (see Paper 3) on the case does not differ on material points from Mr. Mann's own account of the circumstances attending his arrest and expulsion.

It will be observed that in the course of his Report Mr. Pogson states that in spite of his representations on behalf of Mr. Mann, "the order of expulsion by the steamer 'Vesta' leaving Hamburg direct for London at 5 P.M. (he not being a Prussian subject justified in demanding removal into the surrounding Kingdom of Prussia) was adhered to."

Mr. Mann accordingly lodged two protests, of which Mr. Pogson incloses copies (see Inclosure in Paper 3), against the action of the Hamburg authorities: in the first he protested against the decree of expulsion on the ground (1) that it was his intention to observe scrupulously the Laws and Regulations of the several States of Germany in which he proposed to deliver lectures; and (2) that the police authorities were made fully cognizant of the circumstances of the lecture to be delivered at Hamburg, and had given their authorization for the meeting to be held on that occasion.

In the second he protested against the decision of the police, verbally communicated to him, that he would only be permitted to leave Hamburg by the steamer leaving direct for London whereas he desired to proceed to Altona.

The conduct of the police officials towards Mr. Mann is acknowledged to have been in every respect courteous and sympathetic, and is not made the subject of any complaint. Mr. Mann was allowed to move about freely in the company of a plain-clothes officer, and seems to have been treated with every consideration by the official charged to conduct him to the steamer.

The justification of the action of the German authorities, as explained to Mr. Mann by the police, appears from Mr. Pogson's Report to have been founded on the following considerations:—

1. The majority of the German working classes are thoroughly imbued with social democratic principles;

2. Mr. Mann, being ignorant of the conditions of the country, could not, however well meaning his intentions, have avoided trenching in his address on subjects which are forbidden to be discussed at public meetings; and

3. The principles Mr. Mann advocates in connection with trade unionism would tend to start a movement which would get out of the control of its leaders and might assume a nature dangerous to the State.

Her Majesty's Ambassador at Berlin was instructed (see Paper 6) to invite the opinion of the Legal Adviser of the Embassy as to whether the action of the Hamburg authorities, not only in expelling Mr. Mann from the Free State, but also in prohibiting him from proceeding to German territory, was in accordance with law, and if not, in what respect their action was ultra vires.

It will be seen that Dr. Weber's opinion (see Paper 7) is in favour of the legality of the procedure followed by the Hamburg authorities, (1) in expelling Mr. Mann; (2) in deciding the route by which he should leave the Free State; and, Dr. Weber adds, (3) in taking him into custody on his lodging a protest against the order of expulsion.

I am to request that you will take these papers into your consideration, and will be good enough to inform Lord Salisbury if you agree with Dr. Weber's opinion as to the legality of the manner in which the expulsion of Mr. Mann was carried out by the police authorities of Hamburg.

His Lordship will also be glad to be favoured with your opinion as to whether the expulsion of Mr. Mann from Hamburg, or the circumstances attending it, offer any, and if so what, grounds on which representations to the German Government should be based.

I have, &c.

Report.

We agree with the result of Dr. Weber's opinion that there was nothing illegal in the manner in which the expulsion of Mr. Mann was carried out by the police authorities at Hamburg.

The right to expel him cannot be disputed.

It appears to us that the Government of a State which desires to expel a foreigner is justified in prescribing a route by which he is to leave their territory, so long as this right is not exercised unreasonably and in an oppressive manner.

Mr. Mann was not entitled to pass through Hamburg territory in the direction of Altona, or in the direction of the railway station for Bremerhafen. In putting him on board a ship bound for London, we think that a course was taken which cannot be considered as in any way oppressive. And we think that the presence of the police on board till the vessel had passed Cuxhaven may be justified as incidental to the right of expulsion, and as preventing the possibility of his leaving the ship for the purpose of returning to the territory of Hamburg.

The question remains whether Mr. Mann's arrest was justified.

It appears to us that it was as reasonably incidental to the right of expulsion. He had protested against the expulsion, and against the intimation that he was not to go to Bremerhafen or to Altona. And his arrest was not unreasonable as a precaution to insure that his expulsion should be carried out by the prescribed route.

This is the sense in which we understand that part of Dr. Weber's opinion which relates to the arrest. If it meant that Mr. Mann's protest amounted to disobedience to the order of expulsion, and that the arrest was justified upon that ground, we should be unable to agree with it.

Upon the whole, we are of opinion that the expulsion of Mr. Mann, and the circumstances attending it, do not offer any grounds upon which representations to the German Government should be based. Mr. Mann was treated in a kindly and considerate manner by the Hamburg authorities; the arrest was, in substance, not more than police surveillance.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, November 17, 1896.

Search of British vessels by Japanese in Japanese waters.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, the accompanying papers relating to the question whether Japanese authorities have a right to search British vessels in Japanese ports for rebels escaping from their jurisdiction.

The instructions given on this point by Her Majesty's Minister at Tôkiô to Her Majesty's Consul at Tainan (Formosa) were to the effect that he should not permit such search to be made except for criminals, whose names must be specified. The Consul thereupon issued a Circular to British merchants in Tainan, requesting them not to allow the Japanese police to search their vessels except under a warrant from the British Consulate, and he informed the Japanese Prefect that he could only grant a warrant in the cases of persons accused of criminal offences.

It seems to be open to considerable doubt whether the extra-territorial jurisdiction which Her Majesty possesses in Japan extends to Japanese subjects on board British merchant-vessels in Japanese waters, although this doctrine is supported by Mr. Wilkinson, the Crown Advocate at Shanghae (see Paper B).

Lord Salisbury would therefore be glad to be favoured with your opinion on the question, and with any general observations which you may have to offer on the inclosed papers before finally instructing Sir Ernest Satow on the subject.

Report.

In our opinion, the extra-territorial jurisdiction which Her Majesty possesses in Japan does not extend to Japanese subjects on board British merchant-vessels in Japanese waters. It is confined to British subjects. We are unable to find in the Treaties any provision that a British merchant-vessel shall be deemed to be extra-territorial.

Apart from Treaty, we do not think that it can be successfully contended that a British merchant-vessel is exempt from search by the Japanese police while in a Japanese port (see Wheaton, 3rd English edition, p. 163, s. 103 G). The practice which has prevailed of first obtaining the sanction of the British Consul is convenient, and should, as far as possible, be adhered to, but if the Japanese Government put forward a claim to search for Japanese criminals, whether political or otherwise, we do not think that it could be successfully resisted on grounds of international law.

If the right were vexatiously or unreasonably exercised, it would afford ground for diplomatic representation, and the present practice lessens the probability of unreasonable action occurring.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, January 30, 1896.

Detention and treatment of British subjects for alleged complicity in Hawaiian rebellion. Claims to compensation.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, the Papers noted in the accompanying list which relate to the cases of those British subjects whose claims to compensation on account of their detention and treatment for alleged complicity in the Royalist insurrection in Hawaii, formed the subject of a Report from your predecessors on the 5th July last.

A copy of that Report, and of the reference leading to it, together with the correspondence therewith submitted, is inclosed and marked Paper (A).

In accordance with the views therein expressed, Mr. Hawes, Her Majesty's Commissioner and Consul-General at Honolulu, was instructed to furnish a Report as to the status and occupation of each of the injured parties, in whose cases it had been held that a primâ facie claim to compensation had been established; and he was directed to estimate the amount of compensation which, guiding himself by the general principles laid down in the Law Officers' Report of the 5th July, 1895, he might consider would fairly meet the merits and redress the injuries in each case.

L.O.R. 1895 (Conf. 6796), p. 83.

He was further instructed to ascertain and report the views of the Hawaiian Government as to the rights and wrongs of the proceedings in these cases, as the Law Officers considered that it might be advisable to be informed on these points before finally determining either the right to, or the amount of, compensation in each particular case. A copy of these instructions is also inclosed, marked Paper (B).

The accompanying Report from Mr. Hawes (Paper C), inclosing a full statement of the views of the Hawaiian Government, supported by affidavits in connection with the several cases, and giving such fuller information as was available in respect to the status and occupation of the claimants, has now been received.

Mr. Hawes further incloses briefs furnished by Mr. Neumann, the counsel engaged by most of the claimants, and retained by him on behalf of Her Majesty's Government for Mr. McDowall, who was unable to afford the expense of employing counsel, and for Messrs. C. W. Ashford, F. H. Redwood, and M. C. Bailey, who were absent from Hawaii.

Mr. Hawes, in submitting these documents, has drawn up a summary of the whole case, adhering to the order in which the matters are dealt with in the reply of the Hawaiian Government.

The latter consider that in order to form a just conclusion as to "the rights and wrongs" of the proceedings, it is necessary to view the situation of the community in Hawaii at or immediately preceding the outbreak of January last. Mr. Hatch therefore gives a long review of the state of affairs, which does not appear to differ materially from the version already known to Her Majesty's Government.

They argue that the condition of affairs was so grave and critical that the Hawaiian Government were justified in taking any steps which seemed necessary to preserve peace and to protect life and property; that the insurrection passed beyond the power of the civil authorities to control, and that martial law was then proclaimed, and was in force during the whole period of the complainants' detention.

They quote the petition of an Hawaiian citizen, Jonah C. Kalanianaole for a writ of habeas corpus, as throwing light on the condition of the country, the progress of the insurrection, and the final restoration of the privilege of habeas corpus on the 18th March, 1895.

The case, which was brought in the Supreme Court of Hawaii, was prosecuted in order to test the jurisdiction of the Military Commission.

The decision of the Supreme Court upheld the jurisdiction and refused the writ of habeas corpus. A printed copy of the proceedings in the case is inclosed in Mr. Hawes' despatch No. 35 (Paper D).

The matter of inquiry, in respect to all the cases now under consideration, is by the Hawaiian Government divided into the following branches:—

(A.) The arrest.
(B.) The detention.
(C.) The treatment.
(D.) The stipulation to leave the country.

With regard to the first point they contend that upon the facts as appearing from the affidavits, it is shown in the first place—

1. That the arrests were justifiable on principles of common law, even though the complainants were innocent.

2. That the question of reasonable or probable cause for the arrests is not dependent upon the fact of guilt.

3. That no presumption of want of probable cause arises from the discharge without trial.

They argue in the second place—

1. That during the existence of martial law greater powers must of necessity be conceded to a Government than in time of peace.

2. That the rights of individuals must yield to the obligations of a Government to protect the lives and property of persons under its protection.

And in the third place—

That by recognized principles of international law the complainants are not at this time, as a matter of right, entitled to Diplomatic intervention on the following grounds:—

1. In consequence of their Hawaiian domicil.
2. Not having exhausted their remedy before Hawaiian Courts.
3. In consequence of their participation in seditious and treasonable acts.

In support of each of these contentions they cite a considerable number of legal precedents from reported cases.

With respect to the value of the arguments and the evidence, Mr. Hawes offers some observations which appear to be worthy of consideration.

He points out that the evidence produced does not, except in the case of F. W. Harrison, which he has, with a view to further proof and explanation, withdrawn from those now presented, prove the participation of the complainants in seditious and treasonable acts; and that in none of the other cases has even a reasonable inference of participation been established.

With respect to the second branch of the inquiry, viz., the detention, it is contended that it is shown by the affidavit of the Judge Advocate that the greatest diligence was used in the preparation and prosecution of the cases presented to the Military Commission; that there is absolutely nothing on which to base a charge that one of these men was detained for the purpose of punishment or for any ulterior or other object than to prepare the case and proceed with it in due order, that no discrimination was used in the selection of the cases. To this statement Mr. Hawes takes exception, and considers that the cases of Mr. Carson Kenyon and of Mr. C. Bailey are a sufficient refutation of its accuracy.

Mr. Hatch states that it was undoubtedly a misfortune for the complainants that the right of habeas corpus was suspended at the time they were under arrest, and that they were thus deprived of their normal remedy in the Civil Courts; but that as a fact, if they had been committed for trial at the next quarterly term of the Circuit Court, the claimants would have been detained in confinement for a much longer period than they actually were.

With regard to the question of treatment it is contended that save in the case of Dunwell (which was, it is admitted, exceptional, and has already formed the subject of a separate representation and explanation), no sort of harsh or vigorous treatment was adopted; that such force only was used as was necessary to effect the arrests and that the prison where the complainants were confined is conducted on humane principles, and that the closest scrutiny of its management is at all times invited.

With regard to point 4, viz., the stipulation to leave the country, it is contended that Messrs. Levey, Bailey, Redward, McDowall, Harrison, and C. W. Ashford accepted their release voluntarily on condition of leaving the country, and chose this course in preference to standing their trial; that the terms of the Agreement which is quoted clearly amounts to an admission of some degree of guilt, and is conclusive on the question of probable cause, and that it was so understood by the claimants.

The Hawaiian Government hold, therefore, that as there is no contention that these stipulations were obtained by fraud or compulsion, there is no valid ground why they should not stand.

They further contend that the fact that the men were released and allowed reasonable time, varying from four to twenty days, to settle their affairs, during which they had ample time for reflection, and the further fact that they all carried out the terms of the stipulation without any compulsion, conclusively prove the character and good faith of the proceeding.

Mr. Hawes demurs to this conclusion, and considers that, ably as Mr. Hatch argues his case, his statements should not be accepted as correct.

In this connection, Mr. Hatch cites as a case analogous to those of British subjects expelled from Hawaii that of one Kapu, a Hawaiian citizen, formerly in the service of the Hawaiian Board of Missions, who was deported from the Gilbert Islands by the Captain of Her Majesty's ship "Royalist" in 1892, and he points out that in both instances the action complained of was taken by the military authority in times of local disturbance.

The case of Kapu (or Kapua) was exhaustively investigated by Her Majesty's High Commissioner for the Western Pacific, and he reported very fully upon it.

This report, taken in conjunction with those received from Her Majesty's naval officers, satisfied Her Majesty's Government that the step taken by Captain Davis was imperatively demanded in the interests of peace and of good order in the Protectorate, and that it must be regarded as a matter of high policy necessary and justifiable as an act of State.

Her Majesty's Commissioner at Honolulu was accordingly instructed to make a communication to the Hawaiian Government to this effect, stating that, in the opinion of Her Majesty's Government, Kapu was properly expelled, and that he had no claim to any indemnity.

Printed copies of the correspondence in this case are also sent herewith for convenience of reference in a separate bundle marked Paper (E).

The Hawaiian Government now submit that sufficient evidence has been adduced to establish a primâ facie case of reasonable and probable cause for the arrest and detention of the persons in question.

They add that further evidence could doubtless have been produced had a trial taken place, and point out that in the cases of those who left the country no further investigation was made after the Agreements to do so were signed, and that witnesses whose evidence would have been available were allowed to depart.

Copies of the affidavits and other documents adduced by the Hawaiian Government in defence of their action in the case of Mr. C. W. Ashford have, it appears, been communicated by Mr. Hawes to that gentleman, and the accompanying statement marked Paper (F) supported by further affidavits has now been received from him in reply. Mr. Ashford, being at San Francisco, has, to avoid delay, forwarded these documents, to which I am also to invite your attention, direct to the Secretary of State through Her Majesty's Consul-General at that place.

In view of the reply on the part of the Hawaiian Government, the question arises whether, having regard to the arguments therein contained, to which I am to direct your special attention, you are of opinion that all or any, and if so, which, of the claims in question are entitled to the support of Her Majesty's Government, and on what grounds they can most appropriately be supported.

Lord Salisbury would further desire to be informed as to the general lines which it would be, in your opinion, advisable to follow in the reply to be returned to Mr. Hatch's note.

I am to request that you will take the papers transmitted herewith into your consideration, and that you will favour the Secretary of State with your opinion on the questions submitted in this letter, and with any general observations which you may have to offer on the matter.

According to international law the Government of any country has the right to request and compel an alien to leave the country. The exercise, however, of this right may form the ground of international remonstrance and demand for compensation if it has been employed in a high-handed or oppressive manner.

A rebellion took place in Hawaii, and under such circumstances it is very difficult to draw a line at the point where the enforcement of what is called martial law is no longer necessary or justifiable. At the time of the outbreak it would not be disputed that the Government were entitled to put martial law in force, and that they were also entitled to continue martial law so long as there was reasonable ground for supposing that the rebellion might again break out.

Martial law, however, ought to be employed only for the purpose of meeting and overcoming immediate danger, not for the purpose of mere punishment, and certainly not for the purpose of inflicting punishment and inconvenience upon political adversaries.

The perusal of the documents before us is calculated to leave on the mind the impression that martial law was used by the Government of Hawaii in some, at all events, of these cases, not for the purpose of meeting immediate danger, but for the purpose of harassing and compelling to leave the country residents who were known to hold pronounced Royalist views.

The persons whose claims are before us, although resident for a very long time in Hawaii, had not ceased to be British subjects, and are therefore entitled to the protection of Her Majesty's Government if they have been unjustly dealt with. The fact, however, that they were domiciled in Hawaii must be taken into account as bearing upon the question how far it is expedient that Her Majesty's Government should intervene on their behalf, and what compensation should be claimed, when it is alleged that they have been guilty of sedition, and of conduct unfriendly to the established government of the country.

It is extremely difficult to fix any amount which would represent the damages which it would be proper to demand for the claimants. The amounts which are mentioned must be taken merely as a rough approximation, and possibly it might be expedient that the question of amount should form the subject of arbitration. With these observations we proceed to the consideration of the particular cases.

1. Thomas.—This man is shown to have indulged in a good deal of loose talk hostile to the Government. We think that under the circumstances no reasonable complaint could be made of his arrest, but we fail to see that there was any real ground for his imprisonment for so long a period, namely, from the 7th January to the 7th March. There seems to be no trustworthy evidence against him of anything more than loose talk of a seditious character. We think that in his case 200*l.* would be ample compensation, considering that by his conduct he to some extent conduced to his misfortune.

2. McDowall.—We think that in this case 100*l.* may be claimed as compensation for the imprisonment. We do not think that any compensation for leaving the country can be fairly insisted on, inasmuch as McDowall seems to have indulged in language very hostile to the existing Administration, and we think that in his case it was not unreasonable that he should be compelled to leave the island.

3. C. W. Ashford.—It appears to us that this man was really arrested and driven out on account of his political opinions, and not because there was any real apprehension of danger from him. The case is, in our opinion, a somewhat serious one. He was subjected to imprisonment, and forced to sign an agreement to leave the country. The proceedings were high-handed, and we think that he ought to obtain substantial damages. As a rough approximation, we would suggest 500*l.*

4. Redward.—The arrest of this man appears to have been arbitrary and unnecessary, and we think that 200*l.* might be fairly claimed.

5. Reynolds.—In this case also we think 100*l.* may be fairly claimed. There is nothing to show that he took any part in promoting the insurrectionary movement, and his correspondence with the ex-Queen afforded no sufficient ground for his arrest.

6. Rawlins.—In this case there was no justification whatever for the imprisonment, and we think that 100*l.* ought to be paid to him as compensation.

7. Kenyon.—The arrest of this man took place after the rising had been put down, and apparently because he was connected with a newspaper advocating opinions opposed to those of the Government. The case is an aggravated one, and 200*l.* should be claimed.

8. Levey.—In this case also we fail to see that any ground is shown for the arrest and imprisonment, and compelling the man to leave the country. The amount of compensation would fairly be 200*l.*

9. Bailey.—There appears to be no shadow of excuse for the arrest of this man on the 12th February. We think that 100*l.* might fairly be claimed in this case.

In replying to the despatch of Mr. Hatch, we think that the following are the general lines which ought to be observed:—

It should be pointed out that Her Majesty's Government do not dispute the proposition that, on the occasion of an insurrection, any Government is entitled to proclaim martial law, and to use any amount of force necessary for its suppression:

It should further be pointed out that Her Majesty's Government do not deny the right of a Government to require removal from the country of any alien whose presence may reasonably be expected to produce disorder, or be inconsistent with the maintenance of good government:

It should be pointed out that Her Majesty's Government cannot accept the proposition that the acquisition of a Hawaiian domicil forfeits the right to the intervention of Her Majesty's Government on behalf of British subjects in cases in which they may appear to have been treated in an arbitrary and oppressive manner:

It should be further pointed out that Her Majesty's Government do not dispute the proposition, that an alien resident in any country may properly be prosecuted and punished in due course of law for seditious language, or for conduct or demeanour calculated to endanger the peace of the community, and properly punishable by the law in force:

It should be pointed out that the objection that the claimants had not exhausted their remedy before Hawaiian Courts, is one which appears quite unsustainable in view of the Act of Indemnity passed by the Hawaiian Legislature.

If any of Her Majesty's subjects in Hawaii had been guilty of any participation in seditious or treasonable acts no objection would have been made by Her Majesty's Government to their prosecution and punishment in due course of law, or under martial law, if the enforcement of martial law was reasonably necessary for the safety of the community:

It should be pointed out that the agreement to leave the country cannot be construed as an admission of guilt, being signed under the pressure of imprisonment, and under the apprehension of proceedings under martial law, at a time when in the view of Her Majesty's Government, it could not be supposed to be necessary for the safety of the community:

We think it should be pointed out that the claimants were subjected to imprisonment under martial law, under such circumstances as show that it was not put in force for the repression of insurrection, and rather indicate that it was being used as a means of punishing by imprisonment and exile, persons who had expressed views unfavourable to the existing Government of Hawaii:

It is probably not desirable to go into much detail or argument with regard to the circumstances of each particular case, but the amount claimed may in each case be indicated with the general grounds upon which such claim is based:

It should be pointed out that compelling aliens, the subjects of a friendly State, to leave the country at great inconvenience to themselves, and at the cost of ruin in business is, in the absence of circumstances which call for such measures as an act of self-protection, a step of an unfriendly character, which justifies the Government of such aliens in expecting that adequate compensation will be made to them.

Detention of British ship "Blairmore" at Galatz.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, the papers noted in the accompanying list, which relate to the detention of the British merchant-ship "Blairmore" by the Roumanian authorities at the port of Galatz.

It will be seen from Sir H. Wyndham's despatch No. 98 of the 25th September (Document B), that the "Blairmore," which is owned by Messrs. Johnston and Co., of Liverpool, arrived at Galatz from the Piræus on the evening of the 22nd September last with a general cargo and passengers. Amongst the latter were two Armenians with passports duly visés for Roumania who had embarked at the Piræus for the Danube. Previous to the "Blairmore's" arrival, the Captain of the Port of Galatz had ascertained that she was bringing Armenian passengers, and he consequently informed her owner's agents that she would not be allowed to have any communication with the Expulsion of F. W. Harrison from Hawaii.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir H. Percy Anderson's letter of the 25th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the inclosed list relative to the case of Mr. F. W. Harrison, a British subject, who claimed compensation from the Hawaiian Government on account of his detention and subsequent expulsion from the country for alleged complicity in the Royalist insurrection in Hawaii.

That our opinion was requested as to whether Mr. Harrison's claim was entitled to the support of Her Majesty's Government, and, if so, on what grounds it could most appropriately and effectually be supported.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to

Report—

That, in our opinion, Mr. Harrison is entitled to the support of Her Majesty's Government in his claim.

His arrest on suspicion might have been justified when the outbreak occurred, but the case made against him is extremely weak, and is unsupported by evidence.

We think that his continued detention and expulsion from the country were unjustifiable and oppressive. We regard the case as serious, and as calling for redress on the grounds stated in our former Report with regard to the other claimants.

There is really no case whatever against him of participation in treasonable or seditious acts. He has sustained serious loss by the oppressive action of the Hawaiian Government, and we think that a sum of not less than 1,000*l.* should be claimed.

Law Officers of the Crown to Colonial Office.

Sir, Royal Courts of Justice, October 31, 1896.

Proposed incorporation of Norfolk Island with New South Wales.

WE were honoured with your commands signified in Mr. Bramston's letter of the 7th instant, stating that he was directed to ask our advice upon the following matter:—

That Norfolk Island, which was situated in the Pacific some 900 miles east north-east of Australia, was formerly part of the Colony of Van Dieman's Land (now called Tasmania), but by 18 and 19 Vict., cap. 56, sec. 5, it was provided "that it should be lawful for Her Majesty at any time by Order in Council to separate Norfolk Island from the Colony of Van Dieman's Land, and to make such provision for the government of Norfolk Island as might seem expedient." That on the 24th June, 1856, an Order in Council was passed whereby it was provided that the island should be a distinct and separate Settlement, the affairs of which, until further Order was made in that behalf by Her Majesty, were to be administered by a Governor who was to be for that purpose appointed by Her Majesty with the advice and consent of her Privy Council.

That subsequent events had made it undesirable to continue this form of government, and that it was proposed to incorporate the island with the Colony of New South Wales, but that it was desired to arrange that the laws of the Colony should not extend to Norfolk Island, to which they were not suited in the present condition of that island, and to give to the Governor of New South Wales in Council the power of making laws for the island until the Colonial Parliament should otherwise provide. That by this means such laws of New South Wales as were suitable could be at once introduced, and from time to time could be added to as occasion required, or special laws applicable only to the island could be enacted; but that the question had arisen whether such an arrangement could be effected by Order in Council.

That it was presumed that the island could be annexed to the Colony by Order in Council, and that the annexation would, if the Colony consented to it, be valid by virtue of "The Colonial Boundaries Act, 1895;" and Mr. Bramston was to inquire—

1. Whether in our opinion this was correct. He was further to inquire—

2. Whether the consent of New South Wales might be given by the Colonial Government, or required a vote of the Legislature.

3. Whether the power given to Her Majesty by 18 and 19 Vict., cap. 56, to make provision by Order in Council for the government of Norfolk Island was still in existence, and could be made use of to declare what laws should be in force in the island when it should become part of New South Wales, and to create special powers of legislation for making laws until the New South Wales Legislature should provide otherwise.

4. That if this could not be effected by Order in Council, whether it was competent to the Legislature of New South Wales by Act to declare that the laws of the Colony should not apply to Norfolk Island after annexation, and to provide a special mode of legislation for that island.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and in obedience to your commands have the honour to

Report—

1. That, in our opinion, Norfolk Island cannot be annexed to the Colony of New South Wales by Order in Council.

The power given to Her Majesty by 18 and 19 Vict., cap. 56, sec. 5, to make provision for the government of Norfolk Island does not, in our opinion, authorize the transfer of the power to make such provision from Her Majesty in Council to the Legislature of New South Wales, which would be the result of annexation. What the statute contemplates is that Norfolk Island should remain a Crown Colony governed under the direction of the Queen in Council, not that Norfolk Island should be annexed to another Colony.

We further think that the general power of Her Majesty to alter the boundaries of Colonies referred to in "The Colonial Boundaries Act, 1895," cannot be relied on to justify the annexation even with the consent of the Colony.

The boundaries of New South Wales rest on a statutory basis: 18 and 19 Vict., cap. 54, and section 46 of the Bill scheduled to that Act defines the limits of New South Wales with a certain defined power of variation by Her Majesty. Even if the annexation of Norfolk Island could be deemed a question of boundary, we do not think that, in view of the Statute 18 and 19 Vict., cap. 54, it can be safely effected by Order in Council.

We therefore think that, even if the Colony consented, the annexation by Order in Council would be invalid.

2. In the case supposed, the consent of New South Wales would require a vote of the Legislature.

3. If the annexation could be effected by Order in Council, we think that Her Majesty could, under 18 and 19 Vict., cap. 56, make use of the power thereby conferred to declare what law should be in force in the island when it becomes part of New South Wales, and to create special powers of legislation till the New South Wales Legislature should provide otherwise: provided that the Legislature of New South Wales by Act consented to these conditions of annexation, but not otherwise.

4. We think that in the case supposed it would require both an Order in Council and a Colonial Act to make special provision for the island after annexation.

But, as we have stated in answer to the first question, we cannot advise annexation by Order in Council, even with the consent of the Colony.

We think that the object in view should be effected by Acts of the Imperial Legislature and of the Legislature of New South Wales. The Imperial Act should authorize Her Majesty to make an Order in Council annexing with the consent of the Colony, and making provision for interim government.

shore. The Acting British Consul protested to the Captain of the Port against this decision, but was informed, in reply, that strict orders had been received from the authorities at Bucharest to the effect that no ship arriving in the Danube with Armenians on board should be allowed to communicate with Roumanian territory. Accordingly, when the "Blairmore" arrived at Galatz she was compelled to anchor in the stream, whilst a Roumanian gun-boat was told off to keep guard over her.

The Acting British Consul at once reported the circumstances to Her Majesty's Minister at Bucharest, who, after communication with the Roumanian Government, obtained orders for the admission of the vessel to free pratique on condition that the Armenian passengers should not be landed. This condition was complied with, and the "Blairmore" was released on the morning of the 24th September, after thirty-six hours' detention.

The arrest of the vessel was no doubt ordered in pursuance of the stringent measures adopted by the Roumanian Government to prevent the landing of Armenian refugees in Roumanian territory. The nature of those measures and the reasons given by the Roumanian Government for their adoption are related by Sir H. Wyndham in his despatch No. 90 of the 6th September (Document A), which has reference to previous cases in which Armenian refugees were brought to Roumania on British ships.

Lord Salisbury does not in any way dispute the right of the Roumanian Government to make such Regulations as may be necessary to prevent Armenian refugees from landing in their territory, but he doubts whether they are justified in forbidding a foreign merchant-ship to communicate with the shore for the purpose of unloading her cargo merely because of the presence of Armenian passengers on board.

It is to be noted, moreover, in the present instance, that no attempt appears to have been made by the captain of the "Blairmore" to land his Armenian passengers, and that after the Regulations had been notified to Her Majesty's Minister, all proper steps were taken by him to insure their observance.

Lord Salisbury would be glad to learn whether, under the circumstances of this case, you consider that Her Majesty's Government might properly advance a claim for compensation against the Roumanian Government on behalf of the owners of the "Blairmore" in respect of the detention of that vessel.

It will be observed that the vessel did not, as was apprehended, forfeit her outward charter-party, and that the amount claimable would be practically limited to the ordinary demurrage charges in respect of the thirty-six hours' detention of the vessel, unless, indeed, it should be held that the owners are entitled to compensation for the maintenance of the Armenians who were shipped at the Piræus as passengers, and not at Constantinople as refugees.

We think Her Majesty's Government may properly advance a claim for compensation against the Roumanian Government on behalf of the owners of the "Blairmore" in respect of the detention of that vessel.

The forbidding communication with the shore by the "Blairmore" was altogether in excess of any precautions which the right of the Roumanian Government to prevent the landing of Armenians might render justifiable.

The absence of notice that any such stringent measures were intended makes the enforcement of such a Regulation a ground of legitimate complaint, and we think that the circumstances justify a claim for compensation.

It should, we think, be confined to the amount of the demurrage for the thirty-six hours.

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Seizure of British sealers by Russian cruisers in Behring Sea in 1892.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, February 20, 1896.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you herewith, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, the correspondence noted in the accompanying list, relative to the seizures of British sealing-vessels by Russian cruisers in 1892, and the drafts of two despatches which his Lordship proposes to address to Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at St. Petersburgh on the subject.

Your Report of the 13th December to the Colonial Office is attached to their letter of the 17th of that month. (Paper G.)

The claims in respect of the "Ariel" and "Willie McGowan," are stated in the draft (marked A). Interest at the rate of 6 per cent. has been added to the claims which you approved and initialled. On this point I am to refer you to my letter to the Colonial Office of the 5th instant (Paper H), and to their reply of the 11th (Paper I).

With regard to Draft (B), which deals with the claims not yet admitted in principle by the Russian Government, I am to state that his Lordship has adopted the figures submitted to you by the Colonial Office (see Paper G), and that interest at 6 per cent. has been added as in the other cases. The statement in three columns which Draft (B) purports to inclose for presentation to the Russian Government, has already been before you, but it has since been again revised by Mr. Anderson, of the Colonial Office, and I am now to request you to give it your further consideration, and to favour Lord Salisbury with any observations which you may have to offer, and to insert such alterations (if any) as you may deem to be expedient.

It is gathered from the Colonial Office that, in 1893, the then Law Officers of the Crown, Sir Charles Russell and Sir John Rigby, suggested that an examination of the evidence should be presented in this form to the Russian Government, but, in now dealing with this point, Lord Salisbury would also desire to be furnished, for his assistance, with your own views upon the matter.

His Lordship will be glad if, in favouring him with your opinion as to whether the two despatches are such as may properly be addressed to the Russian Government, you will be good enough to add any observations of a general nature which you may desire to offer.

I am, &c.
(Signed) FRANCIS BERTIE.

In our opinion the two despatches are such as may properly be addressed to Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at St. Petersburgh.

We think that the statement in three columns annexed to the second of these despatches, sets forth the case in regard to each of the vessels in a convenient form, and we approve of it, as drawn, for transmission to Mr. Goschen.

We have added a paragraph to the first despatch pointing out that the statement of grounds is for his own information, to enable him to present the case as regards these vessels to the Russian Government, and not for communication to that Government, unless in his discretion he thinks that this may conduce to the successful result of the negotiation.

Draft of Despatch from the Marquess of Salisbury to Mr. Goschen.

(No. .)
Foreign Office, March , 1896.

Sir,

THE late Sir R. Morier, in his despatch No. 161 of the 12th June, 1893, respecting the seizures of British sealing-vessels by Russian cruisers in 1892, inclosed a copy of a note from M. Chichkine, stating that the Russian Government would not refuse to consider the amount of compensation to be awarded in the cases of the schooners "Ariel" and "Willie McGowan."

Since that date much time has necessarily been occupied in collecting and examining the proofs in regard to the value of these schooners and of their outfit, and in estimating on a proper basis the sums to be claimed from the Russian Government. No trouble has been spared in order to arrive at a fair valuation, and Her Majesty's Government have on several occasions had recourse to the opinion of the Law Officers of the Crown and of those best qualified to assess the losses suffered by the owners of the captured vessels.

I now transmit to you, for communication to the Russian Government, the two claims as received from the Canadian Government in the month of November last, with the vouchers and other documents by which they are supported. Lists of these original papers are also inclosed. The total amounts claimed are summarized as follows:—

"Ariel."

	Dol.	c.
Cost of schooner	8,522	10
„ outfit	8,868	23
Interest on cash expended for purchase of supplies	3,925	24
Compensation due for loss of sealing seasons 1892, 1893, and 1894	35,704	00
Total	57,019	57

"Willie McGowan."

	Dol.	c.
Cost of schooner	9,341	40
,, outfit	7,828	01
Interest on cash expended for purchase of supplies	4,229	13
Compensation due for loss of sealing seasons 1892, 1893, and 1894	37,512	00
Total	58,910	54

These figures have, however, been submitted to a strict scrutiny, and it has been decided to reduce them materially, as Her Majesty's Government are unwilling to put forward any claims to which exception might be taken. The following statements are accompanied by explanatory remarks, which are for your own information only. You are instructed to present to the Russian Government the statements themselves, and when communicating them you should say that, as the justice of the claims has been admitted by them, and the compensation named by Her Majesty's Government is on the lowest possible scale, I trust that Prince Lobanoff will feel himself able to accept them as they stand.

Total			22,505	57

Remarks.—The "Ariel" was purchased at Halifax in the end of 1891, and fitted out there for the voyage to British Columbia, with a view to engaging in sealing from Victoria in that province. The first item above includes all the expenses incurred in the purchase of the vessel, fitting her for the voyage to Victoria, and the expenses connected with the voyage.

The second includes the cost of the alterations and fittings required for adapting the vessel for sealing purposes, including the purchase of boats, guns, &c.

The third item consists of the outlay incidental to the particular voyage—the cost of ammunition, provisions, wages, insurance, &c.

The fourth consists of the estimated net profits of the voyage, the expenses of the voyage having been deducted. The Return which accompanies the "Willie McGowan" papers shows that 14 vessels with 84 boats made in the vicinity of the Commander Islands a catch of 9,427 seals, giving an average of 112·23 per boat. The "Ariel" had 7 boats, which would give her an estimated total catch of 786 seals.

Remarks.—The "Willie McGowan" was a larger vessel than the "Ariel," though carrying the same number of boats. It is difficult to make out in many cases whether the supplies should be charged to head (1) or to head (3), as the owners, W. H. Moore, of Sydney, appear to have furnished much of the provisions and other supplies, not only for the voyage to British Columbia, but also for the sealing voyage, before the vessel left Cape Breton.

You will point out that the claims for compensation for the loss of the seasons subsequent to 1892 have been eliminated, and that very much smaller sums have been substituted which represent the interest on the amounts claimed for the three years which have elapsed since the dates of seizure.

Annex (B).

Draft of Despatch from the Marquess of Salisbury to Mr. Goschen.

(B.)
(No. .)

Foreign Office, March , 1896.

Sir,

WITH reference to my despatch No. of to-day's date, I have to request you to call the attention of the Russian Government to the claims of other British vessels which were seized by Russian cruisers in 1892.

Documents relating to these seizures were communicated to the Russian Government by Sir R. Morier in his notes of the 29th November, 1892, and of the 21st February, 1893. The claims were not admitted by the Commission appointed to inquire into the matter, and the decision of the Russian Government, communicated to Sir R. Morier in M. Chichkine's note of the 10th June, 1893, was to admit their liability for compensation only in the cases of the "Ariel" and the "Willie McGowan."

In a note of the 25th November, 1893, Mr. Howard asked that copies of the Protocols and Reports received by the Imperial Government might be furnished in order to enable Her Majesty's Government to arrive at a clear knowledge of the facts. But it was not till the 23rd January, 1895, that M. Chichkine forwarded to Sir F. Lascelles the papers asked for in the cases of the "Carmolite" and "Vancouver Belle," amongst which were the log-books of those two vessels, returned herewith.

The documents respecting the "Rosie Olsen" and the "Maria" have not yet been received, and the preparation of the statements of claims has been delayed in the hope that the Russian Government would comply with the request made by Mr. Howard.

After a careful consideration of the information before them, Her Majesty's Government are strongly of opinion that the evidence on which the vessels were condemned as lawful seizures was insufficient. But they have decided only to present claims in the cases which after full investigation they consider to be well founded.

I inclose the statements of claims in respect of the "Maria," "Carmolite," "Vancouver Belle," "Rosie Olsen," "C. H. Tupper," and "W. P. Hall." These statements have been prepared on the same basis as those of the "Ariel" and "Willie McGowan," and have been reduced to a proportionate extent from the figures as submitted by the owners to the Canadian Government.

The summary of the amounts claimed is as follows:—

	Dol.	c.
"Maria"	22,880	00
"Rosie Olsen"	11,972	50
"Vancouver Belle"	29,300	00
"Carmolite"	22,745	00
"C. H. Tupper"	3,600	00
"W. P. Hall"	3,000	00
	93,497	50
With interest for three years at 6 per cent.	16,829	55
Total	110,326	05

I also inclose a statement of the conclusions arrived at by Her Majesty's Government in each case, and of the grounds upon which the claims are individually and collectively supported.

In forwarding these papers to the Russian Government you will express a hope that they will give their favourable consideration to the claims of the several vessels, and grant compensation to the owners for the serious losses which they have sustained in consequence of the seizures.

If, after the claims are admitted in principle, the production of further documentary proofs is required in support of the amounts as now stated, Her Majesty's Government will endeavour to substantiate the claims by collecting the vouchers as has been done in the cases of the "Ariel" and "Willie McGowan." But you should do your utmost to procure a final settlement of the question as soon as possible, as it will be extremely difficult to obtain all the necessary papers, and a delay of several months will be occasioned, which, considering that more than three years have passed since the seizure of the vessels, it is manifestly desirable to avoid.

Report of Russian Commission.	Statements of Masters and Crews.	Remarks.
"MARIA." Pages 12 and 13 of Blue Book "Russia No. 3 (1893)":— This vessel was arrested on the 9th (21st) August, 1892, by the Governor of the Commander Islands, M. Grebnitzky, on board the "Kotik," in north latitude 54° 36′ and east longitude 168° 24′, at a distance of 7* miles from Copper Island. Two boats belonging to the schooner had been seen and seized at a distance of 1½ miles from the shore. Seventeen seals were found on them, ten of which had not been skinned. Without waiting to pursue the other boats, which were hunting at some distance, M. Grebnitzky arrested the schooner itself, and brought her to anchor before sunset in front of the village of Glenka. Next morning, on examination of the vessel and the boats which had joined her during the night, 622 skins were found on board, of which 585 were skins of females, "prises, par conséquent, près de la côte." The log-book had not been kept for four days, the latitude and longitude was only marked in the almanacks, and that carelessly. The skins taken were those of fertile females, and must have been killed near the coast, as in July and August, when	These are contained in the four affidavits by the master, the mate, a seaman, and the cook of the "Maria," printed pp. 94–97 of Blue Book "Russia No. 2 (1893)." They all state that the vessel had been in a dense fog, for three days according to the master, for forty-eight hours according to Cardiff, the seaman, which had rendered it impossible to obtain any observations. That the boats were out hunting during the fog, and that when it lifted, about 1 o'clock on the day the vessel was seized, they found themselves 11 or 12 miles from land, and setting towards land with the current. They then saw the "Kotik" approaching from land, but as it was dead calm and the sails were furled they made no attempt to escape. The "Kotik" came alongside about 3 o'clock, and ordered the master on board with his ship's papers. After examining them, M. Grebnitzky informed the master that his vessel was seized for taking seals in Russian waters; the crew of the "Maria" were transferred to the "Kotik," and a prize crew placed on board the former. The master denied that he had been hunting in Russian waters, as he had been outside	It must be borne in mind that the Russian accounts of the seizure of this and all the other vessels were given after they had had every opportunity of studying the British evidence. The whole question as to this vessel turns on the position of the boats at the time of seizure. The first Russian account makes no mention at all of boats captured within territorial waters as a justification for the capture of the vessel, and the first Canadian affidavits were silent on the subject. The conversation stated by M. Grebnitzky to have taken place with the master as to the boats is not referred to, and M. Grebnitzky is, on the other hand, silent as to the allegation that he claimed as Russian waters all west of the line of demarcation and north of the parallel of Cape Lopatka. If the master had admitted, as M. Grebnitzky states, that his boats were sealing within the limits, it is difficult to see why he positively refused to sign the statement that he had been taking seals in Russian waters. The fact that clubs were found on board proves nothing, as every pelagic sealer carries such clubs to giving milk, the females cannot go far from the coast. Clubs were found on the schooner used only for killing seals on shore. The vessel's chronometer was in such a condition as to indicate an error of 15 miles in the vessel's position. The captain admitted that 499 skins had been taken in the neighbourhood (" dans les parages ") of Copper Island, and did not deny that the three boats of the "Maria" were seized in Russian territorial waters, but declared that M. Grebnitzky should have confined himself to arresting them, as he had done in the case of the boats of the "Annie Moore." In fact, the "Annie Moore" had escaped, though her boats were seized, a circumstance which shows that the schooners, while remaining outside territorial waters themselves, send their boats inside from a long distance to hunt the seals in their rookeries. The captain of the "Maria" has recognized that the act of arrest was properly drawn up, but refused to sign it. The first Russian statement as to the seizure published in the official Gazette (p. 61 of Blue Book "Russia No. 2 (1893)") gives the distance from land as 8 miles, not 7, as in the later account above.	3 leagues of the coast, and M. Grebnitzky informed him that he was in Russian waters directly he crossed the boundary-line between American and Russian waters, and that the latter extended south to the parallel of Cape Lopatka. While the crew were being transferred, M. Grebnitzky drew up a document stating that the vessel had been taking seals in Russian waters, which the master refused to sign on the ground that he had not been doing so. A further affidavit by the master, mate, and two seamen of the "Maria" has now been received, in which it is affirmed "that no boats belonging to the 'Maria' were captured by the Russians previous to the capture of the said vessel, the only boats captured being two in number, and they were captured about 3 miles S.W. from where the said schooner was captured. There were four boats and one canoe hunting to the east and north of the said vessel when seized, which, however, the steam-ship 'Kotik' failed to find before dark, and they rejoined during the night." They add, "that the vessel was not brought to anchor before sunset off the village of Glenka on the day on which she was seized, but arrived there at 8 A.M. on the following day, 23rd August."	knock on the head wounded seals which are not dead when hauled on board the boat. The presence of females in the catch is similarly not to the point, as the bulk of the catch in summer undoubtedly consists of females, but they are found all over the sea, and certainly do not confine themselves to territorial waters. In support of this it is only necessary to refer to the fact that the Agreement with Russia for the protection of female seals extends to an area of 30 miles round the islands. In regard to the statement of the Commission that the log-book of the vessel had not been posted for four days, and that the latitude and longitude was only marked on the almanack, and that carelessly, it is to be remembered that these vessels are small fishing craft engaged on a prolonged fishing voyage, and that the daily posting of the log in such cases is not required, and is in fact unusual. It is a curious coincidence that only in the case of the two vessels seized by M. Grebnitzky, the "Maria" and "Rosie Olsen," does the legality of the seizure turn on the position of the boats. There was no hint of this in the earlier Russian account of the seizures nor in any of the British affidavits. The latest Canadian affidavit quoted above positively denies that the boats were captured before the schooner, and affirms that the only two that were captured were seized after the seizure of the vessel 3 miles to the S.W. of the schooner, a position which assuming that the schooner was, as alleged by the Russians, 7 miles from land, would place the boats well outside territorial waters. The first paragraph of the Commission's Report says that M. Grebnitzky seized two boats, and the next paragraph that three boats were seized. The statements of M. Grebnitzky to the Commission are contradicted by the sworn affidavits in detail, and if the boats were not outside territorial waters, why should he have stated to the master that Russian waters extended to the parallel of Cape Lopatka, and to the water boundary in the Treaty of 1867? There are, it is believed, no rookeries on the east side of Copper Island where the "Maria" was seized, and there was therefore no special inducement to send the boats into territorial waters, seals being as likely, if not more so, to be found outside as inside. The protocol drawn up at the time of seizure, which has been promised, may aid in explaining these contradictions, but at present the case against the vessel rests wholly on the ex post facto statements of the seizing officer, unsupported by any contemporaneous documentary or other evidence, and flatly contradicted by the evidence supplied to Her Majesty's Government.

"ROSIE OLSEN." Page 13 of Blue Book "Russia No. 3 (1893)":— Seized by M. Grebnitzky on the 14th (26th) July, 1892, in north latitude 55° 23′ and east longitude 165° 27′. The schooner had been seen in the territorial waters, but having caught sight of the smoke of the pursuing steamer had succeeded in gaining the open sea after having given the signal of recall to her boats. Nevertheless, the "Kotik" and a boat she had detached seized four boats of the "Rosie Olsen" in territorial waters, one of them at a distance of a mile from the shores of the Island of Aria. Three out of seven boats managed to regain the schooner. After seizing the four boats M. Grebnitzky proceeded to seize the schooner, and drew up the protocol of arrest. This the master of the "Rosie Olsen," who was much excited, refused to sign, and, on his arrival at Petropaulovski, protested against the seizure of his vessel on the high sea. On board the schooner and boats were found 379 seal-skins, of which 96 per cent. were skins of females; two of the skins were in the boats. It	Affidavits, pp. 40–47 and p. 98 of "Russia No. 2 (1893)." The "Rosie Olsen" was lying-to in north latitude 54° 24′, east longitude 165° 40′, about 38 miles from land, when hailed by the "Kotik," and the captain required to bring his papers on board. The vessel was becalmed and had been so for four hours before the seizure, which took place about 2 P.M. on the 26th July (pp. 46 and 98), and though the steamer was seen approaching for two hours no sail was set nor any attempt made to escape. When M. Grebnitzky had examined the papers the master asked if they were all right, and was answered "Yes." The master further asked if he was done with him, and if he could now return to his vessel, and M. Grebnitzky answered that he was, but that he would go on board with the master to see if there were any fresh skins on board, but changing his mind left the master on the "Kotik," and went to the "Rosie Olsen" by himself.	There is the most extreme discrepancy between the Russian and English accounts of the seizure. The latitude differs by 59′ and the longitude by 13′. The Russians say the seizure took place to the north-west of the north point of Behring Island, while the English statement is that it took place to the south-west of the south point. At first the Russians said 13* miles from land, then only 9½.* It is of course possible that in one of the accounts a clerical error of a degree has crept into the latitude. The Russians state (p. 13, Blue Book "Russia No. 3 (1893)") that four boats were seized inshore before the vessel was boarded, three having been able to reach the "Rosie Olsen" before they could be seized. The English say that one boat, that of the mate, reached the ship about the same time as the steamer, and before the master left the vessel (p. 46, Blue appeared from the journal that the schooner had been hunting for thirteen days "dans les parages de l'Ile de Cuivre," with the assistance of its boats, which it had sent into territorial waters. On the 12th (24th) July 101 seals had been taken. The log had not been kept for several days, and the chronometer was all wrong. The captain's statement that the vessel was 38 miles from land at the time of seizure must be wrong, as the intersection of the latitude and longitude which he gives is 54 miles from the nearest point of the coast. In the first Russian official account (p. 61, Blue Book "Russia No. 2 (1893)"), the distance from land of the vessel when seized was 13 miles, while the position given above only indicates a distance of 9½ miles.	On board the "Rosie Olsen" he asked to see the hold, and the mate, with one of the sailors from the "Kotik" examined the skins in the hold. The mate then asked M. Grebnitzky if he was going to seize the vessel, and he replied that he did not know, it would have to be looked into. The boat which brought M. Grebnitzky on board the "Rosie Olsen" had, before coming to that vessel, gone to meet one of the canoes and taken it to the "Kotik." When M. Grebnitzky returned to the "Kotik" after the examination of the "Rosie Olsen," the master inquired what he was going to do, and he replied to tow the vessel to Behring Island. When asked what for, and if he intended to seize the vessel, he said "No," but that he was going to stop her from sealing. The master then asked why he was taking them to Behring Island, and was informed that the skins were to be confiscated as having been taken in Russian waters, but that he would not confiscate the vessel. The "Kotik" then took the "Rosie Olsen" in tow, and after steaming round to pick up the boats that had not returned, proceeded to Behring Island. On the way a protocol was drawn up in Russian stating the time of seizure, nothing as to the place except the number of hours the steamer had been in reaching the "Rosie Olsen," the number of skins on board, and the Proclamation of the Governor-General of Eastern Siberia forbidding hunting in Russian waters. This the master was asked to sign, and refused, protesting against the seizure. He was then told that if he did not sign he would have to go to Vladivostock for trial, and that he might protest, but that if he made any lengthy protest he would have to go for trial. On this he signed an admission of the number of skins, but nothing as to sealing in Russian waters, and stated that he was in the North Pacific at the time of seizure. M. Grebnitzky on reading this said there was no North Pacific, it was all Russian waters. The "Kotik" with the "Olsen" in tow reached Behring Island about 11 P.M. At the end of his affidavit the master swears that at no time during the voyage was he within 15 miles of Russian territory, nor when his boats were out sealing was he at any time within 20 miles of land, and that his schooner was always nearer to land than his boats when out sealing. The mate says no sealing was done within 10 miles of Russian territory. The captain also denies that the log of the vessel showed that they had been any nearer the land in those Russian waters—presumably than the 15 miles stated in his first affidavit.	Book "Russia No. 2 (1893)"), one was seized after the master had gone on board the "Kotik" by M. Grebnitzky as he was on his way to the "Rosie Olsen" (p. 46), and that after the vessel was in tow the "Kotik" steamed round and picked up the others. As nothing appears to have been said as to the vessel being seized on account of the proceedings of the boats, this discrepancy is inexplicable; the Canadians could therefore have had no reason for framing a circumstantial account of the proceedings of the boats so entirely apocryphal if M. Grebnitzky's allegations are true. Then all the report of the conversations between M. Grebnitzky and the master and mate of the vessel has no place in M. Grebnitzky's account. His doubts as to seizing the vessel, and his statement that the North Pacific was "all Russian waters" are not noticed in the Russian account. If the vessel was so near land when seized, and there was no time wasted in picking up boats, as the Canadians allege, how was it that the "Kotik" did not get into port till 11 o'clock at night, the seizure having taken place about 2 o'clock in the afternoon? Is it probable that the vessel's log would bear on the face of it a statement that the vessel had been for thirteen days hanging round the islands, sending her boats into territorial waters to hunt? If the boats were seized as stated, how was it that even under threat of being sent to Vladivostock the master refused to admit that he had been sealing in Russian waters, and states positively that his boats were always to seaward of his vessel when out sealing? The Russian statement that the vessel was seen within territorial waters, and then made off, having signalled to her boats, is flatly contradicted by the Canadian statement that the vessel was becalmed and had been so for four hours before the "Kotik" was seen. If the boats were caught flagrante delicto as alleged, why was the fact not mentioned at the time, and what was the cause of M. Grebnitzky's doubts and hesitation as to seizing the vessel? Why was it necessary for him to go on board the "Olsen" and examine her skins, if he had already absolute proof of her guilt? In this case as well as the previous one the protocols and documents asked for have not been furnished. The decision of the Commission was arrived at, in so far as it was not based on these contemporaneous records and documents, entirely on the statements of the captor, who had every opportunity of knowing the evidence on behalf of the vessel, and whose statements were made in the absence of any one representing the defence, and subject to no cross-examination. It is impossible, therefore, for Her Majesty's Government to accept the decision of the Commission, and they must continue to press the claim of the owners for compensation for the loss of the voyage.

Pages 13 and 14 of Blue Book "Russia No. 3 (1893)":— This vessel was captured by the flag-ship "Vitiaz" on the 17th (29th) August, 1892. She was first sighted by the cruiser on the other (i.e., east) side of the isthmus at the south end of Copper Island, being then about 3 miles from a rookery. She sighted the cruiser, and at once set sail and gained the open sea, the cruiser having to pass round the long reef at X the south-east extremity of the island. After a chase of an hour and a-half she was seized 8 miles from the nearest land in north latitude 54° 29′, east longitude 168° 2′. The ship's papers showed that	Affidavits (pp. 71 and 92–94 of Blue Book "Russia No. 2 (1893)"). The vessel reached the sealing-grounds about the 10th July, and continued sealing 60 miles to north and 60 to 120 miles south of Copper Island for five weeks, all the time out of sight of land, and at no time sealing within 20 miles of land. The master, thinking his chronometer was out, stood in towards land to test it, passing Copper Island, bearing west-north-west about 12 miles distant, when the cruiser was sighted, and the vessel bore away to the east	Here the two accounts are in conflict, but only as to the distance of the vessel from land when sighted by the cruiser. According to the Russian statement the vessel when sighted was on the east side of Copper Island, about 3 miles from land; by the Canadian statement she was 10 or 12 miles east of the island. The documents now received from Russia—the protocol and the Admiral's Report—do not strengthen the Russian case, and show that the Commission have misunderstood the evidence of the Russian

she had been since the 29th July in the waters of the Commander Islands, and the Captain declared that the 608 skins found on board had been taken near Behring and Copper Islands, in contradiction, it is stated, to his declaration that the capture of seals had only taken place at a distance of 60 miles from land. The log-book had not been posted for two days. Protocol of Seizure. In the protocol of the 17th (29th) August, now received, it is stated that the "Vitiaz," "when in latitude 54° 29′ north, and longitude 168° 2′ east (south point of Copper Island, bearing N.E. 42° 5 miles off), saw a sailing-vessel to the E.N.E. about 8 miles, steering S.S.W., the approximate position of the vessel might have been 4 miles to the east of south point of Copper Island. The aforesaid sailing-vessel, after having sighted the cruiser, tacked on port, set all sails, and ran to the east. After one hour and thirty-five minutes' chase, at 3·10 P.M., the cruiser overtook the vessel, and after having fired a gun, obliged her to tack and hove-to. . . . The schooner was visited, duly examined by us. and confiscated both vessel and cargo, as found guilty of illegal seal-hunting within the limits of the Russian waters." Report of "Vitiaz." In the extract from the Report of the 29th September the following account is given: . . . . "We put on more sail, and the cruiser made for the southern rookery under sail. At 1·35 P.M., while we were holding a N.N.E. course, we saw on the horizon at point E.N.E. the mast of a schooner going, apparently, in a south-westerly direction, at a distance of 8 to 9 miles from the cruiser. The cruiser 'Vitiaz' was at that time to the west of a reef jutting out from the Southern Cape, and at a distance of 5 miles from the latter; the schooner was on the east side of the same reef, and was making round it; consequently, she could not have been more than from 3 to 4 miles from the shore, going towards the rookery. As soon as the schooner sighted the cruiser, she tacked on port, set all sails, and ran to the east. When I noticed the manœuvre I ordered the schooner to be chased, and all steam to be put on. The 'Vitiaz' had hitherto used four boilers only, but on this morning, foreseeing the possibility of a chase, I had ordered steam to be got up in two boilers more. With six boilers and fore and aft sails the cruiser made 12 knots an hour, and at that speed would come up with the schooner in about an hour and three-quarters. When we got within 2 miles of her, we fired a blank shot, and she at once tacked and hove-to, hoisting the English flag. The wind was at that time a top-gallant breeze, but there was a considerable swell. When we came up with the schooner I sent a boat with two officers and two quartermasters to examine the schooner, and to send the master with his papers, if any seal-skins and arms were found on board. Such articles were found, and the log-book had not been kept at all for the last two days. The master was therefore requested to come on board the cruiser with all the ship's papers. It appeared from the log-book that most of the seals had been killed at Copper Island, and as therefore the cruiser had sighted the schooner when the latter was within our territorial waters, I ordered the master to be informed that his schooner and her whole cargo were confiscated for having exercised a prohibited industry in Russian waters. . . . The master did not protest against the seizure of the schooner, but when signing the protocol he made the observation that he calculated the distance of the schooner from the shore when she ran to the east to be 10 miles, which	with a 6-knot breeze. In about an hour and a-half the cruiser came up and compelled the vessel, then about 25 miles to the east of the south end of Copper Island, to heave-to, and declared her seized. The Russians admitted the error in the chronometer. No boats were out, and no attempt made to take seals on the day that the vessel was seized.	officers laid before them. According to the protocol, the cruiser sighted the vessel when she (the cruiser) was in latitude 54° 29′ north and longitude 168° 2′ east. According to the Report of the Commission, following the entry made by the captor in the vessel's log, the vessel was seized in longitude 168° 2′ east and latitude 54° 29′ north. Yet it is stated that there was a chase of an hour and three-quarters, or thereby, the cruiser going at the rate of 12 knots an hour in pursuit of a vessel going due east. But if the protocol is right, it is clearly impossible that a vessel which, according to their own statements, was "3 to 4," or "approximative 4," miles to the east of the south point of Copper Island when she tacked and went east to escape the cruiser, should, after a chase of such duration, have been taken 5 miles or more to the west of the south point of Copper Island, in the position where the cruiser was when the vessels are said to have sighted each other. The Commission has, in fact, by mistake taken the position of the cruiser when she sighted her prey as the position where the capture took place. Moreover, as will be seen from the tracing annexed, the "Carmolite," if she was E.N.E. of the "Vitiaz" when sighted, could not, if the latter was in latitude 54° 29′ north, longitude 168° 2′ east, have had the reef between her and that vessel. The position of the cruiser when she sighted the vessel, 54° 29′ north latitude, and 168° 2′ east longitude, is, according to the small-scale Russian chart, 8 miles from Copper Island, according to the chart facing p. 72 of Blue Book "Russia No. 2 (1893)" 5 miles, but according to the large-scale chart of the Board of Admiralty, only a little over 4 miles, and if the "Carmolite" was then 8 to 9 miles from the cruiser, she must have been clearly beyond territorial waters. If the cruiser was in the position stated, viz.: south point of Copper Island bearing N.E. 42°, 5 miles off, and the schooner was east of the south point of Copper Island, and E.N.E. from the cruiser, the intersection of these bearings would place the schooner, according to the chart opposite p. 72 of Blue Book "Russia No. 2 (1893)" (facing p. 6 herewith), at a distance of 6½ miles from the south point of Copper Island, and 10½ miles from the cruiser. As to the pursuit, according to the protocol it lasted one hour and thirty-five minutes, when the cruiser fired a gun and the schooner hove-to. The Admiral's Report says it lasted about an hour and three-quarters, but as it also says the gun was fired when the cruiser came within 2 miles, the discrepancy is probably explained by the time occupied by the cruiser in coming up to the vessel after the latter hove-to. The cruiser, according to her own statement, was going 12 knots an hour, and she must have covered in the pursuit a distance of 21 knots, and if the south point of Copper Island was 42° north-east at a distance of 5 miles, or a little over 4 according to the Admiralty, when she started in pursuit, she must at that time have been about 3½ or 4 miles west of that point, and the position of the "Carmolite" when the capture took place must have been about 17 miles east from the same point. From the statement of the mate (p. 93, Blue Book "Russia No. 2 (1893)"), the "Carmolite" fled with about a 6-knot breeze—the Russian calls it "a top-gallant breeze." From the Report of the "Vitiaz," however, it appears that the schooner did not alter her course till after the "Vitiaz" had started in pursuit, and must therefore, in a period of less than an hour and thirty-five minutes, if she was within territorial waters when sighted, have done at least 13 knots, or about 8½ knots an hour. This is improbable, and as the statement of the times is more reliable than a guess as to the distance between the vessels, it is obvious that unless the "Carmolite" was more than even 9 miles from the cruiser she would have been overhauled in less than

is disproved by the fact that the schooner could not have been seen from the cruiser if she had been 15 miles distant." The entry made by the Commander of the "Vitiaz" in the "Carmolite's" log states, "On the 17th (29th) August, 1892, the schooner 'Carmolite' was seized in 54° 29′ north latitude, 168° 2′ east longitude.		the time stated, and must have been considerably more than even 4 miles from land when first sighted. The inference to be drawn from the facts of the pursuit thus confirms what has been said above as to the position of the "Carmolite" as fixed by the bearings given in the "Vitiaz" Report. A glance at the tracing will show that the statement of the Commission that the "Carmolite," "taking advantage of the fact that the latter (the cruiser), in order to reach her, was obliged to pass round a long reef situated at the south-eastern extremity of the island, set sail and gained the open sea," is unfounded. The "Vitiaz" Report states that the schooner was rounding the reef when sighted, going south according to her own account, and S.S.W. according to the cruiser, and then made due east, so that the course of the cruiser in pursuit, starting from a point south-west of the reef, could not have been interrupted by the reef, and, indeed, in none of the papers is this stated, so that it must have been an inference of the Commission from the fact of the reef having been mentioned as between the cruiser and the vessel when they sighted each other. They state also that the "Carmolite" was thus about 3 miles from a seal rookery. This is a mistake; the Report of the "Vitiaz" states that the vessel was making round the reef, "consequently she could not have been more than from 3 to 4 miles from the shore, going towards the rookery." The rookery in fact is on the south-west side of the island, the opposite side to that on which the vessel was when sighted. Now, what are the grounds upon which the vessel was seized? Captain Zarin states in his Report: "It appeared from the log-book that most of the seals had been killed at Copper Island, and therefore, as the cruiser had sighted the schooner when the latter was within territorial waters, I ordered the master to be informed that his schooner and her whole cargo were confiscated for having exercised a prohibited industry in Russian waters." But according to the statements of the officers of the cruiser the vessel was "3 to 4," or "aproximative 4," miles from land when sighted, and, as already shown, must have in reality been further. She was not, therefore, within territorial waters. Moreover, she was not sealing at the time,* nor is it alleged that she had been doing so immediately before, so that there was no offence to justify pursuit even if she was sighted in territorial waters. If the statement that the log-book showed "that most of the seals had been killed at Copper Island" is put forward to justify the capture, it can only be on the assumption that it shows that seals were taken within 3 miles of Russian territory. A list† of the daily positions of the "Carmolite," taken from the log-book, is annexed, and also an extract from the chart of the North Pacific. From the latter it will at once be seen that any position outside the parallelogram bounded by north latitude

* The mate, in his affidavit (p. 93, Blue Book "Russia No. 2 (1893)"), asserts that no boats were out or seals taken on the day when the vessel was taken, and the Russians do not contradict this statement.

54° 30′, east longitude 165° 30′, and north latitude 55° 30′, and east longitude 168° 30′, is well outside the territorial waters of the Commander Islands, and from the daily positions of the "Carmolite" it will be seen that only on one occasion—12th July—was she inside that parallelogram. Her position at noon on that day was 54° 42′ north latitude, 165° 51′ east longitude, and it will be seen that the distance from Behring Island was 14 miles. There is no foundation, therefore, for the statement that her log showed that she had caught seals within territorial waters, and the master's statement that his seals were all caught 20 to 60 miles from land is undoubtedly well founded.

There is therefore no defence for the seizure of the vessel. She was not within territorial waters when sighted, was committing no offence, nor had committed any offence during the whole time of her presence in the neighbourhood of the Commander group, the pursuit was therefore illegal ab initio, and the capture unjustifiable, and the claim for compensation is unimpeachable.

This vessel was captured by the "Zabiaka" on the 31st July (12th August), 1892, in north latitude 54° 17′, east longitude 168° 12′, 17 miles from Copper Island. The Commander of the cruiser, having been informed by coastguards that this schooner was sealing on the coast, proceeded towards her. On the way he found three boats of the "W. P. Sayward" sealing* within 3 miles of land, which it took him about two hours to seize and take in tow, the "Vancouver Belle" taking advantage of the delay to make for the open sea.

When seized it was found that no entry had been made in her log for twenty-four hours, but the entries found showed that she had on two occasions been engaged in sealing close to the shore in the straits between the islands.

We have received an affidavit by the master and crew of the vessel, dated the 6th April last, answering in detail the statements in the Russian account.

1. As to the statement that the "Zabiaka" was informed by coastguardsmen that the vessel was sealing on the coast, the master points out that on the 11th August, the day before the seizure, he was in latitude 54° 15′ north, and longitude 166° 30′ east, a distance of 60 miles W.S.W. from the south end of Copper Island. Bearing east at 8 A.M. the south end of the island was N.N.E., distance 35 miles. An observation at 12 noon gave the latitude as 54° 20′ north, and the south end of Copper Island was north, placing the vessel at a distance of 20 miles* from land. The vessel was then tacked head off shore on a south-east wind, and the vessel hove-to,

There is much discrepancy in this case, not only between the English and Russian versions, but between the various Russian versions, and it would appear that the Commission have seriously misunderstood the documents submitted to them by the Russian officers.

In the Report of the Commission it is stated (paragraph 4) that the Captain of the "Zabiaka" was "informed by coastguardsmen that this schooner was sealing on the coast," and that he "proceeded towards her." In paragraph 5, however, it appears that the information received was "that several foreign boats had landed at the rookery, and, after killing a certain number of seals, had put to sea again." The Commander in his own Report states he was "informed after midday by a signal from the shore that a sailing-vessel had been seen on the western side of the island." This latter account

Report of Russian Commission.	Statements of Masters and Crews.	Remarks.
It is added that as only two hours elapsed from the time the cruiser was sighted till the vessel was captured, she could not have proceeded further than 14 miles seawards. In the first Russian account the seizure is said to have taken place 18 miles from land. Protocol of Seizure. In the protocol of the seizure drawn up on board the "Zabiaka," which has now been received from Canada, the account is as follows:— "This 31st day of July, 1892, we, cruizing near the Commander Islands, and holding a course of 50° 49′, observed, at four minutes past 3 o'clock, on our right, a sailing-vessel making for the open sea, in consequence of which we made towards her, taking a course of S.W. 45°. "At 4·23 we approached the vessel, and fired a blank shot from a 9-pounder, slackening speed. "At 4·30 we came close up to the ship, which proved to be an English vessel, the 'Vancouver Belle.' We stopped the engine and hailed the master. From an examination of the papers and log-book it appeared that the ship left Vancouver in February, and in the latter part of July came very close to the Commander Islands and killed seals in the strait of the islands. The ship and her cargo, consisting of salt and about 600 seal-skins, were declared to be seized." Report of "Zabiaka." The fuller account given in the Report by the Commander of the cruizer "Zabiaka," received from Russia, is as follows:— "On the 31st July, when to the east of the southern extremity of Copper Island, and hidden by it, I was informed after midday by a signal from the shore that a sailing-vessel had been seen on the western side of the island. Having taken the cruiser round the cape, I saw at a distance of 3 miles from the shore three sails making for the open sea. On coming closer I found that they were three poaching boats making away from the cruiser. Having come up with the boats, which belonged to the schooner 'Sayward,' I ordered them to be seized. The boats, with nine poachers, their guns, and eight seals just killed, were taken on to the cruiser and confiscated. The boats and guns were sold by auction in the village of Nikolsky for 200 roubles. On being questioned, the foreigners showed me where their schooner was, in the direction of S.W. 45°. I proceeded to that quarter and soon sighted a schooner, coming up to her at 4·30. I sent for the master, and he came on board with his papers; but I found I had been deceived, the poachers had indicated a wrong direction. The schooner proved to be the British vessel 'Vancouver Belle,' master W. H. Copp, with a crew of twenty-three. On board were about 600 seal-skins, salt, gunpowder, and arms. I ordered the schooner to be confiscated, as it appeared from her log-book that some of the seals had been killed in the strait between the islands. I took the master and crew on board the cruiser, and ordered Lieutenant Koltshak to take the schooner to Petropaulovski. Immediately after the seizure of the schooner a thick fog came on, which prevented me from looking for the schooner 'Sayward.'"	and the boats put overboard, about 1 P.M. heading off shore towards the south-west. After lying-to for half-an-hour she proceeded to follow her boats. 2. With regard to the statement as to the "W. P. Sayward's" boats, Captain Copp gives the statement made to him at the time by the Captain of the "Zabiaka." The cruiser was lying in a sheltered cove on the east of Copper Island, and close to the south end, when the coastguard brought word that a schooner had been seen sealing close to the shore on the east side, and near the south point of the island, but had stood off to the E.N.E. The cruiser gave chase in this direction, but when a few miles out observed the "W. P. Sayward's" boats in shore, and, steaming back, picked up three of them at a distance of less than 3 miles from the coast. The crews of these boats informed the Captain of the cruiser that their vessel had gone south, and after steaming south for an hour the cruiser sighted the "Vancouver Belle." When asked if that was their vessel, they said they did not know, and when within 3 miles of the "Vancouver Belle" that it was not their ship. 3. It was at 2 o'clock, as stated, that the smoke of the cruiser was first seen, and a signal was put up to summon the boats, the one which was furthest from the ship being at a distance of 1½ miles from the schooner. The boats were on board at 3·30 P.M. (3 P.M. according to earlier affidavit, p. 109, Blue Book "Russia No. 2 (1893)"). At 4 P.M. the cruiser fired a gun, being about 4 miles away, and the schooner hove-to. Between 12 noon and the hour of seizure the vessel did not proceed seaward more than 4 miles. 4. As to the absence of any log entry for twenty-four hours, and the entries showing that she had sealed close to the islands, the master observes that sealers are not required to carry a certificated mate whose duty it is to keep the log. That notes had been made for future entries according to custom, while, as he pointed out to the Captain of the "Zabiaka" at the time the incriminating entries were made by the unqualified mate by mistake from dead reckoning, the correct position of the vessel being shown by remarks in the side column showing the distance from land by cross bearings, which were the work of the master, and calculated from the chart.	tallies with what the master of the "Vancouver Belle" says as to his conversation with the Captain of the cruiser as to the circumstances which led up to the seizure of his vessel (pp. 107, 108 of "Blue Book Russia No. 2 (1893)," and affidavit printed above). He had started in pursuit of the boats, and no doubt also of the vessel to which they belonged, and after he had seized the boats, proceeded to seize the first vessel he came across. The protocol drawn up at the time of seizure says nothing at all about the boats, but simply states that when the Commander was cruising about he sighted the vessel and made after her. Long before he came up to her he was aware that the boats did not belong to her, and the question immediately arises—What right had he in those circumstances to proceed either to search or seize the vessel? The statement of the Commission that the schooner was sealing on the coast is therefore clearly a mistake. The Commission observe that "It appeared from Captain Copp's own statement that it was 2 o'clock when he caught sight of the cruiser. As it was 4* o'clock when the 'Zabiaka' came up with the schooner, the latter could not have proceeded further than 14 miles seaward." Of course not, and, as a matter of fact, having to pick up her boats, she could not have gone anything like that distance, and must therefore have been well outside territorial waters when pursuit began, even if we accept the Russian statement that she was seized only 17 or 18 miles from land. The latitude and longitude of the seizure are not given either in the protocol or the Report of the "Zabiaka," and it is impossible to reconcile the figures given by the Commission with the statements made in these documents, and by the Commission itself in paragraph 5. The position latitude 54° 17′ north and longitude 168° 12′ east is almost due south (17 or 18 miles) of the southern extremity of Copper Island. Now, Captain de Levron says in his Report that he took the cruiser round the cape (i.e., round to the west side of the isle), and then saw three boats making for the open sea, 3 miles from the shore. He pursued and captured them 9 miles from the south-eastern extremity of the island (paragraph 5, Commission Report). Then, on the misleading information of the boats' crews, he turned his course to S.W. 45°* (protocol and "Zabiaka" Report). He started about midday (Report of "Zabiaka"), and took about two hours to seize the boats, so that it must have been about 2 o'clock when he started on this course—being then 9 miles south of Copper Island. As he kept on this S.W. course in search of the "Sayward" till 4·30 (Report of "Zabiaka"), he must have been some distance to the west of the island, and by that time much more than 17 miles from the island. The only possible explanation is that in this case, as in the previous one of the "Carmolite," the Commission has taken the position of the cruiser at the time she sighted the schooner as the place of seizure. The schooner was sighted at four minutes past 3 o'clock (protocol), when, if the boats of the "Sayward" were seized about 2 o'clock, 9 miles from the S.E. end of Copper Island, the cruiser might have been in the position indicated in the Report of the Commission as the position of seizure. But as she then pursued the vessel till 4·30 in a S.W. direction (protocol, paragraph 2), this would bring her very near the position given by the master of the "Vancouver Belle," south end of Copper Island, N. by E. 24 miles, at p. 107 of the Blue Book. The Captain of the "Zabiaka" made no objection to that statement, and it is therefore most probably the real position at the time of seizure. If so, and the fact that the wind was S.E. and only very light at the time is borne in mind (p. 106 of Blue Book), it is obvious that the vessel could have fled only a short distance, must have been more than 17 miles from land when sighted by the cruiser, and still farther of course when captured. From the time when the boats were taken to the seizure of the "Vancouver Belle" 2½ hours elapsed, and it is inconceivable that in that time the "Zabiaka" only made 8 miles. The whole of paragraph 4 of the Report of the Commission is based on the assumption that the case reported to the cruiser was that of the "Vancouver Belle," whereas, from paragraph 5, it is clear that it was the boats of the "W. P. Sayward," and that the boarding of the "Vancouver Belle" was illegal to begin with, as she was outside territorial waters, and had not been within them, when pursuit began, and there was therefore no hot pursuit to justify interfering with the vessel on the high seas. The statement of Captain de Levron to Captain Copp (p. 109 of the Blue Book) that his instructions were to seize all vessels east of the line of demarcation and north of a line on a parallel of latitude running 3 miles south of the southernmost Aleutian Island to the Kamschatkan coast, would have been quite gratuitous if, as is implied by the Commission, the vessel was seized in hot pursuit from an offence committed in territorial waters. The contemporaneous record, the protocol, says nothing of any immediate offence, nor as to the position of the vessel when sighted. It frankly admits that the vessel was seen, chased, and boarded and searched for the purpose of finding something incriminating, and it gives the result of that search as the sole justification for the seizure. Even if such search had revealed that an offence had previously been committed, the seizure cannot be justified by evidence obtained by violating a foreign flag on the high seas.

* The Captain of the "Zabiaka" in his own account says 4·30, and in the protocol says he approached the vessel at 4·23.

		The statement of Captain Copp as to the attempts of the "W. P. Sayward's" boats to mislead the cruiser is borne out by the entirely independent statement of the captain of the "W. P. Sayward" as to the intentions of his hunters in case they were seized by the Russians (p. 68 of Blue Book), and confirmed by the extract from the Report of the Commander of the "Zabiaka," dated the 11th August, 1892, now received from Russia. As already pointed out the sole reason given in that statement for the capture is that "it appeared from her log-book that some of the seals had been killed in the strait between the islands." A list of the daily positions from the log-book is attached,* and it appears that the only occasion on which this took place was on the 9th August, three days before the seizure took place, and the vessel's position on that day is given as 54° 43′ north latitude, 167° 24′ east longitude, a position 8 miles from the nearest land. The position of the vessel on that day and on the four other occasions on which she found herself inside the parallelogram referred to in the remarks on the case of the "Carmolite" is marked on the extract from the chart, and it will be at once seen that on every occasion the vessel was well outside territorial waters. On the 14th and 15th July she was 12 miles from land, and on the 19th July 11 miles. There is not a scrap of evidence to show that the vessel was ever nearer than that to the land, and the seizure is based, not on her having taken seals within territorial waters, but in the strait between the islands. The so-called strait is, on the face of it, not a strait at all. At their nearest points the islands are 30 miles apart, and a claim to regard the whole extent of sea between the islands as territorial waters is absolutely untenable.

The claim in respect of the vessel is therefore irresistible—

1. Because it is not alleged that she was engaged or had immediately before been engaged in committing an offence within Russian jurisdiction.

2. Because at the time of alleged offence on which she was seized she was more than 9 miles from Russian territory.

3. The log-book does not state that she caught any seals when in that position, and there is no other evidence adduced to support the charge.

4. The alleged offence was committed three days before, and was only discovered when the vessel was illegally boarded, and there was therefore no hot pursuit; indeed, the Commander of the cruiser was admittedly pursuing another vessel, whose boats he had captured, and only after seizing them 9 miles from land was he, in consequence of the false statements of the boats' crews, put on the track on which he accidentally discovered the "Vancouver Belle."

5. The vessel was well outside territorial waters when sighted, and the pursuit was therefore illegal ab initio, and cannot be defended as a case of "hot pursuit."

Page 14 of Blue Book "Russia No. 3 (1893)":— This vessel was seized by the "Zabiaka" on the 29th July (10th August), 47 miles from Behring Island, on suspicion of being one of the vessels whose boats had been seized in Russian territorial waters. As the suspicion was not confirmed by positive proofs, though 274 skins were found on board, the "Zabiaka" confined herself to warning the vessel not to engage in sealing in the Russian	Affidavit of March (pp. 74, 75 of Blue Book "Russia No. 2 (1893)"). On the 10th August, in latitude 53° 50′ north, longitude 166° 7′ east, the vessel was boarded by an officer from the "Zabiaka," and the master ordered on board the cruiser with his ship's papers. Captain de Levron then proceeded with the log-book and chart to locate the vessel daily from the time of entering Asiatic	The pretext alleged to justify the arrest of this vessel will not bear examination. It is stated that she was seized on the suspicion that she was one of those whose boats had been seized in territorial waters. No hint of this was given at the time of the arrest, and it appears from the papers that there were three different seizures of boats, those of the "E. B. Marvin," "W. P. Sayward," and waters round the Commander Islands. The warning was entered in the log-look of the vessel. The Commission add that "as for the assertion of the master of the 'C. H. Tupper' that the Commander of the 'Zabiaka' made use of threats towards him, and forbade him to hunt seals in the open sea, it is not supported by proofs. On the contrary, the seal-skins found on board the schooner were not seized, and the master's statement that the seizure resulted in loss to him is without foundation."	waters. This examination showed that at no time had the "C. H. Tupper" been nearer to land than 60 miles. Captain de Levron entered the position at the time of seizure in the log, and told the master he could go home with his vessel, but that the skins would be taken, saying: "Your Government stopped sealing on your side, we stopped sealing on this side." The master replied that sealing was stopped in Behring Sea, but not in the Pacific Ocean, and that he had been sealing along the Alaskan coast. This Captain de Levron doubted, as he was under the impression that sealing had been stopped there, but the master informed him that he had entered and cleared at the United States' port of Sand Point with skins caught in the Pacific, and that he was still in the Pacific. After again going over the vessel's positions, Captain de Levron informed the master that he would allow him to proceed home, but that if caught again both vessel and skins would be seized, at the same time producing a Proclamation prohibiting seal-hunting in the Okhotsk Sea and Russian waters. On being asked to define Russian waters, he replied, "Never mind limits. No seal catch. You can navigate these waters, but no seal catch. You came here, you steal seals." The master was also told that, having been warned, he would be seized if found by any other Russian cruiser. The entry made in the vessel's log was:— "The warning was delivered from the Russian man-of-war cruiser 'Zabiaka,' which proclaimed the prohibition of seal-hunting in Russian waters, and near the Commander Islands."	"Annie Moore." The first of these seizures—that of the "E. B. Marvin's" boat, was made on the 5th August, at a time when the "Zabiaka" was at Petropaulovski (see affidavits in cases of "Rosie Olsen," "Ariel," and "Willie McGowan"), which place she did not leave at least till the 9th August (p. 34 of Blue Book "Russia No. 2 (1893)"), the day the "Majestic" sailed, as on the 8th late at night she was seeing to the shipment of the crews on board that vessel (p. 26). She could not possibly have gone to Copper Island and heard of the boat seizures and got back to the position in which she came across the "C. H. Tupper" in one day, and she must therefore have fallen in with the "C. H. Tupper" on her way back from Petropaulovski to the islands. As there is no telegraphic communication, nor even mail communication, with the islands, it is practically impossible that Captain de Levron could have heard of the seizures before he left Petropaulovski and fell in with the "C. H. Tupper." Indeed, from the statement in paragraph 5, the only possible inference is that the cruiser started in pursuit of the boats immediately she heard of their being on the coast. That was on the 12th, two days after she had overhauled the "C. H. Tupper," and on that day, as we know from Captain Copp (p. 107), she had the crews of the captured boats on board. If that had been the case on the 10th, the master of the "C. H. Tupper" would have seen and remarked it. Even if the Commander of the "Zabiaka" had heard of the seizure of the "E. B. Marvin's" boat, that afforded no justification for overhauling on the high seas the first British vessel she came across in order to find out whether she was connected with the offence. No apology is made for this, and though, owing to the statement made by the Captain of the cruiser that if the "C. H. Tupper" did not at once give up her sealing she would be seized,

		the "C. H. Tupper" ceased sealing and made for home, thereby losing a great part of her voyage, it is asserted that she suffered no loss, as the skins on board were not confiscated. The claim for loss was not for skins seized, but for the breaking up of the voyage illegally. It is stated that there is no proof of the threats used by the Captain of the cruiser, but the entry made in the log-book was not merely, as asserted by the Commission, a prohibition of sealing in the waters washing the Commander Islands, but of seal-hunting in Russian waters and near the Commander Islands, and the term "Russian waters" was interpreted to the captain of the "C. H. Tupper" as a prohibition of pelagic sealing altogether, and the proof of that is that he immediately sailed for home. In this case, therefore, Her Majesty's Government have a clear right, not only to an apology for the violation of our flag by illegal boarding and search on the high seas, but to compensation for the loss to the owners by the vessel being driven from the sealing-grounds. It is to be noted that the menaces are said to be devoid of "proof," not of "truth."
"W. P. HALL." Page 15 of Blue Book "Russia No. 3 (1893)":— The schooner "W. P. Hall" was found on the 5th (17th) August in 54° 33′ north latitude, and 166° 10′ east longitude, engaged in sealing at sea 17 miles from Behring Island. Although 325 skins were found on board, there was no direct proof that the schooner had been sealing in Russian territorial waters. The vessel was therefore only warned "to continue to abstain from sealing on the Russian shore."	Affidavit (pp. 98, 99 of Blue Book "Russia No. 2 (1893)"). About 1 o'clock on the 17th August the "W. P. Hall" was 25 miles south-west of Behring Island, lying becalmed, when she was hailed by the "Zabiaka," and the master ordered to come on board and bring his papers. He did so, and the papers and chart on which the daily positions were marked. The Captain of the "Zabiaka" was apparently satisfied with the results of his examination, and told the master to depart out of Russian waters forthwith. The master asked what were the limits of Russian waters, and the Captain of the cruiser marked the chart with a	The case of the "W. P. Hall" is similar to that of the "C. H. Tupper." She was boarded by the "Zabiaka" apparently when that vessel was on her way to Petropaulovski with the crews of the "Vancouver Belle" and the captured boats (see p. 108 of Blue Book "Russia No. 2 (1893)"). There is no pretence that she had in any way committed an offence, and with regard to what the Commander of the "Zabiaka" entered in her log, the Commission say that the warning was that the vessel "devait continuer à s'abstenir de chasser l'otarie sur la côte Russe," an interpretation which the actual words cannot by any stretch be made to bear. The actual entry was:

Hall" as follows:— "August 17, 1892. "British schooner 'Walter P. Hall' was within Russian waters for sealing. The captain of the schooner, J. B. Brown, received warning not to cross Russian waters any more, and have signed the notice of Russian Government. (Signed) "B. DE LEVRON," &c. The Captain of the cruiser having asserted this wide extension of Russian authority, the master of the "W. P. Hall," finding it was useless to refuse in face of a threat of seizure, signed a document to relieve his vessel, and departed for home without attempting further sealing.	"17th August, 1892, British schooner 'Walter P. Hall' was within Russian waters for sealing (p. 101 of Blue Book). The captain of the schooner, J. B. Brown, received warning not to cross Russian waters any more, and have signed the notice of Russian Government." Now this is neither more nor less than an assertion that a vessel sealing at 17 miles from the coast was within Russian waters; and, further, when asked to define Russian waters, Captain de Levron himself drew a line from Cape Chalutka, on the coast of Kamschatka, to the most southerly point of the Aleutians as the boundary of Russian waters, and the chart with this mark on it has been sent to Russia. The statement that though she had 325 skins on board the Russian cruiser confined himself to this warning, and did not seize her, is no justification, unless it is meant that seals can only be caught in Russian territorial waters, which is absurd on the face of it. The facts remain uncontradicted that the vessel was illegally arrested, and was forced to abandon her sealing altogether, as the area prescribed by the cruiser covered the whole area within which seals are to be found at that period. The claim for compensation is therefore well founded, and Her Majesty's Government must press it.

[August 12, 1896.]

The Law Officers of the Crown to Colonial Office.

Sir, Royal Courts of Justice, August 12, 1896.

Extradition between the Straits Settlements and Kedah.

WE were honoured with your commands signified in Mr. Fairfield's letter of the 31st ultimo, stating that you had directed him to lay before us the inclosed copies of correspondence with the Governor of the Straits Settlements on the subject of a proposal for the mutual extradition between that Colony and Kedah of labourers who had broken their contracts of service in the Colony and escaped to Kedah, or vice versâ, and of previous correspondence on the same subject in 1888.

That by the law of the Straits Settlements and by the law of Kedah certain breaches of labour contracts were criminal offences. That the planters in the Colony would suffer great loss if the labourers employed under contract could abscond with impunity by escaping into Kedah. That therefore the authorities in Kedah had surrendered such fugitives, but that it could not be expected that they would continue to do so unless the Colonial authorities would reciprocally surrender labourers who absconded from plantations in Kedah and escaped into the Colony.

That by the Straits Extradition Order in Council of the 19th August, 1889, the Governor of the Colony was empowered to extradite to foreign States—in the case to which "The Extradition Act, 1870," did not apply—persons accused or convicted of certain crimes committed in such States, and that in the case of the native States in the Malayan Peninsula which were under British protection, and in the case of Johore, breach of contract of service, which would be punishable in the Colony by fine or imprisonment if committed there, was made an extradition crime.

That the Governor's proposal was that the Order in Council should be amended by extending the latter provision to the case of Kedah.

That Kedah was part of the dominions of the King of Siam, and that Article V of the Treaty between Great Britain and Siam of the 6th May, 1869, contained an Agreement for the mutual extradition of persons convicted of, or charged with, certain crimes escaping from British territory into Kedah or vice versâ.

That it had been suggested that a further Agreement might be made with Siam extending Article V of the Treaty of 1869 so as to add criminal breach of contract of service to the extradition crimes specified therein, but that the Foreign Office considered that extradition arrangements with foreign States should be confined in their operation to the crimes specified in the Extradition Acts, 1870 and 1873, and that there were objections to negotiating Extradition Treaties with countries in which the Queen exercised extra-territorial jurisdiction over her own subjects.

That the Foreign Office also objected to the proposed extension of the Straits Order in Council so as to authorize extradition to Kedah for the offence of breach of contract on the ground that, in the absence of an Extradition Agreement, extradition to Kedah would not be justifiable, and they suggested that as most of the labourers employed under contract in Kedah were said to be British subjects the matter might be arranged so far as such British subjects were concerned by the operation of "The Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881."

That the Queen exercised jurisdiction in Siam under the Foreign Jurisdiction Act, and the exercise of that jurisdiction was regulated by "The Siam Order in Council, 1889," and Courts under that Order had been established in Kedah.

That by "The Siam Order in Council, 1889" (Article 57), "The Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881," was applied to Siam, as if Siam were a British possession, subject to certain qualifications, one of which was, that it should apply only in the case of British subjects, and Siam and the Colony of the Straits Settlements were declared to be deemed to be one group of British possessions for the purposes of Part II of the Act. That it was presumed, therefore, that a British subject charged with an offence committed in Kedah and punishable under the Siam Order in Council could be ordered to be returned from the Colony to Kedah under the Fugitive Offenders Act,

That breach of contract of service did not appear to be an offence punishable under the Siam Order in Council as defined in Article 33, as it was not punishable in England on indictment, and was not declared by the Siam Order in Council, or by any Regulation made by virtue of that Order to be punishable as an offence against that Order; but it was suggested that a Regulation might be made under Article 84 of the Order constituting a breach of contract of service which was an offence against the local law, an offence punishable under the Order, and that if this were done the object desired by the Governor of the Straits, and the Sultan of Kedah might, in the case of British subjects, be obtained through the machinery of the Fugitive Offenders Act.

That by 37 & 38 Vict., cap. 38, crimes and offences committed at any place in the Malayan Peninsula extending southward from the 9th degree of north latitude (which includes Kedah) by British subjects were cognizable in the Criminal Courts of the Colony, but it was presumed that, having regard to section 33 of the Fugitive Offenders Act, the existence of this jurisdiction would not preclude the rendition of a British subject to Kedah under that Act.

Mr. Fairfield was to request that we would favour you with our opinion upon the following questions:—

1. Whether it would be proper to amend "The Straits Extradition Order in Council, 1889," so as to empower the Governor of the Straits Settlements to surrender to the authorities of Kedah persons accused or convicted of having committed in Kedah a breach of contract of service which, if committed in the Colony, would be an offence punishable with fine or imprisonment, or both.

2. Whether the rendition from the Colony to Kedah of persons who commit in Kedah a breach of contract of service which is punishable by the law of Kedah, and which, if committed in the Colony, would be punishable by the law of the Colony, could be obtained under "The Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881."

(1.) As the law now stands.

(2.) If a regulation were made under Article 84 of the Siam Order in Council constituting such breach of contract an offence against that Order.

(3.) Whether such a regulation could properly be made.

(4.) Whether in any other manner the extradition desired by the Governor of the Straits and the Sultan of Kedah can be effected.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your commands, have the honour to

Report—

1. That there are, in our opinion, objections to dealing with the question raised as a matter of extradition.

The offences are not of the serious character which usually form the subject of extradition arrangements, and the relations which exist between Great Britain and Siam under the Order in Council of the 28th November, 1889, make it better to deal with the matter, so far as British subjects are concerned, under the Foreign Jurisdiction Act. If the matter were dealt with as one of extradition, it would not be confined to British subjects, and it might be impracticable to secure that the native Courts in Kedah did not deal with the fugitives surrendered to them in a manner which would be regarded in this country as cruel and barbarous. Apparently all practical purposes will be served by dealing with the case of British subjects in Kedah.

2. As the law now stands, persons guilty of the offences in question could not be properly dealt with, or handed to the authorities of Kedah, but if a proper regulation were made under clause 84 of the Siam Order in Council, such breach of contract would be made an offence against the Order, and offenders being British subjects, could then be handed back under the powers of clause 57 for trial in the British Courts in Kedah under the Siam Order in Council.

3 and 4. In our opinion such a regulation may properly be made.

We have, &c.

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, January 30, 1896.

Mr. Gowrie's arrest, imprisonment and expulsion by Spanish authorities during Cuban insurrection.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, the papers noted in the accompanying list which relate to the case of a British subject named William Gowrie, who was apprehended at the instance of the military authorities of Guantanamo, in Cuba, for alleged complicity in the insurrection in that island.

It appears from the accompanying despatches (Papers B and G) from Mr. Ramsden, Her Majesty's Consul at Santiago de Cuba, who enters very fully into the details of the case, that Mr. Gowrie, who was the Chief Engineer of the Guantanamo Railway, was (with others) denounced to the authorities for assisting the rebels, arrested by General Cancellos, the Spanish Military Commander there, on the 28th October last, and consigned to the Morro Fortress at Santiago de Cuba on the 30th of that month.

Of the truth of the accusation Her Majesty's Government are not at present in a position to judge, but the evidence as yet produced against Mr. Gowrie appears at first sight to be extremely slight, consisting in the discovery in his house of a small revolver and of some empty cartridge cases of the new Mauser pattern. Mr. Gowrie states that the former had been in his possession for purposes of defence for twelve years past, and that the latter had been picked up by his children and used by them as playthings.

Mr. Ramsden himself appears to be convinced of the prisoner's innocence, and to have made every endeavour to get the case summarily dealt with by the local authorities. As, however, his efforts in this direction proved unavailing, the case was reported to the Secretary of State, who, in view of the delay which had already occurred and which frequently characterizes Spanish legal proceedings, instructed Her Majesty's Ambassador at Madrid to bring the facts to the notice of the Spanish Government, and to urge them to send orders to Cuba with a view to the immediate trial of Mr. Gowrie.

As the result, it would seem, of this action, Mr. Gowrie was, on the 12th December last, up to which date he had remained a prisoner in the Morro Fortress, handed over to the British Consul, by whom he was informed that, by the orders of General Martinez Campos, he was released, but that he must leave the island immediately, and would not be permitted to return to it.

Mr. Gowrie has now forwarded through the Consul the accompanying Protest (Inclosure in Paper K), complaining of his arrest on a charge which has never been made known to him; of his detention in prison for more than six weeks without any form of trial; of his summary expulsion from Cuba; and of the damage entailed upon him by this arbitrary treatment, which has involved the loss of a situation wherein he was earning 218 Spanish gold dollars per month, and the expenses necessarily accompanying his detention.

No formal claim for compensation has yet been advanced by Mr. Gowrie, but it seems reasonable to suppose that such a step may be taken by him at no distant date.

The case of Mr. Gowrie appears in its general character to have considerable analogy to the cases of British subjects arrested without definite charge, detained without trial, and finally arbitrarily expelled from Hawaii, for alleged complicity in the Royalist Insurrection, which are submitted to you by the Secretary of State in another reference of same date with this letter. In the present case, however, there is no complaint of violence at the time of arrest, or of harsh treatment during the period of detention.

In these circumstances the question would seem to arise, whether Her Majesty's Government could properly put forward a claim (1) that Mr. Gowrie should be allowed to return to Cuba, and (2) for compensation in respect either of his arrest and imprisonment, or of his expulsion, or both; and, in the event of the answer to the latter question being in the affirmative, it will further become necessary to consider what approximate amount of compensation will fairly meet the merits and redress the injuries in this case.

I am to request that you will take the papers transmitted herewith into your consideration, and that you will favour the Marquess of Salisbury with your opinion on the questions submitted in this letter, and with any general observations which you may have to offer on the case.

I have, &c.

Report.

In our opinion, a claim for compensation should be presented. Whether it can properly be pressed must depend on the question whether the Spanish Government are able to give explanations which may alter the aspect which the case at present bears.

As an insurrection actually existed in Cuba, the Spanish authorities were justified in arresting and imprisoning for a reasonable time any one whom they might reasonably suppose to be co-operating with the insurgents, and it does not appear that the proceedings against Mr. Gowrie were, in the first instance, taken otherwise than in good faith. Moreover, the British Consul rather invited proceedings by martial law instead of the dilatory proceedings of the regular Courts. We, therefore, do not think that any claim can be properly maintained in respect of the arrest and imprisonment.

As regards Mr. Gowrie's expulsion from the island, it cannot, we think, be denied that, apart from express Convention or Treaty, the Government of a State is not guilty of any infraction of international law by refusing to admit aliens, or requiring them to withdraw. Such a right ought, however, in the case of subjects of friendly States, to be exercised reasonably; and if there are grounds for alleging that the subject of a friendly State, after having been allowed to settle in the country, has been arbitrarily expelled, we think that a case arises for diplomatic representation by his Government.

Mr. Gowrie had been allowed to settle in Cuba, and upon the statements before us it certainly appears that there was an absence of any evidence to sustain the charge on which he had been imprisoned, and that he was required to leave the island merely by way of putting an end to the proceedings which must have ended in his acquittal. So far as the papers before us go, there does not appear to be the slightest reason to suppose that his continued residence in Cuba could have been regarded as involving danger to the State.

We think that a claim may fairly be put forward that Mr. Gowrie should be paid six months' salary, and a sum which will cover the cost of the removal of himself and his family from the island. As he has lost his post in Cuba, it does not appear to us that it would be advisable in his interest to ask that he should be allowed to return to the island. Having regard to his chance of obtaining other employment elsewhere, we think that the scale we have indicated may be adopted in fixing the amount which Her Majesty's Government should endeavour to obtain for him from the Spanish authorities.

We should, however, again point out, that if the Spanish Government is able to

Incitement to murder Sultan in "To-Day."

WE do not think that a Government prosecution in this case is advisable.

A libel upon a foreign Sovereign may undoubtedly form the subject of an indictment or a criminal information. But in the present case the attack upon the Sultan is mainly with reference to his public conduct in connection with the Armenians, and, in our opinion, it would be very improbable that a conviction could be obtained upon a prosecution for libel in respect of these paragraphs.

A graver question arises upon the suggestion contained in one of these paragraphs that the Sultan should be assassinated.

Inciting to murder any person, whether a subject of Her Majesty or not, is an offence both at Common Law and under 24 and 25 Vic., cap. 100, S. 4; and the case of Reg. v Most (7 Q.B.D. 244) shows that the offence may be committed by the publication of a newspaper article, although the incitement is not directed to any person in particular.

If the paragraph in question can be regarded as seriously inciting the Armenians to kill the Sultan, the publisher would undoubtedly be punishable for inciting to murder. But upon the whole we think, having regard to the fact that the publication is in English and took place in England, that a jury would come to the conclusion that the paragraph is rather a very forcible expression of the abhorrence which the writer appears to entertain for the Sultan, than a serious incitement to his murder. It would not probably be read by any persons who would be likely to be affected by it.

These paragraphs are undoubtedly in the worst possible taste, but we do not think that any proceedings can be taken upon them with reasonable prospect of success.

explain his expulsion by showing that they had reason to suppose that it was ordered in the interest of public peace, the case would present a totally different aspect from that which it bears on Mr. Gowrie's statement; and if such explanation should be given, we do not think that the claim could be properly pressed.

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, August 12, 1896.

Scandals in Constantinople Consular Court. Appearance of Judge Tarring as witness and defendant.

I AM directed by the Marquess of Salisbury to lay before you the papers enumerated in the inclosed list relating to certain judicial proceedings in the Supreme Consular Court at Constantinople, in which the Judge, as well as several officers of the Court and Consulate, are directly or indirectly involved.

The origin of these proceedings may be traced back to a dispute which arose in 1894 between Mr. Henry Silley, at that time Chief Clerk of the Consular Court, on the one hand, and Mr. Vice-Consul Sarell, Mr Charles Hamson, Consular Clerk, and Mr. William Thompson, Harbour-master and Inspector of Police—all three equally officers of the Court—on the other hand, concerning the conduct of a wine business carried on by the "Société Vinicole de Turquie (Limited)," of which the several gentlemen were partners

The nature of the dispute, the interference of the Ambassador and that of the Secretary of State in the matter, which eventually led to the removal of Mr. Silley from the service, are briefly set forth in the Memorandum marked (A).

Since his removal Mr. Silley has made a series of complaints against his former superiors and colleagues, whom he accuses of having intrigued and conspired together for the purpose of obtaining his removal from his official position.

In numerous letters addressed by Mr. Silley and by his friends and relations, both to Her Majesty's Embassy at Constantinople and direct to the Foreign Office, grave charges have been brought forward against Mr. Tarring and Mr. Sarell, and the Secretary of State has been called upon to order an official inquiry to be made into the matter. As a number of law-suits connected with the affairs of the Société Vinicole were actually pending in the Consular Court, the Secretary of State was not disposed to sanction the institution of such an inquiry pending a settlement of the legal issues. No replies having been returned to the communications received from Mr. Silley and his friends beyond formal acknowledgments of receipt, further letters followed, reiterating the charges against the two officials, asking for information as to the exact grounds for Mr. Silley's removal from the service, threatening to publish the correspondence relating to that removal, and finally foreshadowing the institution of further proceedings in the Supreme Court These letters also have been merely acknowledged or left unanswered.

On the 23rd July Mr. Silley filed a petition in the Supreme Court, in which he claims heavy damages from Messrs. Tarring, Sarell, Hamson, and Thompson for alleged malicious conspiracy. The text of this petition (inclosure in M. Mizzi's letter of the 30th July, 1896, Paper P), states in detail the various charges advanced by Mr. Silley.

Meanwhile, as will be seen from the annexed despatch from Mr. Herbert, Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Constantinople, No. 44, Consular, of the 21st July, 1896 (Paper Q), a number of actions connected with the Société Vinicole have been finally disposed of in the Consular Court. These need not, therefore, be at present considered. But there is one suit still pending in that Court bearing directly upon the conduct of Mr. Tarring and Mr. Sarell in a matter which forms the subject of some of Mr. Silley's most serious charges against them. This is an action brought against Mr. Sarell by the "Constantinople Mutual Benefit Building Society," respecting which some particulars are given in the Memorandum marked (R). The plaintiffs in this action charge Mr. Sarell with fraud, and complain of the conduct of Mr. Tarring, and in a letter addressed to the Secretary of State on the 23rd July, 1896 (Paper V), the Building Society urge that another Judge may be appointed to try this case, since they, as plaintiffs in the action, desire to have Mr. Tarring's evidence, and since the latter's previous connection with the incidents out of which the action has arisen might produce an impression of bias, should he preside over the trial.

The question raised by this request is one requiring consideration equally in connection with the action which, as stated above, is being brought by Mr. Silley against Messrs. Tarring, Sarell, Hamson, and Thompson.

Being required to appear as witness for the plaintiff in one case and as a defendant in the other, Mr. Tarring cannot, obviously, try either of them in his capacity as Judge.

It must be considered in the first instance:

1. Whether it is necessary or desirable, or indeed practicable, that Mr. Tarring should be called as witness in the case of the Building Society v. Sarell, and that he should defend the action brought against him (and others) by Mr. Silley.

According as this question is answered in the negative or in the affirmative, the further questions will arise:

2. If it be decided that Mr. Tarring should not appear as witness or defendant, on what ground should this decision be based, and in what manner should effect be given to it? Or,

3. In the contrary case, how should the Court be constituted for the purpose of trying those cases in which Mr. Tarring would have to appear?

In regard to these three questions, I am directed to offer the following observations:—

It is most desirable in the interest of the public service that the scandal created by the continued litigation in which the officials of the Supreme Consular Court at Constantinople are involved, should, if possible, be put a stop to. It is probable that this end would be best and soonest attained if every facility were given for trying at once the two actions in which the principal issues appear to be clearly raised.

From this point of view it may be considered that the fact of Mr. Tarring being a Judge should not be taken advantage of, in order, in one case, to deprive the parties of his evidence, if it is essential to their case, and, in the other case, to stop altogether the action to which it is intended that he should be a party.

On the other hand, it may be urged that the mere fact of a Judge appearing in his own Court, first, as witness in a case in which the plaintiffs, by whom he is to be called, allege irregular conduct on his part, in his administrative capacity, and, secondly, as one of the defendants in a suit in which he is charged with a number of dishonourable and fraudulent acts, cannot fail to add to the scandal, and to seriously lower the dignity of the Court in the eyes of the public.

The latter view of the matter is the one evidently taken by Mr. Tarring himself, since in a letter addressed by him to Mr. Davidson, Q.C., the Legal Adviser to this Department, on the 23rd July last (Paper W), he explains the attitude which he proposes to adopt with the view of preventing any action being brought in his Court to which he himself is to be a party.

It should be explained in this connection that Mr. Tarring is at this moment in England on leave. During his absence from his post it was necessary to appoint an Acting Judge to preside over the Supreme Court at Constantinople, and by a special arrangement with the Colonial Office the services of Mr. Lucie Smith, District Court Judge at Nicosia (Cyprus) have been secured for this purpose.

If it be held advisable that Mr. Tarring should not appear as a witness in the case of the Building Society versus Sarell, it would probably be found most convenient to grant him an extension of his leave for a sufficient period to allow the action to be meanwhile tried by Mr. Lucie Smith, who would continue to sit as Acting Judge.

In regard to the petition filed by Mr. Silley against Messrs. Tarring, Sarell, Hamson, and Thompson, it is presumed that Mr. Tarring is right in stating (in his letter to Mr. Davidson, Paper W) that the Acting Judge at Constantinople has no power to order service of any petition on a person in England, as being beyond the jurisdiction of his Court. It is further presumed that without such service the action against Mr. Tarring cannot proceed, but that it must be deferred until Mr. Tarring returns within the jurisdiction of the Court. But as Mr. Tarring, on eventually returning to Constantinople, will at once resume the presidency of his Court, superseding the Acting Judge, any application in the case will have to be made to himself, and such application he expresses the intention (in his letter of the 23rd July, Paper W) not to entertain in any case to which he is, or is proposed to be, a party.

In the event of its being considered both practicable and desirable that Mr. Tarring should appear respectively as a witness and as a defendant in actions to be tried in his own Court, it will remain to determine the constitution of the Court on these occasions.

Under the provisions of paragraph 6 of the Order in Council of the 8th March, 1895 (of which a copy is annexed hereto—Paper X), Mr. Lucie Smith has been appointed to act as Judge of the Supreme Court during Mr. Tarring's absence "from the Consular district of Constantinople." This acting appointment would, it is apprehended come to an end automatically with the return of Mr. Tarring to Constantinople, even though he went back not to preside over his Court as Judge, but only in order to appear as witness and as defendant respectively in two civil actions.

If this view be correct, it would become necessary to appoint a Judge specially for the purpose of trying cases at the time when Mr. Tarring himself is at his post.

The appointment of persons to be, or act as, Judges of the Supreme Consular Court at Constantinople is regulated by the provisions of the Ottoman Dominions (Courts) Order in Council, 1895 (Paper X), which, in accordance with section 11 of the said Order, "shall be construed as one with the Ottoman Orders in Council, 1873, 1882, and 1890." (Copies annexed hereto, Paper Y.)

The Order in Council of 1895 provides, in section 6, for the appointment of an Acting Judge in case of the death or illness, or the absence or intended absence, from the Consular district of Constantinople of the Judge of the Supreme Court, and in section 2 for the appointment of an Additional Judge for the purpose of, conjointly with the Judge, hearing appeals, and rehearing cases.

But no provision appears to be made in the Order in Council empowering the Additional Judge, sitting alone, to try ordinary civil suits and proceedings. Such, however, would have to be the function of whoever may be appointed to act as Judge of the Supreme Court in those cases in which Mr. Tarring would have to appear as witness and as defendant respectively.

I am directed by the Marquess of Salisbury to request that you will take the correspondence submitted herewith into your consideration and favour his Lordship with your opinion on the three questions stated above, which it will be convenient here to restate more definitely, viz.:—

1. Supposing it to be technically possible that Mr. Judge Tarring should appear in his own Court as a witness for the plaintiffs in the case of the Building Society v. Sarell, and as a defendant in the action brought against him and others by Mr. Silley, would it be desirable, having regard to the interests of justice, and those of Her Majesty's Consular service, that special arrangements should be made for facilitating such a course?

2. In the event of its being decided that Mr. Tarring cannot, or should not, appear in his own Court as a witness and as a defendant respectively in the two cases above referred to, on what grounds should such decision most properly be based, and in what manner should effect be given to it?

3. In the event of a contrary decision, what procedure should, in view of the provisions of the Ottoman Dominions (Courts) Order in Council, 1895, be adopted in appointing a Judge to preside over the Supreme Consular Court at Constantinople during the trial of the two actions in which Mr. Tarring, who holds the office of Judge of that Court, would have to appear?

As a subsidiary point connected with Question 3, I am further to ask:—

4. Whether it would, in your opinion, be desirable and proper that in the case of Silley v. Tarring, Sarell, Hamson, and Thompson, Her Majesty's Government should defend the action on Mr. Tarring's behalf, and, if so, what steps should be taken for this purpose.

Lord Salisbury would also be glad to receive any observations or suggestions which you may wish to offer generally upon the whole case.

I am directed by his Lordship to add that the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury have been requested to instruct Mr. Albert Gray, through their solicitor, to place his services at your disposal, in case you should desire to avail yourselves of his special knowledge on the subject of the bearing and construction of the several Orders in Council which regulate the Consular jurisdiction in the Ottoman dominions.

In conclusion, I am to express the hope that you may be able to consider and report at an early date upon the subject of this reference, as, in view of the fact that proceedings are now actually pending in the Supreme Court at Constantinople, a decision in the matter appears to the Secretary of State to be urgently called for.

Report.

Upon a full consideration of all the circumstances of this case, we think it desirable that special arrangements should be made for the trial of these causes, which will admit of Mr. Tarring being called as a witness, and appearing as a defendant.

It is clear that an inquiry of some kind must be made into these matters. We see no reason for thinking that the charges against Mr. Tarring are otherwise than frivolous, but it is, of course, impossible that he should try the charges made against himself or the other defendants in the action in which he has been joined, and it is undesirable that he should try the action in which it has been proposed that he should be called as a witness. A complete inquiry would be best held by a competent Judge sitting at Constantinople, and this is the course which seems to us, on the whole, best calculated to promote the interests of justice.

Some prejudice to the discipline of the Consular service may be apprehended as likely to result from such a trial. But it appears to us, on a consideration of all the circumstances, that greater prejudice might result if a trial were refused. It would, no doubt, be said by Mr Silley that this had been arranged in the interests of Mr. Tarring. An executive inquiry might be held, but this could not dispose of the claim for damages.

We think that a trial in open Court on the spot is the best way of exploding this scandal, and that it is undesirable in the interests of the public service that any pretext should be given for saying that Mr. Tarring is keeping out of the way.

Mr. Tarring should therefore, we think, return, when he otherwise naturally would do so, to Constantinople. His return will, ipso facto, put an end to the authority of Mr. L. Smith as Acting Judge. Under the Order in Council of 1895 there is no power to appoint an Acting Judge except in case of illness or absence. This should be remedied by a fresh Order in Council, and some gentleman of high professional standing and complete independence should be appointed to act on the trial of these actions. As there might be an application for a rehearing, this Acting Judge might have to sit along with the additional Judge for this purpose.

We think that Her Majesty's Government should provide Counsel and other legal assistance for Mr. Tarring. His conduct in his official position is assailed, and, so far as at present appears, the attack is a vexatious one.

Memorandum.

A DETAILED account of the circumstances which led to the formation of the "Société Vinicole de Turquie (Limited)," and of the subsequent disputes which culminated in the legal proceedings before the Supreme Consular Court at Constantinople, is given in the despatch which Mr. Vice-Consul Sarell addressed to Her Majesty's Ambassador on the 20th February, 1896 (Inclosure in Sir P. Currie's despatch No. 14, Consular, of the 24th February, 1896), marked (B).

The attention of Her Majesty's Ambassador was formally called to the dispute by Vice-Consul Sarell in January 1895. The contending parties had agreed to submit their difference to Mr. Tarring, Judge of the Supreme Consular Court, for arbitration, but while the Award given by the latter was accepted by Messrs. Sarell, Hamson, and Thompson, it was rejected by Mr. Silley, as bad in law and unjust. Mr. Silley, moreover, refused to consent to any amicable arrangement being negotiated between the parties jointly with Mr. Tarring, and insisted on instituting proceedings in the Court for upsetting the Award. A motion was accordingly made and heard in Court in January 1895, as a result of which Mr. Tarring, as Judge, ordered the Award to be referred back to himself, as Arbitrator, to be amended. He admitted the force of some technical objections raised by Mr. Silley, but considered that it would be easy to amend the Award on this point and thus render it valid.

At this stage the Ambassador interfered. Seeing that the quarrel had become a public scandal and serious obstacle to the efficient working of the Court and Consular business, his Excellency notified his decision that he must enforce the rule that members of the public service should not engage in trade. He, therefore, called upon the four officials to take immediate steps for severing their connection with the Société Vinicole. In view of this intimation, Mr. Tarring addressed a letter to the four disputants, stating his opinion that, in order to comply with the Ambassador's directions, it was necessary to wind up the Company, and adding that, in these circumstances, he must retire from his position as Arbitrator.

Meanwhile, Mr. Silley had transferred all his shares and interest in the Company to various relatives and friends, who now opposed the measures taken by Messrs. Sarell, Hamson, and Thompson with the view to the liquidation of the Company. As there appeared to be thus no prospect of the litigation being stopped, the Ambassador directed two members of his staff to inquire into the whole matter and effect a settlement. No such settlement was, however, effected, and the failure was ascribed by the gentlemen who had conducted the inquiry to the attitude adopted by Mr. Silley.

The several steps taken by the Ambassador will be found explained in detail in the despatches—

From Sir P. Currie, No. 18, Consular, of the 4th April, 1895 (Paper C);
To Sir P. Currie, No. 35, Consular, of the 3rd May, 1895 (Paper D); and
From Sir P. Currie, Nos. 37 and 38, Consular, of the 20th July, 1895 (Papers E and F).

The Foreign Office, to whom the Ambassador had referred the matter, decided to lay the case before the Treasury in order to obtain from the Lords Commissioners an expression of opinion whether any of the officers concerned had acted in a manner disqualifying them for employment in the public service. (Letter to the Treasury of the 9th August, 1895 (Paper G).

The view of the Treasury, set forth in their reply of the 13th August, 1895 (Paper H), was that it was clear from the correspondence that Mr. Silley had from the first adopted a very hostile attitude towards his colleagues, and had shown a serious want of consideration and respect for Mr. Tarring and for the superior officers deputed to inquire into the matter in dispute; that it might still be possible that Mr. Silley was able and willing to insure the discontinuance of the litigation and consequent scandal; but that, failing this, the Lords Commissioners regarded it as open to serious question whether the confirmation of Mr. Silley in his appointment was consistent with the efficient discharge of its duties and the maintenance of harmonious relations between the Chief Clerk and his superiors and colleagues.

Mr. Silley was accordingly warned that his continuance in the service would depend on his insuring the discontinuance of all further litigation in the case (despatch to Sir P. Currie No. 57, Consular, of the 26th August, 1895 (Paper I) and despatch from Mr. Herbert, No. 49, Consular, of the 25th October, 1895 (Paper K).

As, in spite of an undertaking given by Mr. Silley, the litigation did not cease, the Secretary of State recommended to the Treasury that Mr. Silley should be removed from his appointment on the ground of his inability to discharge efficiently the duties of his office (to Treasury, 30th November, 1895, Paper L). The Lords Commissioners concurred in this suggestion, holding that an officer, "by persistent quarrelling with his colleagues," might become unable to efficiently discharge his duties, within the meaning of section 2 of "The Superannuation Act, 1887" (Treasury letter of the 9th December, 1895, Paper M).

The decision of the Secretary of State was communicated to Mr. Silley through the Embassy on the 8th January, 1896, and carried out on the 20th of that month (Telegram to Sir P. Currie of the 8th January, 1896, Paper N). (Telegram from Sir P. Currie, 20th February, 1896 Paper O).

Action of "Constantinople Mutual Benefit Society" v. Sarell.

THIS action, so far as can be judged from the information in the possession of the Foreign Office, is brought to recover the balance of a loan of 1,850*l.* made by the Society to Mr. Sarell in 1894 on the security, mainly, of a house in Pera, of which the plaintiffs allege the title-deeds to be defective, to the knowledge of Mr. Sarell. The plaintiffs, in their petition, charge Mr. Sarell with fraud in connection with these title-deeds.

In order briefly to explain the nature and origin of these charges, which, indirectly, also touch Mr. Tarring, the Judge of the Supreme Consular Court, reference may be made to the accusations brought forward by Mr. Silley (who is believed to be a Director of the Building Society) in a Memorandum of the 14th January, 1896, which he communicated to Her Majesty's Ambassador (inclosed in Sir P. Currie's despatch No. 8, Consular, of the 29th January, 1896, Paper S). These accusations are, in outline, as follows:—

In November 1888, Mr. Vice-Consul Sarell—it is alleged—surreptitiously affixed the Embassy seal to a certificate (called an "Ilmi-haber"), in which are said to occur four fraudulent statements concerning the title of a property in which he was interested. On the security of this property Mr. Sarell obtained, in February 1894, a loan of 1,850*l.* from the Constantinople Mutual Benefit Building Society. A correspondence took place between the Turkish Foreign Office and the Consular Court at the end of 1895, in the course of which it is alleged that a serious irregularity occurred, with the connivance of Mr. Tarring.

The fraudulent character of the "Ilmi-haber" is stated to have rendered worthless the security on which Mr. Sarell had obtained the loan of 1,850*l.* from the Building Society. The Society addressed a letter to Judge Tarring on the 5th December, 1895, peremptorily calling upon him to open an inquiry into the matter, at which they should assist, as their interests were concerned.

Mr. Tarring, after communicating with the Embassy, declined to allow the Building Society to interfere in the discipline of Her Majesty's Consular officials, but pointed out to them that they could protect their interests, if infringed, by legal proceedings in the usual way (despatch from Mr. Tarring No. 9, Judicial, 22nd February, 1896, Paper T). The Society accordingly commenced their action against Mr. Sarell, demanding the rescission of the contract and the return of the money, on the grounds of concealment of material fact and misrepresentation. Arrangements are now being made for setting down the case for hearing on the 14th September next (letter from Mr. Sarell, 29th July, 1896, Paper U).

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen,

Foreign Office, September 28, 1896.

THE Marquess of Salisbury has considered your Report of the 27th ultimo, respecting certain judicial proceedings at Constantinople, and has decided, in accordance with your advice, to submit to the Queen in Council an Order providing for the appointment of a competent person to act temporarily as Special Judge of the Supreme Consular Court.

Order in Council as to Appointment of Special Judge at Constantinople.

I have now the honour to submit to you, by his Lordship's direction, the draft of an Order in Council, which has been prepared for the purpose by Mr. Albert Gray; and I am to request that his Lordship may be informed whether, in your opinion, it may properly be laid before the Queen in Council, in its present shape, for Her Majesty's approval.

I have, &c.

WHEREAS by Treaty, Capitulation, grant, usage, sufferance, and other lawful means, Her Majesty the Queen has jurisdiction within the Ottoman Dominions:

Now, therefore, Her Majesty, by virtue and in exercise of the powers in this behalf by "The Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890," or otherwise in Her Majesty vested, is pleased, by and with the advice of her Privy Council, to order, and it is hereby ordered, as follows:—

1. Her Majesty may from time to time, when she thinks fit, appoint a competent person to act temporarily as Special Judge of the Supreme Consular Court at Constantinople. He shall be a person qualified to be appointed Judge of the Supreme Court under the provisions of the Ottoman Orders in Council, and shall be appointed in like manner.

2. The Secretary of State may by order assign any case, civil or criminal, and whether pending at, or commenced after, the passing of this Order, to be tried by or before the Special Judge, and in relation to any case so assigned, all the powers, authority, and jurisdiction of the Judge of the Supreme Court under the Ottoman Orders in Council shall be vested in and exercised by the Special Judge, and the Judge of the Supreme Court shall not exercise any jurisdiction therein.

3. If any case so assigned is set down for rehearing, the same shall be reheard before the Special Judge and the additional Judge of the Supreme Court.

4. This Order may be cited as "The Ottoman Dominions (Supreme Court) Order in Council, 1896," and shall be construed as one with the Ottoman Orders, 1873, 1882, and 1890, and "The Ottoman Dominions (Courts) Order in Council, 1895."

And the Most Honourable the Marquess of Salisbury, K.G., one of Her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State is to give the necessary directions herein.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, February 7, 1896.

Complaints against U. S. revenue-cruisers in Behring Sea and N. Pacific.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, the draft of a despatch to Her Majesty's Ambassador at Washington, requesting his Excellency to bring to the notice of the United States' Government complaints which have been made against the action of their revenue cruisers during the sealing season of 1895 in Behring Sea and the North Pacific Ocean.

I am also to inclose the correspondence and documents enumerated in the accompanying list, and I am to request that Lord Salisbury may be favoured with your opinion as to whether the instructions to Sir J. Pauncefote are such as may properly be issued, or whether they may advantageously be modified or amended in any, and, if so, in what respects.

His Lordship will at the same time be glad to be favoured with any observations of a general nature which you may desire to offer on the papers now submitted to you.

I have, &c.

In our opinion the instructions to Sir J. Pauncefote are such as may properly be issued.

The only suggestion we have to make is that on the sixth page of the draft despatch there should be added after the word "forfeiture" the following sentence:—

The Marquess of Salisbury to Sir J. Pauncefote.

(No. .)

Sir, Foreign Office, February , 1896.

I INCLOSE, for your Excellency's information, copies of correspondence, as marked in the margin,* respecting the sealing season of 1895, and the proceedings of the United States' revenue-cruisers in searching and seizing British vessels without sufficient cause.

You are authorized to communicate to the United States' Government copies of the letter from the Collector of Customs at Victoria of the 15th October, the declaration of Isaac A. Gould, and the list of boardings; which are annexed to the Colonial Office letter of the 24th December, marked (A).

It appears from those papers that out of twenty-nine vessels which had then returned from Behring Sea, no less than twenty-six had been boarded by United States' officers, and these, in the aggregate, eighty-two times. The average was, therefore, more than three boardings for each vessel, and in one case, that of the "Sapphire," the vessel was boarded six times in the course of twenty-four days. In nearly every instance the seal-skins were overhauled and examined and left in confusion, and on each occasion they had to be repacked in salt by the crews. The net result of all this labour and annoyance was that the entries in the log-book of the "Beatrice" were found to be a few days in arrear, and that a hole was discovered in one seal-skin out of a cargo of 386 on board the "E. B. Marvin," which, in the opinion of the United States' naval officer, had the appearance of being a shot wound. Both these vessels were seized, and were subsequently sent to Victoria for trial.

Admiral Stephenson and the Officer Commanding Her Majesty's ship "Pheasant," have also commented on the frequency with which the vessels were visited, and on the manner in which the search was conducted. These two officers state, moreover, that the men who command the sealing-schooners are most anxious to carry out all Regulations to the letter.

Her Majesty's Government have also been informed that the United States' naval officers considered themselves authorized by their instructions to board indiscriminately all British sealers.

Your Excellency will observe from the foregoing summary that the complaints of the sealing-vessels against the United States' revenue-cruisers belong to three different categories:—

1. The seizure of vessels for alleged offences on evidence obviously insufficient.
2. The exercise of the right of search in cases where no suspicion exists as to an offence having been committed.
3. Vexatious and inquisitorial interference.

With regard to the question of seizure, it was pointed out in a telegram No. 58 from the Earl of Kimberley to your Excellency of the 28th April, 1894, and it has since been notified to the United States' Government on several occasions, that the United States' cruisers are only empowered by the British Order in Council to seize British vessels contravening the provisions of the British Act of Parliament, which contains no provision similar to section 10 of the United States' Act, and that the United States' naval officers have therefore no power to seize British vessels merely on the ground that they have sealing apparatus or implements on board. The British Act of Parliament only gives a power to seize where an offence has been committed, and the Order in Council authorizes the seizure and detention of any British vessel which has become liable to be forfeited. Even by the United States' law, no general power is conferred to board and search vessels without specific grounds of suspicion. I have already requested your Excellency, in my despatch No. 157 of the 27th September last, to inform the United States' Government that British naval officers will in future decline to take over any British vessel seized by an American cruiser unless the declaration alleges a specific offence which is a contravention of the British Act of Parliament.

There appears to have been some misconception on the part of the United States' naval officers, who have attempted to apply United States' law to British vessels, as is shown by the clearance certificate granted to the "E. B. Marvin" by Lieutenant Carmine, United States' navy, in which the Proclamation of the President and the United States' Regulations are quoted. A copy of this certificate is inclosed in the Admiralty letter of the 21st November. It should be brought to the notice of the United States' Government, with the request that the naval officers may be informed that their powers, as far as British vessels are concerned, exist solely in virtue of the British Act of Parliament, and the Order in Council issued under it, and are restricted within the limits of the provisions by which those powers are therein defined.

The exercise of the right of search is likewise subject to restrictions.

The Act of Parliament contains no section enabling an officer to stop and examine any vessel such as existed in the Seal Fishery Acts of 1891 and 1893. The Arbitration Award required that the offences specified in Articles I and II should be prohibited, but did not require any preventive action before the commission of the offence. If an officer has reasonable cause to suspect a vessel of having committed an offence, it is open to him to stop and examine her, but he is clearly not justified, in the absence of any specific ground for suspicion, in stopping and examining every vessel he meets as a purely precautionary or preventive measure.

In any case, the vexatious and uncalled-for interference reported during the past season gives just cause for complaint. Amongst the points agreed to by the Secretary of the Treasury with reference to the instructions to the United States' naval officers in May 1894 were the following:—

That the masters of the sealing-vessels should be protected from inquisitorial examination; that no sealing-vessel should be seized by reason of the absence of a licence or of fishery implements being found on board; that the United States' naval instructions as to the mode of dealing with sealing-vessels should be similar to the British naval instructions; and that the naval officer who examines a sealing-vessel shall leave a certificate with her master for his protection against interference.

These provisions, which had special reference to the arrangement for sealing up arms in 1894, show the spirit in which the instructions for carrying out the Award were issued, and it is essential that an international Agreement involving questions of so delicate a nature should be administered with mutual forbearance and moderation.

Her Majesty's Government feel sure that it is not the intention or desire of the United States' Government that men engaged in a perfectly legitimate occupation, who, according to both British and American reports, are most anxious to observe strictly the Regulations imposed for public reasons on that occupation, should be treated as if they were continually engaged in trying to evade and break the law, and subjected to unnecessary loss and trouble. The right of searching British vessels was conferred on United States' officers on the assumption that they would exercise their powers with the same consideration as would in like circumstances be shown to such vessels by Her Majesty's naval officers, and Her Majesty's Government have no doubt that, when the matter is brought to the notice of the United States' Government, they will issue such orders as will put an end to an interference with British vessels on the high seas, which has given rise to so many complaints, and which is not warranted by the provisions of British law.

Your Excellency will address a note to the United States' Government in the sense of this despatch, and make such further representations as you may deem advisable.

Foreign Office, March 6, 1896.

Gentlemen,

Convention with U. S. for settlement of British Behring Sea claims.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you herewith, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, papers relating to the Convention between Great Britain and the United States, signed on the 8th ultimo, for the settlement of the claims set forth in the Schedule attached to the British Case in the Behring Sea Arbitration.

The findings of fact with regard to these claims were agreed to on both sides, and were appended to the Award of the Arbitration Tribunal (Paper A).

The Convention (Paper B) which provides for the appointment of a Commission to adjudicate on the claims, has recently been submitted to the United States' Senate with a view to its ratification, and a Committee of the Senate has recommended certain alterations, which have been communicated privately to Her Majesty's Ambassador by the United States' Secretary of State, and are specified in Sir J. Pauncefote's telegram No. 19 of yesterday (Paper C).

Lord Salisbury would be glad to be favoured with your opinion as to whether any of these alterations, and, if so, which of them, should be resisted by Her Majesty's Government, and I am to call your special attention to the departure from the terms of the findings of fact referred to above, and found by the Tribunal to be true, which would be entailed by the modifications proposed in the second sentence of Article III of the Convention.

I have, &c.

Report.

We will deal with the proposed alterations in the order in which things occur.

Preamble.—As regards the recital which brings in the claims in respect of the "Wanderer," "Winifred," "Henrietta," and "Oscar and Hattie," it is so obviously important that all claims arising out of seizures prior to the award should be dealt with at the same time, that every effort should be made to retain words including these claims in the reference.

It is to be noted that the words in Article I dealing with the same claims are not referred to in Sir Julian's telegram, but no doubt the Senate intended to strike them out.

We have no information as to whether any special grounds exist which the United States can urge against the inclusion of the claims in respect of these four ships; apart from any valid reason, we think the terms of the Convention should be adhered to.

Article II.—The alteration in Article II may lead to great delay and expense if the Commission is compelled to sit at San Francisco, as well as Victoria. In our opinion the discretion given by Article II, as it stood, was far better, and would meet the justice of the case, but there is no matter of principle involved in the proposed alteration.

Article III.—The proposed alteration in the second paragraph of this Article cannot possibly be accepted. It would open the door to endless delay and question: the introduction of the words "legal or equitable" is obviously intended to suggest a line of argument which would be both unfair and objectionable. Beyond this there is a grave question of principle involved.

Findings of fact were contemplated by Article VIII of the Treaty.

The references are to the recent American edition.

It was the right of either party to ask for them. Vol. iv, p. 8.

The findings originally asked for by Great Britain will be found in the Protocol of the 31st May; No. 1 as presented contained no words corresponding to those now under discussion.

Vol. i, p. 33, Art. I. Protocol 30, (p. 111). See proceedings, vol. xiii, p. 397, British paging 1196.

On the 8th June (see Protocol) the United States presented their proposed findings. No. 1 contained the words in question, "in whole or in part the actual property of American subjects."

Vol. i, pp. 37, 38, Protocol 35 (p. 131).

These words were suggested by the Agent and Counsel of the United States themselves.

See proceedings, vol. xiii, p. 621. British paging 1457.

Upon these proposals considerable negotiation ensued, which resulted in the agreed finding (see Protocol of the 26th June) presented by the British Agent by agreement with the United States' Agent.

Vol. i, p. 43, Protocol 41 (p. 151).

See also discussion thereon.

Proceedings, vol. xiv. p. 269. British paging 1779.

No. 1, containing the words "wholly or in part the actual property of citizens of the United States," which had been inserted at the request of the Agent of the United States from their original proposals.

This agreed statement was unanimously adopted by the Tribunal.

See Award, p. 14 of C. 7107, vol. i, p. 83.

In the face of these facts, it is, in our opinion, not only undesirable but improper to alter the second paragraph of Article III in the way proposed.

As regards the alteration of the words "in the Award of" to "by," we think these words should be retained, as the Award is the only authentic record of the questions determined by the Tribunal.

The proposal to substitute the words "shall have the right" for the words "it shall be open" to the United States' Government, "if it thinks fit," is not material, though we think here, also, it is better to follow the words of the Award.

1896

Third Paragraph.—The alteration in the third paragraph is not material, and may be agreed to if it be thought desirable.

Schedule.—We have already dealt with.

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, March 3, 1896.

Gentlemen,

Trial of "Shelby." Seized by U.S. cruiser in Behring Sea.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, the papers noted in the accompanying list, relating to the seizures of certain British sealing-vessels by United States' cruisers in Behring Sea.

The Secretary of State for the Colonies, in a letter dated the 25th ultimo (Paper B), has called attention to the Judgment given in the case of the "Shelby." Mr. Chamberlain points out that the Judge appears to him to have founded his decision (Paper A, pp. 58 and 59) partly on the North Pacific Seal Fishery Act of 1893 (Paper C), although the fishery in the north-eastern part of the Pacific Ocean, where the "Shelby" was seized, is regulated only by the Behring Sea Award Act of 1894 (Paper D).

The evidence of a contravention of the Act of 1894 does not seem to the Secretary of State for the Colonies to be very conclusive, and he fears that the Judgment may be reversed if an appeal is carried to the Supreme Court.

Lord Salisbury requests that you will take the matter into your consideration, and that you will favour him with your opinion as to whether, in the circumstances mentioned, the condemnation of the "Shelby," her equipment and everything on board of her, and the proceeds thereof, in the sum of 100*l.* and the costs of the prosecution therein, is legally sustainable; and, if not, what action Her Majesty's Government should take in the event of an appeal against the conviction being carried to the Supreme Court by the owners of the "Shelby."

His Lordship will be glad at the same time to be favoured with your views on the other points specially raised in the Colonial Office letter of the 25th ultimo (Paper B), and with any observations of a general nature which you may desire to offer on the papers now submitted to you.

I have, &c.

Report.

The only evidence tending directly to show that the offence had been committed in the case of the "Shelby" is that of Lorensen, who states that the skins appeared to him to be "fresh salted" and bloody. This evidence is in itself of very little value, and is opposed to the evidence of several witnesses who swear that there had been no seal-hunting since the 30th April.

But there is strong evidence to show that the vessel could not have been where she was seized on the 11th May if she had ceased hunting on the 30th April and started for Victoria. It appears to us that it is extremely probable that this can be accounted for only on the supposition that the vessel was not coming straight back, but was engaging in digressions in search of seals. The excuses made by the mate are utterly futile, and seem only to cast doubt on his denial of seal-hunting after the 30th April.

It is certainly a most suspicious circumstance that the master was not called; the excuse for not calling him is not satisfactory, and we should have expected, if the defence was a good one, that an adjournment would have been asked for to call him, especially after the extraordinary evidence of the mate.

The Judgment certainly cannot be supported on the ground put in the first place by the learned Judge; it is quite clear that the statutory presumption created by section 1, sub-section 6 of the Act of 1893 has no application whatever to this case.

But it does appear that the vessel had been hanging about in the waters closed to hunting after the 1st May—the master is not called, and the mate's explanations are falsehoods. What was she doing there if not pursuing seals?

We, on the whole, think that the conviction was right, but the evidence is of such a nature that it is impossible to feel any confidence as to the result of the appeal, especially having regard to the fact that the Judge has in part based his conclusion on a ground of law which cannot be supported.

We do not advise that the fine should be remitted; we believe it to have been rightly inflicted, and we think that the owner ought to be left to his remedy by appeal if he is so advised.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Colonial Office.

Royal Courts of Justice, March 1, 1897.

Sir,

WE were honoured with your commands, signified in Mr. Wingfield's letter of this day's date, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 9th December, 1896, he was directed to transmit to us a copy of a despatch from the High Commissioner for South Africa regarding the Aliens Immigration Law of the South African Republic and the draft of the reply which, if we concurred, he proposed to send to the High Commissioner.

Aliens Immigration Law of the South African Republic.

In obedience to your commands we have the honour to

Report—

That, subject to the slight alterations in italics, we approve of the draft despatch.

Draft of Despatch from Mr. Chamberlain to High Commissioner Sir A. Milner.

Downing Street, March , 1897.

My Lord,

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your Confidential despatch of the 27th January, inclosing a copy of one from the British Agent at Pretoria covering a translation of the reply of the Government of the South African Republic to the representations of Her Majesty's Government on the subject of the Alien Immigrants Law, No. 30, of 1896.

The State Secretary in this reply contends that the terms of Article XIV of the London Convention in no way exclude the application of Police Laws which the competent authority in the State may consider necessary for the maintenance of order and the protection and peace of its inhabitants, and that the requirement embodied in the words "conforming themselves to the laws of the South African Republic," in Article XIV, supports his contention, as amongst such laws Police Laws, as well as Law No. 30 of 1896, take the foremost place.

Her Majesty's Government regret that they are entirely unable to accept the view that Law No. 30 of 1896 is an ordinary Police Law within the terms of Article No. XIV of the Convention. That Article declares that all persons other than natives conforming themselves to the laws of the South African Republic shall have full liberty to enter, travel, or reside in any part of the Republic. Law No. 30 of 1896 provides that such persons shall not be at liberty to enter or reside in the Republic unless they can show affirmatively that they have the means or ability to support themselves. The only condition imposed by the Convention is that they should conform to the laws of the Republic; but the new Law imposes a further condition of a burthensome nature, which it might be difficult for many of the poorer, though perfectly respectable, immigrants to satisfy. This condition is to be fulfilled by the production of a passport, certifying means or ability, granted by the Government of the country to which the immigrant belongs, and viséd by a Consular official of the Republic, or by proof to the satisfaction of the Field-Cornet or other official that the immigrant is possessed of such means or is able to support himself.

Articles 5, 6, and 8 also impose positive burdens upon an alien travelling or residing in the Republic in excess of the condition laid down in the Convention. Articles 5 and 6 require an alien to take out a passport every three months or every year, according as he is a passing traveller or a resident, and Article 8 requires him to show such passport on demand to any of the officers named thereon.

Her Majesty's Government cannot but feel that to admit the validity of the State Secretary's argument would be to admit that the Government of the South African Republic could by the passing of Laws override the provisions and defeat the objects of the London Convention. It must be admitted that Law No. 30 ~~at least~~ places great difficulties in the way of the free entrance of foreigners into the Republic and their freedom of residence within it, and it is not difficult to imagine further conditions being imposed by Law, or even the conditions imposed by Law No. 30 ~~having~~ operating so as to have the effect of making the entrance or residence of foreigners impossible.

Her Majesty's Government fully appreciate the difficulties which may be caused to the South African Republic by a possible influx of immigrants of the lowest class and without any means of subsistence, the prevention of which is, according to the State Secretary's despatch, the object of Law No. 30, and although they are not in possession of any information showing that such an influx has up to the present time taken place, or is likely to take place in the near future, they ~~have already informed you~~ must adhere to the view that ~~the proper course would have been in such a case for~~ the Government of the South African Republic ~~to~~ should have approach*ed* Her Majesty's Government with a view of arriving at an understanding, and not ~~to~~ have take*n* the matter into their own hands without regard to the terms of the London Convention.

The State Secretary has replied that if Her Majesty's Government has another practical measure to propose for the exclusion of undesirable aliens the Government of the South African Republic will be ready with gratitude to give its full consideration to such measure.

It would appear, however, that it is ~~hardly the duty of~~ not for Her Majesty's Government at this stage to suggest the details of any measure for the purpose to the Government of the South African Republic; but in the hope of arriving at a satisfactory solution, Her Majesty's Government are prepared to authorize Her Majesty's Agent at Pretoria to discuss the matter with a Representative of the South African Republic Government, and if they can agree on any proposals, to submit them for the consideration of the two Governments.

In the meantime, however, Her Majesty's Government must, for the reasons given in this despatch, adhere to their view that the Law No. 30 of 1896 constitutes a violation of the London Convention. As I have stated in my telegram of the 15th December, they appreciate the repeated assurances of President Krüger that the Government of the South African Republic have no intention of departing from the terms of that Convention, and they assume that the Government of the South African Republic admit that the provisions of the Convention, which are mutually binding on both Governments, cannot be altered by either for its own convenience in the slightest detail without the previous consent of the other. They regret, therefore, to learn that, despite their contention that Law No. 30 is an infringement of the Convention, and notwithstanding the expression of their willingness to consider other proposals for attaining the object desired by the South African Republic Government, the Law was put into force on the appointed day, and that British subjects have actually been temporarily refused admission to the Republic.

Her Majesty's Government now expect that, in view of the elucidation of the matter contained in the present despatch, the Government of the South African Republic will at once repeal or formally suspend the operation of Law No. 30 pending a final arrangement being made in the manner herein indicated.

I request that you will instruct Mr. Greene to communicate a copy of this despatch to the Government of the South African Republic.

AFRICA.

No. 1.

[June 8, 1897.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, May 29, 1897.

Gentlemen,

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit to you the papers mentioned in the accompanying list, which relate to the question whether certain Regulations made by the Royal Niger Company are, or are not, contrary to those provisions of the Act of Berlin, which deal with the navigation of the River Niger in West Africa.

Royal Niger Company's Navigation Regulations and Berlin Act.

The General Act of the Conference of Berlin, a copy of which will be found marked "A" among the inclosed papers, lays down the following Rules for the regulation of navigation on the River Niger:—

"Article 26. The navigation of the River Niger, without excepting any of its branches and outlets, is and shall remain entirely free for the merchant-ships of all nations equally, whether with cargo or ballast, for the transportation of goods and passengers. It shall be regulated by the provisions of this Act of Navigation, and by the Rules to be made in pursuance of this Act.

"In the exercise of this navigation the subjects and flags of all nations shall be treated, in all circumstances, on a footing of perfect equality, not only for the direct navigation from the open sea to the inland ports of the Niger, and vice-versâ, but for the great and small coasting trade, and for boat trade on the course of the river.

"Consequently, on all the course and mouths of the Niger there will be no distinction made between the subjects of the Riverain States and those of non-Riverain States, and no exclusive privilege of navigation will be conceded to Companies, Corporations, or private persons.

"These provisions are recognized by the Signatory Powers as forming, henceforth, a part of international law.

"Article 27. The navigation of the Niger shall not be subject to any restriction or obligation based merely on the fact of navigation.

"It shall not be exposed to any obligation in regard to landing-station or depôt, or for breaking bulk, or for compulsory entry into port.

"In all the extent of the Niger, the ships and goods in process of transit on the river shall be submitted to no transit dues, whatever their starting-place or destination.

* * * * * *

"Article 30. Great Britain undertakes to apply the principles of freedom of navigation, enunciated in Articles 26, 27, 28, and 29, on so much of the waters of the Niger as are or may be under her sovereignty or protection.

"The Rules which she may establish for the safety and control of navigation shall be drawn up in a way to facilitate, as far as possible, the circulation of merchant-ships.

"It is understood that nothing in these obligations shall be interpreted as hindering Great Britain from making any Rules of navigation whatever, which shall not be contrary to the spirit of these engagements.

"Great Britain undertakes to protect foreign merchants and all the trading nationalities on all those portions of the Niger which are or may be under her sovereignty or protection as if they were her own subjects, provided always that such merchants conform to the Rules which are or shall be made in virtue of the foregoing."

Regulations have been made by the Niger Company under Article 30 of the Berlin Act, quoted above, and approved of by the Secretary of State.

By that Article Great Britain is permitted to make any Rules of navigation whatever which shall not be contrary to the spirit of the previous Articles. The object of the present reference is to ascertain whether, in your opinion, this engagement has been fulfilled, or whether the Regulations which have been adopted are justly stigmatized by foreign Governments as being at variance with the spirit of the Act of Berlin.

The following two Regulations especially require attention:—

Regulation XI (B) of 1886.

"No vessel, boat, canoe, or other craft, shall touch, load, or discharge at, from, or into any part of the Niger Territories except the established ports of entry and export, whereof the provisional list is given in the Schedule (A) hereto, and whereof an amended list may be from time to time made and publicly notified by the Agent-General or an Acting Senior Executive officer, and on such public notification such amended list shall take the place of Schedule (A) without otherwise affecting the validity of this Regulation."

Regulation XVIII of 1887, C. (2).

Document (C).

"No foreigner or foreign Company shall, either directly or through an agent or agents, sell or barter, or expose for sale or barter by retail, any merchandize within the Niger Territories without a retail trade licence. Each of such licences shall be annual, and shall be valid until the 31st day of December next following the date of its issue, and shall be procurable at any of the Company's stations on and after the 30th day of June, 1887, on which date this Regulation shall first come into force. The cost of one annual licence for one factory, station, or other place of trade, shall be 50*l.*, together with a further sum of 10*l.* for every additional factory, station, or place of trade occupied by the same trader or Trading Company, in the Niger Territories . . . . . ."

It is undoubtedly true that these Regulations leave the navigation of the Niger entirely free for persons who are not occupied in commerce, that is to say, for tourists or explorers; but a foreign merchant is only free so long as he remains upon the water itself. He is forbidden to touch for the purposes of commerce at any part of the Niger Territories except certain parts specified by the Company, and he is forbidden, under heavy penalties, to sell any merchandize on any part of the banks of the Niger without previously paying a licence fee of 50*l.*

The question for consideration is whether it is permissible, in construing the Act of Berlin, to apply it only to transactions taking place upon the water itself, or whether the language of the Act must be held to point to the entire commercial traffic conducted on the banks of the Niger to which the actual transport upon the water is ancillary, and from which alone it derives any commercial value.

The Act of Berlin speaks expressly of the navigation remaining free for the merchant-ships of all nations equally for the transportation of goods and passengers. Can it be held that that transportation was limited by the water's edge, and that when the goods were carried over the water's edge the freedom guaranteed to them by the Act of Berlin ceased to operate? It is not a question merely of importation and of duties levied upon importation: the penalties of the Regulations would affect any barter of goods between vessels coming up or down the Niger if that barter took place upon the bank.

There seems to be this important distinction between a tax levied by way of licence on every trader and a tax levied by way of duty on all imported or exported goods. In the latter case the goods are there themselves to furnish the tax, as a portion of their own value; but the licencee would have to pay his 50*l.* on pure speculation, and out of capital, though no transaction might have passed which would furnish him with any portion of the means for paying it.

If it be said that the general power of Regulation permits the levying of a licence fee of 50*l.* for every one attempting to trade, and that this is no such restriction as is permitted by the Act of Berlin, it would follow that the same legitimacy would attach to a much more elevated licence fee, and that a fee of 500*l.*, though it would be practically prohibitory, and would make the Niger an absolutely close river, would yet be in harmony with the spirit of the Act. There is reason to believe that, as a matter of fact, the fee of 50*l.* has gone very far to make the Niger a monopoly.

In this connection attention should be paid to the words in Article 26 of the Act, which provides that the subjects of all nations shall be treated in all circumstances on a footing of perfect equality, not only for the direct navigation from the open sea to the inland ports of the Niger, but for the great and small coasting trade and for boat trade on the course of the river. It seems difficult to conceive that this language was intended to refer only to traders who were capable of paying a 50*l.* licence fee before they began to trade.

The above questions have reference to the Regulations of the Company as they affect all persons who desire to trade upon the Niger. But separate attention must be given to the provision that selling without a licence is specially forbidden to foreigners or foreign Companies. It is submitted that this provision is, in any case, at variance with the Act of Berlin. The language used negatives again and again the idea that any distinction can be drawn in favour of any nation adversely to any other nation.

A copy of the Charter of the Royal Niger Company, marked (D), under the authority of which the Company has issued the Regulations which form the subject of the present reference, will be found among the papers sent herewith.

A map, marked (E), showing approximately the position of the different native States and foreign Protectorates touched by the waters of the Niger and its affluents is likewise inclosed.

I have the honour to request that you will take the papers forwarded herewith into your consideration, and that you will favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion as to whether the Niger Company is justified, in view of the terms of the Act of Berlin, in restricting the trade of the Niger in either of the two ways to which your attention has been called; that is to say, either, firstly, by limiting that trade to persons who have a capital of 50*l.*; or, secondly, by limiting free traffic to persons whom the Company describes as not being foreigners or foreign Companies.

I have, &c.

Report.

In our opinion the Regulations in question do not infringe the terms of the Act of Berlin.

The Articles relied on by those who allege infringement are Articles XXVI and XXVII. These Articles do not provide that there shall be complete freedom of trade in the basin of the Niger, but merely that the navigation shall be untrammelled.

We agree that the right of navigation includes the right of embarkation and debarkation for passengers and merchandize. If the ports of entry and export fixed under Regulation XI (B) of 1886 are unreasonably few, this would, we think, constitute an interference with the right of navigation, and consequently a breach of the Act of Berlin. But it does not appear that this is the case, and it seems to us quite impossible to suppose that the right of free navigation excludes the right of the Powers owning the Territory through which the river flows to fix suitable ports of entry and export. In the absence of anything to show that this power has been abused by unduly restricting the number of such ports so as to fetter navigation, we think that Regulation XI (B) of 1886 does not violate the Act of Berlin.

There remains for consideration Regulation XVIII of 1887 (C) (2). This Regulation does not, in our opinion, interfere with navigation. It is a restriction not upon navigation, but upon the right of retail trade within the Territories of the Company. It imposes no burthen upon vessels for navigating the river, nor upon goods in respect of loading or unloading. We cannot see that it is in any way unlawful for the Company to impose a fee of 50*l.* upon all retail traders in the Niger Territory, or to exempt from that fee traders who are not foreigners or foreign Companies.

Gentlemen,

Foreign Office, January 21, 1897.

East Africa and Zanzibar O.s in C.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit to you the drafts of two Orders in Council (1) for Zanzibar and (2) for East Africa which have been prepared by Mr. Gray, in consultation with Mr. Hardinge, Her Majesty's Agent in Zanzibar and Commissioner in East Africa, and with this Department.

The Orders, when issued, will respectively replace (1) the existing Zanzibar Orders in Zanzibar dominions and (2) "The Africa Order in Council, 1889," in the territories comprised in the East Africa Protectorate as defined in the draft Order.

Various points to which Mr. Gray deems it desirable that your attention should be specially directed are set forth in the Memorandum contained in his letter of the 5th instant.

I am to request that you will take the drafts into your consideration, and favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion as to whether they can properly be submitted to Her Majesty in Council in their present form; and, if not, to indicate such amendments and modifications as you may consider necessary or desirable.

A map illustrating the districts comprised within the scope of operation of the Orders is sent herewith.

I have, &c.

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen,

Foreign Office, January 29, 1897.

With reference to my letter of the 21st instant, submitting for your consideration the drafts of two Orders in Council (1) for the East Africa Protectorate and (2) for Zanzibar, I have the honour to state, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, that it was thought well to call the attention of the Colonial Office and of the India Office to clause 12 (iv) (d) in each draft Order, which provides that the territories therein enumerated respectively shall, for the purposes of Part II of "The Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881," be deemed to be one group of British possessions, and to inquire whether there were, on the part of those Departments, any objections to the provision in question.

The reply of the India Office has not yet been received, but it shall be transmitted to you without delay as soon as it reaches this Department.

It will be seen from the accompanying communication from the Colonial Office* that that Department has no objection to the proposed sub-clause, but that

---

* Colonial Office, January 22, 1897.

Mr. Secretary Chamberlain suggests that an addition should be made in clause 12, sub-clause (iv) (a), of each draft similar to the terms of Article 85 (2) (c) of "The Pacific Order in Council, 1893."

A copy of the Pacific Order in Council is inclosed.* The Article referred to by the Colonial Office relates to the right of an accused person to apply for a habeas corpus in a British possession to which he may be conveyed.

I have the honour to request you to consider this suggestion in connection with the draft Orders referred to you in my above-mentioned communication, and to favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion thereon.

I have, &c.
(Signed) FRANCIS BERTIE.

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen,

Foreign Office, February 13, 1897.

With reference to my letter of the 29th ultimo on the subject of the two draft Orders in Council for East Africa and Zanzibar respectively, which are at present under consideration, I have the honour to inform you that the expected communication from the India Office which was therein alluded to has been received, and that it appears that the Secretary of State for India in Council has no objection to the provision contained in sub-clause 12 (iv) (d) of each draft Order to the effect that the territories therein enumerated respectively shall, for the purposes of Part II of "The Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881," be deemed to be one group of British possessions.

Lord George Hamilton at the same time suggests that the words "or Protectorates" might be added after the word "dominions" in Article 49 of the East Africa Protectorate Order, and in Article 51 of the Zanzibar Order; and I am to request that you will take this suggestion into your consideration in connection with the draft Orders now before you.

I have, &c.
(Signed) FRANCIS BERTIE.

Report.

We think that these draft Orders, initialled by us, may properly be submitted for Her Majesty's approval, subject to the following remarks:—

Zanzibar Order, Article 5 (2) (c).—If foreign Powers consent to jurisdiction in the terms of this Order, no difficulty will arise as to this provision, which is in itself most desirable. If, however, the consent is merely to jurisdiction over foreigners resident in Zanzibar, this provision would be a considerable extension.

Ibidem, Article 12 (4) (a).—We see no objection to Mr. Chamberlain's proposal.

Ibidem, Article 12 (4) (d).—This should be worded as in the East African draft.

Ibidem, Article 17 (2).—We think this clause should stand as in the draft. The extension suggested for consideration in Mr. Gray's Memorandum of the 5th January is not, in our opinion, desirable.

Ibidem, Article 20.—The powers of this Article are most desirable. As the object is prevention, we think it would be very difficult to preserve its efficacy if the right to a criminal trial is to be interposed.

It would be unfortunate if it has to be confined to British subjects, but this may be necessary, as foreign Powers may refuse to consent to confer on the Consul-General an arbitrary power of this description over their subjects.

We also think that the suggestion of Mr. Gray to introduce a clause into the Zanzibar Order similar to Article 13 of the East Africa draft Order is a good one.

Some of the above observations apply also to the draft as to East Africa.

We entirely approve of the clauses (Article 50 et seq.) as to Native Courts, and of the provision as to Crown suits (Article 42 (5)).

Annex 1.

East Africa Protectorate.

Draft Order in Council.

WHEREAS by Treaty, grant, usage, sufferance, and other lawful means, Her Majesty the Queen has power and jurisdiction within the territories comprised within the limit of this Order;

Now, therefore, Her Majesty by virtue, and in exercise of the powers on this behalf by "The Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890," or otherwise, in Her Majesty vested, is pleased, by and with the advice of Her Privy Council, to order, and it is hereby ordered, as follows:—

Part I.—Preliminary.

1. This order may be cited as "The East Africa Order in Council, 1897."

The limits of this Order are the territories comprised in the East Africa Protectorate, which includes the territories bounded on the north by the River Juba, on the east by the Indian Ocean, on the south by the German sphere, on the west by the Uganda Protectorate, and also all adjacent islands between the mouths of the Rivers Juba and Umba, but does not include the Islands of Zanzibar and Pemba.

If Her Majesty is pleased to direct that any other territories, for the time being under the protection of Her Majesty, shall form part of the East Africa Protectorate, those territories shall, from and after a date fixed by an order of the Secretary of State, be deemed to be within the limits of this Order.

2. This Order is divided into Parts, as follows:—

Part I. Preliminary.
Part II. Application and effect of Order.
Part III. Constitution of Courts.
Part IV. Application of law of British India and of the United Kingdom.
Part V. Criminal matters.
Part VI. Civil matters.
Part VII. Miscellaneous.
Part VIII. Repeal and Transitory Provisions.

3. In this Order—

(i.) "The Protectorate" means the territories for the time being comprised in Her Majesty's East Africa Protectorate;

(ii.) "Zanzibar" means the dominions and territorial waters of His Highness the Sultan of Zanzibar which are not comprised within the limits of this Order;

(iii.) "The Secretary of State" means one of Her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State;

(iv.) "The Commissioner" means Her Majesty's Commissioner and Consul-General for the territories comprised within the limits of this Order, including a person acting temporarily, with the approval of the Secretary of State, as or for the Commissioner.

(v.) "British subject" includes a British-protected person, that is to say, a person who either (a) is a native of any other Protectorate of Her Majesty, and is temporarily in the East Africa Protectorate, or (b) by virtue of "The Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890," or otherwise enjoys Her Majesty's protection in the Protectorate;

(vi.) "Resident" means having a fixed place of abode in the Protectorate;

(vii.) "Native" means a native of the Protectorate, not being a British subject or a person of European or American race or parentage;

(viii.) "Foreigner" means a subject or citizen of a State in amity with Her Majesty, not being a native;

(ix.) "Native Court" means a Court for the administration of justice to or between natives:

(x.) "Treaty" includes any Convention, Agreement, or Arrangement with any State or Government, King, Chief, people, or tribe, made by or on behalf of Her Majesty, or to the benefits of which Her Majesty has succeeded;

(xi.) "Administration" means (unless a contrary intention appears from the context) letters of administration, including the same with will annexed, or granted for special or limited purposes, or limited in duration.

(xii.) "Ship" includes any vessel used in navigation, however propelled, with her tackle, furniture, and apparel, and any boat or other craft;

(xiii.) "Offence" means any act or omission made punishable by any law for the time being in force;

(xiv.) "Imprisonment" means imprisonment of either description, as defined in the Indian Penal Code;

(xv.) "Month" means calendar month;

(xvi.) "Will" means will, codicil, or other testamentary instrument;

(xvii.) "Person" includes Corporation;

(xviii.) "Full Court," with reference to the Court for Zanzibar, means that Court when constituted by the Judge and Assistant Judge thereof sitting together;

(xix.) Words importing the plural or the singular may be construed as referring to one person or thing, or to more than one person or thing, and words importing the masculine as referring to females (as the case may require).

4.—(1.) Where this Order confers a power or imposes a duty, the power may be exercised and the duty shall be performed from time to time as occasion requires.

(2.) Where this Order confers a power or imposes a duty on the holder of an office, then, unless a contrary intention appears, the power may be exercised and the duty shall be performed by the holder of the office for the time being, or by a person duly appointed to act for him.

(3.) Where this Order confers a power to make rules, regulations, or orders, the power shall be construed as including a power, exercisable in the like manner and subject to the like approval and conditions (if any) to rescind, revoke, amend, or vary the rules, regulations, or orders.

Part II.—Application and Effect of Order.

5. The powers conferred by this Order shall extend to the persons and matters following in so far as by Treaty, grant, usage, sufferance, or other lawful means, Her Majesty has jurisdiction in relation to such persons and matters, that is to say: (a) British subjects; (b) Foreigners; (c) the property and all personal or proprietary rights and liabilities in the Protectorate of British subjects and foreigners, including ships with their boats, and the persons and property on board thereof, or belonging thereto; and (d) Natives, in the cases and according to the conditions specified in this Order, and not otherwise.

Provided that in the Zanzibar territory included within the limits of this Order the said powers shall not extend to foreigners (or their ships) being subjects of any Government which, on the 1st day of July, 1895, exercised any jurisdiction in that territory similar to the jurisdiction conferred by this Order, unless that Government shall consent to the exercise of jurisdiction under this Order.

Provided also that jurisdiction over any foreign ships under this Article shall not be exercised otherwise than according to the practice of the High Court of England in the exercise of jurisdiction over foreign ships.

6. All Her Majesty's jurisdiction exercisable in the Protectorate for the hearing and determination of suits, or for the maintenance of order, or for the control or administration of persons or property, or in relation thereto, shall be exercised under and according to the provisions of this Order, so far as this Order extends and applies.

Part III.—Constitution of Courts.

7.—(1.) There shall be and there is hereby established a Court styled "Her Majesty's Court for East Africa," in this Order referred to as "The Protectorate Court" and "The Court."

(2.) Subject to the other provisions of this Order, Her Majesty's jurisdiction in the Protectorate shall be, and is hereby, vested in the Protectorate Court.

(3.) The Protectorate Court shall ordinarily sit at Mombasa, but may also sit at any other place or places within the Protectorate appointed by the Commissioner, with the previous or subsequent consent of the Secretary of State.

(4.) The Protectorate Court shall be held by an officer, styled "Her Majesty's Judicial Officer for the East Africa Protectorate," in this Order referred to as "the Judicial Officer."

(5.) A person appointed to be Judicial Officer must be a member of the Bar of England, Scotland, or Ireland, of not less than three years' standing. He shall be appointed by Her Majesty by warrant under the Royal Sign Manual.

(6.) The Judicial Officer shall hold office during the pleasure of Her Majesty, and, in the event of a revocation of his warrant, until such revocation is notified to him by the Secretary of State.

(7.) In case of the illness or temporary absence of the Judicial Officer, the Commissioner may appoint either a person qualified to be appointed Judicial Officer, or an officer employed in the civil administration of the Protectorate, to act as Judicial Officer.

(8.) Each of the Judges of the Court for Zanzibar shall be an additional Judicial Officer for the East Africa Protectorate, and when so acting may hold a Protectorate Court with the same powers, authority, and jurisdiction as the Judicial Officer, but shall not so act unless the Commissioner, having regard to the state of business in the Protectorate Court, requests him to act.

(9.) The Court shall have a seal bearing the style of the Court and a device approved by the Secretary of State; but until such a seal is provided, a stamp bearing the words "East Africa Court" may be used instead thereof.

1897

8. Subject to the directions of the Secretary of State, the Commissioner may appoint such and so many persons to be Clerks, Bailiffs, Interpreters, and other officers of the Court as he thinks fit, and remove from office any person so appointed.

Any officer of the Court designated on this behalf by the Commissioner may administer oaths, and take affidavits, declarations, and affirmations.

9. Provincial Courts shall be held at such places, for such areas, and by such officers of the Protectorate or other persons as the Secretary of State may appoint.

The Secretary of State may direct that a Provincial Court shall exercise criminal jurisdiction only, or both criminal and civil jurisdiction, and subject to any such directions, and to any exceptions or modifications made by the Secretary of State, a Provincial Court shall exercise the jurisdiction conferred by this Order on a Provincial Court, and on persons appointed to hold such Courts.

The Secretary of State may determine the description and number of the officers to be attached to a Provincial Court, and the mode of their appointment and removal, and their duties and remuneration, and any matters incident to any of the above-mentioned purposes.

10. The Court for Zanzibar shall have such appellate jurisdiction in regard to matters arising in the Protectorate as is provided by this Order.

PART IV.—Application of Law of British India and of the United Kingdom.

11.—(a.) Subject to the other provisions of this Order, and to any Treaties for the time being in force relating to the Protectorate, Her Majesty's criminal and civil jurisdiction in the Protectorate shall, so far as circumstances admit, be exercised on the principles of, and in conformity with, the enactments for the time being applicable as hereinafter mentioned of the Governor-General of India in Council, and of the Governor of Bombay in Council, and according to the course of procedure and practice observed by, and before, the Courts in the Presidency of Bombay beyond the limits of the ordinary original jurisdiction of the High Court of Judicature at Bombay according to their respective jurisdiction and authority, and so far as such enactments, procedure, and practice are inapplicable, shall be exercised under, and in accordance with, the common and statute law of England in force at the commencement of this Order.

(b.) The enactments mentioned in the Schedule to this Order are hereby made applicable to the Protectorate as from the commencement of this Order.

(c.) Any other existing or future enactments of the Governor-General of India in Council, or of the Governor of Bombay in Council, shall also be applicable to the Protectorate, but shall not come into operation until such times as may in the case of any of such enactments respectively be fixed by the Secretary of State.

(d.) Any Act of the Governor-General of India in Council, or of the Governor of Bombay in Council, whether passed before or after the commencement of this Order, amending or substituted for any Act of either of those Legislatures which is by or under this Order made applicable to and brought into operation in the Protectorate, shall, subject to the provisions of this Article, also apply to the Protectorate.

(e.) For the purpose of facilitating the application of any such enactments as before mentioned—

(i.) The Court may construe any such enactment, with such alterations not affecting the substance, as may be necessary or proper to adapt the same to the matter before the Court;

(ii.) The Secretary of State may by order direct by what authority any jurisdiction, powers, or duties incident to the operation of any such enactment, and for the exercise or performance of which no convenient provision has been otherwise made, shall be exercised or performed;

(iii.) The Secretary of State may by order modify, for the purposes of this Order, any provision of any of the said enactments, or of any amending or substituted enactment relating to civil or criminal procedure, or to procedure in bankruptcy;

(iv.) Any order of the Secretary of State made in pursuance of this Article shall be published in the Protectorate and in India in such manner as he directs, and shall have effect as from a date to be specified in the order.

12. The enactments described in the First Schedule to "The Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890," shall apply to the Protectorate as if it were a British Colony or possession, but subject to the provisions of this Order, and to the exceptions, adaptations, and modifications following, that is to say:—

(i.) The Commissioner is hereby substituted for the Governor of a Colony or British possession, and the Protectorate Court is hereby substituted for a Superior Court or Supreme Court and for a Magistrate or Justice of the Peace of a Colony or British possession.

(ii.) For the portions of the Merchant Shipping Acts, 1854 and 1867 referred to in the said Schedule shall be substituted Part XIII of "The Merchant Shipping Act, 1894."

(iii.) In section 51 of "The Conveyancing (Scotland) Act, 1874," and any enactment for the time being in force amending the same, the Protectorate Court is substituted for a Court of Probate in a Colony.

(iv.) With respect to "The Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881,"—

(a.) So much of the 4th and 5th sections of the said Act as relates to sending a report of the issue of a warrant, together with the information, or a copy thereof, or to the sending of a certificate of committal and report of a case, or to the information to be given by a Magistrate to a fugitive, shall be excepted.

(b.) So much of the 6th section of the said Act as relates to habeas corpus, and as requires the expiration of fifteen days before issue of a warrant, shall be excepted.

(c.) The Commissioner shall not be bound to return a fugitive offender to a British possession unless satisfied that the proceedings to obtain his return are taken with the consent of the Governor of that possession.

(d.) For the purposes of Part II of the said Act, the Protectorate, Zanzibar, the Uganda Protectorate, British India, Mauritius, and all British possessions and Protectorates in Africa south of the Equator, shall be deemed to be one group of British possessions.

13. The Secretary of State may, by Order published in such manner as he directs, declare that any of the Laws or Ordinances for the time being in force in any African possession of Her Majesty, and not inconsistent with this Order, shall have effect and be administered in the Protectorate, with such modifications or adaptations as may be necessary; and therefore such Laws or Ordinances as so modified or adapted shall have effect as if they had been applied by this Order.

PART V.—Criminal Matters.

14. Subject to the other provisions of this Order, the Code of Criminal Procedure and the other enactments relating to the administration of criminal justice in India, for the time being applicable to the Protectorate, shall have effect as if the Protectorate were a district of a Presidency of India; and every officer appointed to hold a Provincial Court under this Order shall be deemed to be a Magistrate of the Second Class; the Judicial Officer shall be deemed to be and have the powers of Sessions Judge; the full Court for Zanzibar shall be deemed to be the High Court; and the powers both of the Governor-General in Council and of the Local Government under those enactments shall be exercisable by the Secretary of State, or, with his previous or subsequent assent, by the Commissioner.

15. When any person is committed to the Court for Zanzibar for trial, the Court shall, in accordance with any arrangements made by the Commissioner in this behalf, send him to Zanzibar for trial; and shall bind over such of the proper witnesses as are British subjects or foreigners, or any of them, in their own recognizances, to appear and give evidence on the trial.

16. If any person subject to this Order smuggles or imports into or exports from the Protectorate any goods whereon any duty is charged or payable to the Government of the Protectorate, with intent to evade payment of the duty, he shall be punished with imprisonment for a term which may extend to two months, or with fine which may extend to 1,000 rupees, or with both.

17. Any act which, if done in British India, would be an offence against the law for the time being in force in British India relating to trade-marks, merchandize marks, copyright, designs, or invention, shall, if done in the Protectorate by a person subject to this Order, be an offence, whether such act is done in relation to any property or right of a person subject, or of a person not subject, to this Order; and any person convicted of such offence shall be punished with imprisonment for a term which may extend to two months, or with a fine which may extend to 1,000 rupees, or with both.

18.—(1.) In cases of murder or culpable homicide, if either the death or the criminal act which wholly or partly caused the death happened in the Protectorate, a Court acting under this Order shall have the like jurisdiction over any person subject to this Order who is charged either as a principal offender or as an abettor, as if both the criminal act and the death had happened in the Protectorate.

(2.) In the case of any offence committed on the high seas, or within the Admiralty jurisdiction, by any person subject to this Order who at the time of committing such offence was on board a British ship, or on board a foreign ship to which he did not belong, a Court acting under this Order shall have jurisdiction as if the offence had been committed within the Protectorate.

(3.) In cases tried under this Article no different sentence can be passed from the sentence which could be passed in England if the offence were tried there.

19.—(a.) The Commissioner may, if he thinks fit, by general order, prescribe the manner in which, and the places in the Protectorate at which, sentences of imprisonment are to be carried into execution.

(b.) The Commissioner may, if he thinks fit, in any case, by warrant under his hand and official seal, cause an offender convicted and sentenced to imprisonment before the Court to be sent and removed to, and imprisoned in, any place either in the Protectorate or in Zanzibar.

20. When an offender convicted before the Court is sentenced to imprisonment, and the Commissioner, proceeding under section 7 of "The Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890," authority in that behalf being hereby given to him, considers it expedient that the sentence should be carried into effect within Her Majesty's dominions, the place shall be a place in some part of Her Majesty's dominions out of the United Kingdom, the Government whereof consents that offenders may be sent thither under this Article.

21.—(1.) Where it is shown by evidence on oath, to the satisfaction of the Commissioner, that any person subject to this Order has committed, or is about to commit, an offence against this Order, or is otherwise conducting himself so as to be dangerous to peace and good order in the Protectorate, or is endeavouring to excite enmity between the people of the Protectorate and Her Majesty, or is intriguing against Her Majesty's power and authority in the Protectorate, the Commissioner may, if he thinks fit, by order under his hand and official seal, prohibit that person from being in the Protectorate, during any time therein specified, not exceeding two years.

(2.) If the person named in the order of prohibition fails to obey, or acts in contravention of the order—

(i.) He shall be guilty of an offence against this Order, and, on conviction thereof, shall be liable to imprisonment for any time not exceeding two years, without prejudice to the operation of the order of prohibition.

(ii.) Whether the offender has been convicted of, or imprisoned for, that offence or not, the Commissioner may, if he thinks fit, by order under his hand and official seal, authorize and direct that he be taken into custody, and be removed in custody to some place named in the order of removal, being a place to which a person can under this Order be deported beyond the limits specified in the order of prohibition;

(iii.) The offender shall be taken into custody and removed accordingly, and in such removal force may be used if necessary; and he shall be discharged from custody at the place named in the order of removal.

(3.) In any case in which the Commissioner can, under this Order, make an order of prohibition, he may, if he thinks fit, in lieu of such order, make and execute an order of deportation in like manner, and with all the like consequences, as an order of deportation can under this Order be made and executed in the case of a person who, after conviction of an offence, has failed to give security for good behaviour.

(4.) An appeal shall not lie against an order of prohibition, or removal, or deportation made under this Order.

(5.) The Commissioner, by order under his hand and official seal, may vary any order of prohibition (not extending the duration thereof), and may revoke any order of prohibition or removal.

(6.) The Commissioner shall forthwith report to the Secretary of State every order made by him under this Article, and the grounds thereof, and the proceedings thereunder.

22. Where a person subject to this Order is convicted of an offence, the Court before which he is convicted may, if it thinks fit, require him to give security to the satisfaction of the Court for his future good behaviour, and for that purpose may, if it thinks fit, cause him to come or be brought before the Court.

23.—(a.) If any person required by an order under the last preceding Article, or under the law relating to criminal procedure for the time being in force, to give security for good behaviour or for keeping the peace, fails to do so, the Court may, if it thinks fit, with the approval of the Commissioner, order that he be deported from the Protectorate.

(b.) The Court, on making an order of deportation, shall forthwith report to the Commissioner the order and the grounds thereof.

(c.) Thereupon the person ordered to be deported shall, if the Commissioner thinks fit, be, as soon as practicable, and in the case of a person convicted, either after execution of the sentence, or while it is in course of execution, removed in custody, under the warrant of the Commissioner, to the place named in the warrant.

(d.) The place shall be a place in that part (if any) of Her Majesty's dominions out of the United Kingdom to which the person belongs, or in some other part of those dominions, the Government whereof consents to the reception therein of persons deported under this Order, or a place under the Protectorate of Her Majesty, or in the country out of Her Majesty's dominions to which the person belongs.

(e.) The Court, on making an order of deportation, may, if it thinks fit, order the person to be deported to pay all or any part of the expenses of his deportation, to be fixed by the Court in the order.

(f.) The Commissioner shall forthwith report to the Secretary of State every order of deportation made under this Order, and the grounds thereof and the proceedings thereunder.

(g.) If a person deported under this Order returns to the Protectorate without permission in writing of the Commissioner or Secretary of State, he shall be punished with imprisonment for a term which may extend to two months, or with fine which may extend to 1,000 rupees, or with both.

(h.) He shall also be liable to be again deported under the original or a new order and a fresh warrant of the Commissioner.

24. Where a person entitled to appeal to the Court for Zanzibar from any Judgment or order passed in the exercise of criminal jurisdiction under this Order desires so to appeal, he shall present his Petition of appeal to the Protectorate Court, and the Petition shall with all practicable speed, be transmitted by the Protectorate Court to the Court for Zanzibar with certified copies of the charge (if any) and proceedings, of all documentary evidence admitted or tendered, of the depositions, of the notes of the oral testimony, and of the Judgment or order, and any argument on the Petition of appeal that the appellant desires to submit to the Court for Zanzibar.

25. The Protectorate Court shall postpone the execution of the sentence pending the appeal, and shall, if necessary, commit the person convicted to prison for safe custody, or detain him in prison for safe custody, or shall admit him to bail, and may take security, by recognizance, deposit of money, or otherwise, for his payment of any fine.

26.—(a.) Where, under this Order, a person is to be sent, or removed, or deported from the Protectorate, he shall, by warrant of the Commissioner under his hand and seal, be detained, if necessary, in custody, or in prison, until a fit opportunity for his removal or deportation occurs, and then if he is to be deported beyond sea, be put on board one of Her Majesty's vessels of war, or, if none is available, then on board some other British or other fit vessel.

(b.) The warrant of the Commissioner shall be sufficient authority to the person to whom it is directed or delivered for execution, and to the Commander or master of the vessel, to receive and detain the person therein named, in the manner therein prescribed, and to send, or remove, and carry him to the place therein named, according to the warrant.

(c.) In case of sending or removal for any purpose other than deportation, the warrant of the Commissioner shall be issued in duplicate, and the person executing it shall, as soon as practicable after his arrival at the place therein named, deliver, according to the warrant, with one of the duplicates of the warrant, to a constable, or proper officer of police or keeper of a prison, or other proper authority or person there, the person named in the warrant, to be produced on the order of the proper Court or authority there, or to be otherwise dealt with according to law.

27. Where a warrant or order of arrest is issued by a competent Judicial authority in Zanzibar or in the Uganda Protectorate for the apprehension of a person who is accused of crime committed in Zanzibar or Uganda, and who is, or is supposed to be, within the East Africa Protectorate, and that warrant or order is produced to any Court acting under this Order, the Court may back the warrant or order, and the same, when so backed, shall be sufficient authority to any person to whom it was originally directed, and also to any constable or officer of the Court by whom it is backed, and to any person named on the back of the warrant or order, to apprehend the accused person at any place within the limits of this Order, and to carry him to and deliver him up within the jurisdiction of the authority issuing the warrant or order.

PART VI.—Civil Matters.

28. The Protectorate Court shall hear and determine all civil questions, claims, or disputes in which the defendant or any defendant is a person subject to this Order.

29. Subject to the other provisions of this Order, the Code of Civil Procedure, "The Bombay Civil Courts Act, 1869," the Indian Succession Act, and the other enactments relating to the administration of civil justice for the time applicable to the Protectorate, shall have effect as if the Protectorate were a district in the Presidency of Bombay: the Judicial Officer shall be deemed to be the District Judge of the district, and the Protectorate Court the District Court or Principal Civil Court of Original Jurisdiction in the district; the Court for Zanzibar shall be deemed to be the highest Civil Court of Appeal for the district, and the Court authorized to hear appeals from and to revise the decisions of the District Court; and the powers, both of the Governor-General in Council and the Local Government, under those enactments shall be exercisable by the Secretary of State, or, with his previous or subsequent assent, by the Commissioner.

Every Provincial Court constituted by this Order and appointed to exercise civil jurisdiction shall, subject to any directions of the Secretary of State, exercise the powers of a Court for small causes under the Civil Procedure Code.

30. The following enactments of "The Colonial Courts of Admiralty Act, 1890," that is to say, section 2, sub-sections (2) to (4), sections 5 and 6, section 16, sub-section (3), shall apply to the Protectorate Court as if in the said sections the said Court were mentioned in lieu of a Colonial Court of Admiralty, and the Protectorate were referred to in lieu of a British possession.

31.—(a.) The Court shall endeavour to obtain, as early as may be, notice of the death of every person subject to this Order dying in the Protectorate leaving property to be administered, and all such information as may serve to guide the Court with respect to the securing and administration of his property.

(b.) On receiving notice of the death of such a person the Court shall put up a Notice thereof at the Court-house, and shall keep the same there until probate or administration is granted, or, where it appears to the Court that probate or administration will not be applied for, or cannot be granted, for such time as he thinks fit.

(c.) The Court shall, where the circumstances of the case appear so to require, as soon as may be, take possession of the property in the Protectorate of the deceased, or put it under his seal (in either case, if the nature of the property or other circumstances so require, making an inventory), and so keep it until it can be dealt with according to law.

(d.) All expenses incurred by the Court in so doing shall be the first charge on the property of the deceased, and the Court shall, by sale of the property, or part thereof, or otherwise, provide for the discharge of these expenses.

32. Where a person subject to this Order dies in the Protectorate intestate, his property shall, until administration is granted, vest in the Judicial Officer.

33. If a person named executor in a will, to the establishment of whose title, as such, it is necessary to obtain probate of that will, takes possession of and administers or otherwise deals with, any part of the property of the deceased, and does not obtain probate within one month after the death, or after the termination of any proceeding respecting probate or administration, he shall be liable to be punished with fine, which may extend to 1,000 rupees.

34. If any person, other than the person named executor, or the administrator, or a person entitled to represent the deceased without obtaining probate or letters of administration, or an officer of the Court, takes possession of and administers, or otherwise deals with, any part of the property of the deceased, he shall, as soon as practicable, notify the fact and the circumstances to the Court, and shall furnish to the Court all such information as the Court requires, and shall conform to any directions of the Court in relation to the custody, disposal, or transmission of the property, or the proceeds thereof, and, in case of any contravention of this Article, he shall be liable to be punished with fine, which may extend to 1,000 rupees.

35.—(1.) When the peculiar circumstances of the case appear to the Court so to require, for reasons recorded in its proceedings, the Court may, if it thinks fit, of its own motion, or otherwise, grant letters of administration to an officer or practitioner of the Court.

(2.) The person so appointed shall act under the direction of the Court, and shall be indemnified thereby; and, if he is a practitioner, he shall not act otherwise than as administrator in relation to the estate.

(3.) He shall publish such notices, if any, as the Court thinks fit, in the Protectorate, Zanzibar, the United Kingdom, and elsewhere.

(4.) The Court shall require and compel him to file, in the proper office of the Court, his accounts of his administration at intervals not exceeding three months.

(5.) The accounts shall be audited under the direction of the Court.

(6.) All expenses incurred in behalf of the Court in execution of this Article shall be the first charge on the estate of the deceased in the Protectorate; and the Court shall, by the sale of the estate, or otherwise, provide for the discharge of those expenses.

36.—(a.) Every agreement for reference to arbitration to which a person subject to this Order is a party, may, on the application of any party, be filed for execution in the proper office of the Court.

(b.) The Court shall thereupon have authority to enforce the agreement and the award made thereunder, and to control and regulate the proceedings before and after the award, in such manner and on such terms as the Court may think fit.

37.—(a.) Where it is desired to commence a suit in which one party is, and the other is not, a person subject to this Order, the Court shall entertain the same, and shall hear and determine it.

(b.) Provided that the person not subject to this Order, if so required by the Court, first obtains and files in the proper office of the Court the consent, in writing, of the competent authority (if any) on behalf of his own nation, to his submitting, and that he does submit, to the jurisdiction of the Court, and, if required by the Court, gives security to the satisfaction of the Court, and to such reasonable amount as the Court thinks fit, by deposit or otherwise, to pay fees, costs, and damages, and abide by, and perform, the decision to be given by the Court or on appeal.

(c.) A cross-suit shall not be brought in the Court against a plaintiff being a person not subject to this Order, who has submitted to the jurisdiction, by a defendant without leave of the Court first obtained; but the Court may, as a condition of entertaining the plaintiff's suit, require his consent to any cross-suit or matter of set-off being entertained by the Court.

(d.) The Court, before giving leave, may require proof from the defendant that his claim arises out of the matter in dispute, and that there is reasonable ground for it, and that it is not made for vexation or delay.

(e.) Nothing in this Article shall prevent the defendant from bringing, in the Court, against a person not subject to this Order, after the termination of the suit in which the latter is plaintiff, any suit which he might have brought in the Court if no provision restraining cross-suits had been inserted in this Order.

(f.) Where a person not subject to this Order obtains in the Court an order against a defendant being a person subject to this Order, and in another suit the latter is plaintiff and the former is defendant, the Court may, if it thinks fit, on the application of the first-mentioned defendant, stay the enforcement of the order pending that other suit, and may set off any amount ordered to be paid by one party in one action against any amount ordered to be paid by the other party in the other action.

(g.) Where the plaintiff, being a person not subject to this Order, obtains an order in the Court against two or more defendants jointly, being persons subject to this Order, and in another suit one of them is a plaintiff and the first mentioned plaintiff is defendant, the Court may, if it thinks fit, on application, stay the enforcement of the order pending that other action, and may set off any amount ordered to be paid by one party in one action against any amount ordered to be paid by the other party in the other action, without prejudice to the right of the plaintiff in the second suit to obtain contribution from his co-defendants in the first suit.

38.—(a.) Where any person entitled to appeal to the Court for Zanzibar from any Decree or order made by the Protectorate Court in the exercise of civil jurisdiction under this Order desires so to appeal, he shall present his Memorandum of Appeal to the Protectorate Court, and, subject to the provisions hereinafter contained, that Court shall receive the same for transmission to the Court for Zanzibar in manner hereinafter provided.

(b.) The appellant shall, within such time as the Court directs, give security to the satisfaction of the Court, and to such amount as the Court thinks reasonable, for prosecution of the appeal, and for payment of any costs that may be ordered by the Court for Zanzibar on the appeal to be paid by the appellant.

(c.) The appellant shall pay into the proper office of the Protectorate Court such sum as the Court thinks reasonable, to defray the expense of the making up and transmission to the Court for Zanzibar of the record.

39. The appellant may, with his Memorandum of Appeal, file any argument which he desires to submit to the Court for Zanzibar in support of the appeal.

40.—(a.) The memorandum of appeal, and the argument (if any) shall be served on such persons as respondents as the Protectorate Court directs.

(b.) A respondent may, within seven days after service, file in the Protectorate Court such arguments as he desires to submit to the Court for Zanzibar against the appeal.

(c.) Copies thereof shall be furnished by the Protectorate Court to such persons as that Court thinks fit.

41.—(a.) On the expiration of the time for the respondent filing his argument, the Protectorate Court shall, without the application of any party, make up the record of appeal, which shall consist of the memorandum of appeal and the arguments (if any), and certified copies of the following, namely, the plaint, written statements (if any), all proceedings, all written and documentary evidence admitted or tendered, the notes of the oral evidence, the Judgment, and the Decree or order.

(b.) The several pieces shall be fastened together consecutively numbered, and the whole shall be secured by the seal of the Court, and be forthwith forwarded to the Court for Zanzibar.

(c.) The Court may, if for special reasons it seems fit, send any portion of the documentary evidence in original to the Court for Zanzibar.

PART VII.—Miscellaneous.

42.—(1.) Notwithstanding anything in this Order, the Protectorate Court or a Provincial Court shall not exercise any jurisdiction in any proceeding whatsoever over the Commissioner or his official or other residences, or his official or other property.

(2.) Notwithstanding anything in this Order, the Protectorate Court or a Provincial Court shall not exercise, except with the consent of the Commissioner, signified in writing to the Court, any jurisdiction in a civil action or proceeding over any person attached to or being a member of Her Majesty's Consulate-General for the Protectorate, or being a domestic servant of the Commissioner.

(3.) If, in any case under this Order, it appears to any Court that the attendance of the Commissioner, or of any person attached to or being a member of Her Majesty's Consulate-General, or being a domestic servant of the Commissioner, to give evidence before the Court, is requisite in the interest of justice, the Court may address to the Commissioner a request in writing for such attendance.

(4.) A person attending to give evidence before the Court shall not be compelled or allowed to give any evidence or produce any document if, in the opinion of the Commissioner, signified by him personally or in writing to the Court, the giving or production thereof would be injurious to Her Majesty's service.

(5.) This Article shall not operate in bar of any proceeding against the Commissioner in his official capacity, where it is sought to establish any liability of the Government of the Protectorate.

43. Subject to the approval of the Secretary of State, the Court may, with the approval of the Court for Zanzibar, frame Rules of Procedure and other Rules, consistent with this Order, for the better execution of the provisions herein contained in respect of civil or criminal proceedings, and for regulating the conditions on which persons other than parties may be permitted to practice as advocates or solicitors in any Court, and for suspending or excluding (subject to a right of appeal to the Secretary of State) such persons from practice in case of misconduct: provided that any scale of remuneration fixed by such Rules shall have been sanctioned by the Treasury.

44. The Commissioner may make Regulations (to be called Queen's Regulations) for the following purposes, that is to say:—

(i.) For the regulation of all matters relating to customs, inland revenue, post office, land, highways, railways, money, agriculture, and public health.

(ii.) For the establishment of a Constabulary or other force to be employed in the maintenance of order or (either within or without the limits of this Order) in defence of the Protectorate.

(iii.) For securing the observance of any Treaty for the time being in force relating to the Protectorate, or of any native or local law or custom; and (iv.) Generally for the peace, order, and good government of the Protectorate in relation to matters not provided for in this Order.

Any Regulations under this Article may provide for forfeiture of any goods, receptacles, or things in relation to which, or to the contents of which, any breach is committed of such Regulations, or of any Treaty or any native or local law or custom, the observance of which is provided for by the Regulations.

Any Regulations under this Article shall, when allowed by the Secretary of State, and published as he directs, have effect as if contained in this Order.

Any breach of the Regulations shall be an offence against this Order, and any person guilty thereof, shall, on conviction, be liable to a fine which may extend to 1,000 rupees, or to imprisonment which may extend to two months, or both, in addition to any forfeiture as aforesaid.

45. The Commissioner may also make Queen's Regulations for the governance, visitation, care, and superintendence of prisons in the Protectorate, and for the infliction of corporal or other punishment on prisoners committing offences against the prisons Regulations.

Any Regulations under this Article shall, when allowed by the Secretary of State, have effect, as if contained in this Order, and copies thereof shall be exhibited in every prison to which they apply in such manner as the Commissioner may direct.

Any breach of Regulations under this Article, committed by any officer of a prison, or by any other person (not being a prisoner), shall be punishable in like manner as a breach of Queen's Regulations, under the last preceding Article.

46.—(a.) From and after the commencement of any Rules to be made as in this Article mentioned a non-testamentary instrument to which any person subject to this Order is a party, purporting or operating to create, declare, assign, limit, or extinguish, whether in present or in future, any right, title, or interest, whether vested or contingent to, in, or over immovable property situate in the Protectorate, shall not affect any immovable property comprised therein, or be received as evidence of any transaction affecting that property, unless it has been registered at such time and place and in such manner as may be prescribed by Rules made by the Commissioner and approved by the Secretary of State, and for the time being in force.

(b.) Provided that nothing in this Article shall make any instrument inadmissible in evidence in any criminal proceedings.

47.—(a.) The Commissioner may, with the approval of the Secretary of State and concurrence of the Treasury, make rules imposing fees leviable in respect of any proceedings in, or processes issued out of, any Court established under this Order, and in respect of the registration of any instrument under this Order.

(b.) But the Court may in any case if it thinks fit, on account of the poverty of a party, or for any other reason, dispense in whole or in part with the payment of any fee chargeable in respect of such matter.

(c.) The Court shall in every such case forthwith report the dispensation to the Commissioner, and he shall give such directions thereon as he thinks fit.

(d.) Nothing in this Order shall affect any Order in Council prescribing a table of fees to be taken by Consular officers; and, where a fee is taken under that Order, no fee shall be taken in respect of the same matter under this Order.

48.—(a.) All fees, charges, expenses, costs, fines, damages, and other money payable under this Order, or under any law made applicable by this Order, may be enforced under order of the Court by attachment and sale of goods, and in case of deficiency by imprisonment which may extend to one month.

(b.) Any bill of sale or mortgage, or transfer of property, made with the view of avoiding such attachment or sale, shall not be effectual to defeat the provisions of this Order.

(c.) All fees, penalties, fines, and forfeitures levied under this Order, shall be paid to the public account; and shall be applied in such manner as the Secretary of State, with the consent of the Treasury, may direct.

49. Subject to the other provisions of this Order, all expenses of removal of prisoners and others, and the expenses of deportation, and of the sending of any person to Zanzibar, or to any part of Her Majesty's dominions or Protectorates, including expenses of maintenance, shall be defrayed in such manner as the Secretary of State, with the concurrence of the Treasury, directs.

50. Every criminal charge against a native, and every civil proceeding against a native, except a proceeding in which the native is co-defendant with a person subject to this Order, shall be heard and determined in the proper Native Court, and the Protectorate Court shall not exercise any jurisdiction therein.

51. The Commissioner may, with the consent of the Secretary of State, make rules and orders for the administration of justice in Native Courts, and in particular may thereby:—

(a.) Establish or abolish any Native Court.

(b.) Define the local limits within which any Native Court is to exercise jurisdiction.

(c.) Alter or modify the operation of any native law or custom in so far as may be necessary in the interests of humanity and justice.

(d.) Regulate the jurisdiction of and procedure in Native Courts.

(e.) Make such provision as seems fit for the re-hearing of cases, the revision of sentences, and the hearing of appeals from Native Courts.

(f.) For any of the purposes aforesaid, or for any other purposes of justice, direct that any law of British India, or of the United Kingdom, shall apply to and be administered in Native Courts with such exceptions or modifications as may seem proper.

52.—(a.) Where it is proved that the attendance of a person subject to this Order to give evidence, or for any other purpose connected with the administration of Justice, is required before a Native Court, the Protectorate Court may, it it thinks fit in a case and in circumstances in which the Protectorate Court would require the attendance of that person before itself, order that he do attend as required. The order may be made subject to conditions as to payment or tender of expenses or otherwise.

(b.) If the person ordered to attend, having reasonable notice of the time and place at which he is required to attend, fails to attend accordingly, and does not excuse his failure to the satisfaction of the Protectorate Court, or if when so attending to give evidence he wilfully gives false evidence, or refuses to be sworn or to give evidence, he shall, independently of any other liability, be liable to be punished with imprisonment for a term which may extend to two months, or with fine which may extend to 1,000 rupees, or with both.

53. If a person subject to this Order—

(i.) Wilfully obstructs, by act or threat, a Native Court in the performance of its duty: or

(ii.) Within or close to the room or place where such a Court is sitting wilfully misbehaves in a violent, threatening, or disrespectful manner, to the disturbance of the Court or to the intimidation of suitors or others resorting to the Court; or

(iii.) Wilfully insults any member or officer of such a Court in his going to, or returning from, any place of sitting or office of the Court;

He shall, on conviction before a Court established under this Order, be liable to be punished with imprisonment for a term which may extend to two months, or with fine which may extend to 1,000 rupees, or with both.

54.—(a.) If an officer of any Court employed to execute an order loses, by neglect or omission, the opportunity of executing it, then, on complaint of the person aggrieved and proof of the fact alleged, the Court may, if it thinks fit, order the officer to pay the damages sustained by the person complaining, or part thereof.

(b.) The order may be enforced as an order directing payment of money.

55.—(a.) If a Clerk or officer of any Court, acting under pretence of the process of authority of the Court, is charged with extortion, or with not paying over money duly levied, or with other misconduct, the Court may, if it thinks fit, inquire into the charge in a summary way, and may for that purpose summon and enforce the attendance of all necessary persons as in an action, and may make such order for the repayment of any money extorted, or for the payment over of any money levied, and for the payment of such damages and costs, as the Court thinks fit.

(b.) The Court may also, if it thinks fit, on the same inquiry, impose on the clerk or officer a fine not exceeding 50 rupees for each offence.

(c.) A clerk or officer punished under this Article shall not, without the leave of the Protectorate Court, be liable to an action in respect of the same matter; and any such action, if already or afterwards begun, may be stayed by the Court in such manner and on such terms as the Court thinks fit.

(d.) Nothing in this Article shall be deemed to prevent any person from being prosecuted under any other law for any Act or omission punishable under this Article, or from being liable under that other law to any higher punishment or penalty than that provided by this Article. Provided that no person shall be punished twice for the same offence.

56. The Commissioner, or any officer of the Protectorate Government appointed by him in that behalf, may exercise any power conferred on any Justices of the Peace within Her Majesty's dominions by any Act of Parliament, for the time being in force, regulating merchant seamen or the mercantile marine.

57. If a question arises whether any place is or is not within the Protectorate for the purposes of this Order, it shall be referred to the Commissioner, and a certificate under his hand and seal shall be conclusive on the question, and judicial notice thereof shall be taken by every Court constituted by or under this Order, and by the Court for Zanzibar.

58. Not later than 31st March in each year the Commissioner shall send to the Secretary of State a report on the operation of this Order, up to 31st December in the previous year, showing for the then last twelve months the number and nature of the proceedings, criminal and civil, taken under this Order, and the result thereof, and the number and amount of fees received, and containing an abstract of the list of British subjects, and such other information, and being in such form as the Secretary of State from time to time directs.

PART VIII.—Repeal and Transitory Provisions.

59. On the commencement of this Order, the Zanzibar and Africa Orders in Council shall cease to apply to territories included within the limits of this Order.

60.—(a.) Nothing in this Order shall :—

(i.) Affect the past operation of the Zanzibar and Africa Orders in Council, or any regulation, rule, or appointment made, or any right, title, obligation, or liability accrued, or the validity or invalidity of anything done or suffered, under those Orders respectively, before the making of this Order;

(ii.) Interfere with the institution or prosecution of any proceeding or suit, criminal or civil, in respect of any offence committed against, or forfeiture incurred, or liability accrued under, or in consequence of any provision of those Orders respectively, or any regulation made thereunder;

(iii.) Take away or abridge any protection or benefit given or to be enjoyed in relation thereto.

(b.) Every regulation, rule, appointment, and other thing in this Article mentioned shall continue in force and have effect throughout the Protectorate, as if this Order had not been made, but so that the same may be revoked, altered, or otherwise dealt with under this Order, as if it had been made or done under this Order.

61. Criminal or civil proceedings begun under the Zanzibar or Africa Orders, and pending at the commencement of this Order, shall, from and after that time, be regulated by the provisions of this Order, as far as the nature and circumstances of each case admit.

62. This Order shall commence and have effect as follows :—

(1.) As to the making of any warrant or appointment under this Order, immediately from and after the date of this Order.

(2.) As to the framing of Rules of Procedure or Regulations, and the approval thereof by the Secretary of State, immediately from and after the date of this Order.

(3.) As to all other matters and provisions comprised and contained in this Order, immediately from and after the expiration of one month after this Order is first exhibited in the public office of the Protectorate at Mombasa ; for which purpose the Commissioner is hereby required forthwith, on receipt by him of a copy of this Order, to affix and exhibit the same conspicuously in his public office, and he is also hereby required to keep the same so affixed and exhibited during one month from the first exhibition thereof ; and notice of the time of such first exhibition shall, as soon thereafter as practicable, be published in Mombasa in such manner as the Commissioner directs ; and, notwithstanding anything in this Order, the time of the expiration of the said month shall be deemed to be the time of the commencement of this Order.

(4.) Proof shall not in any proceeding or matter be required that the provisions of this Article have been complied with, nor shall any act or proceeding be invalidated by any failure to comply with any of such provisions.

63. A copy of this Order shall be kept exhibited conspicuously in the Court and in the principal office of the Protectorate at Mombasa.

Printed copies shall be provided and sold at such reasonable price as the Commissioner directs.

And the Most Honourable the Marquess of Salisbury, K.G., one of Her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, is to give the necessary directions herein.

Annex 2.

ZANZIBAR.

Draft Order in Council.

WHEREAS by Treaty, grant, usage, sufferance, and other lawful means, Her Majesty the Queen has power and jurisdiction within the dominions of His Highness the Sultan of Zanzibar ;

Now, therefore, Her Majesty, by virtue, and in exercise of the powers on this behalf by "The Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890," or otherwise, in Her Majesty vested, is pleased, by and with the advice of Her Privy Council, to order, and it is hereby ordered, as follows :—

PART I.—Preliminary.

1. This Order may be cited as "The Zanzibar Order in Council, 1897."

The limits of this Order are the Islands of Zanzibar and Pemba, including the territorial waters thereof, and any islets within those waters, which islands and waters are in this Order (except when the context requires a different construction) included in the expression "Zanzibar."

2. This Order is divided into Parts, as follows :—

Part I. Preliminary.
Part II. Application and effect of Order.
Part III. Constitution of Courts.
Part IV. Application of law of British India and of the United Kingdom.
Part V. Criminal matters.
Part VI. Civil matters.
Part VII. Zanzibar and Foreign Subjects and Tribunals.
Part VIII. Miscellaneous.
Part IX. Repeal and transitory Provisions.
Schedules.

3. In this Order—

(i.) "The Secretary of State" means one of Her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State ;

(ii.) "Treasury" means the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury ;

(iii.) "The Consul-General" means Her Majesty's Consul-General for Zanzibar, including a person acting temporarily, with the approval of the Secretary of State, as or for the Consul-General ;

(iv.) "British subject" includes a British-protected person, that is to say, a person who (a) being a native of any place beyond the limits of this Order which is under the Protectorate of Her Majesty is temporarily in Zanzibar ; or (b) by virtue of "The Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890," or otherwise, enjoys Her Majesty's protection in Zanzibar ;

(v.) "Resident" means having a fixed place of abode in Zanzibar ;

(vi.) "Zanzibar subject" means a subject of the Sultan of Zanzibar resident within the limits of this Order ;

(vii.) "Foreigner" means a subject or citizen of a State in amity with Her Majesty, other than Zanzibar ;

(viii.) "Zanzibar or foreign Court" means a Court of the Government of Zanzibar or of any foreign State in amity with Her Majesty exercising lawful jurisdiction in Zanzibar, and includes every member or officer of such a Court ;

(ix.) "Treaty" includes any Convention, Agreement, or Arrangement made by or on behalf of Her Majesty with any State or Government, King, Chief, people, or tribe, whether the Sultan of Zanzibar is or is not a party thereto ;

(x.) "Administration" means (unless a contrary intention appears from the context) letters of administration, including the same with will annexed, or granted for special or limited purposes, or limited in duration ;

(xi.) "Ship" includes any vessel used in navigation, however propelled, with her tackle, furniture, and apparel, and any boat or other craft ;

(xii.) "Offence" means any act or omission made punishable by any law for the time being in force ;

(xiii.) "Imprisonment" means imprisonment of either description, as defined in the Indian Penal Code ;

(xiv.) "Month" means calendar month ;

(xv.) "Will" means will, codicil, or other testamentary instrument ;

(xvi.) "Oath" or "affidavit" includes affirmation or declaration :

(xvii.) "Person" includes Corporation :

(xviii.) Words importing the plural or the singular may be construed as referring to one person or thing, or to more than one person or thing, and words importing the masculine as referring to females (as the case may require).

THE OCEANA GROUP PUBLISHERS

4.—(1.) Where this Order confers a power or imposes a duty, the power may be exercised and the duty shall be performed from time to time as occasion requires.

(2.) Where this Order confers a power or imposes a duty on the holder of an office, then, unless a contrary intention appears, the power may be exercised and the duty shall be performed by the holder of the office for the time being, or by a person duly appointed to act for him.

(3.) Where this Order confers a power to make rules, regulations, or orders, the power shall be construed as including a power exercisable in the like manner, and subject to the like approval and conditions (if any), to rescind, revoke, amend, or vary the rules, regulations, or orders.

PART II.—Application and Effect of Order.

5.—(1.) This Order extends to British subjects and to foreigners with respect to whom the Government whose subjects they are has, by Treaty or otherwise, agreed with Her Majesty for, or consented to, the exercise of power or authority by Her Majesty; and the expression "person subject to this Order" shall be construed accordingly.

(2.) This Order also extends to (a) the property and all personal or proprietary rights and liabilities in Zanzibar of persons subject to this Order; (b) British ships, with their boats, and the property on board thereof; and (c) foreign ships belonging to persons who are, or if they were in Zanzibar would be, persons subject to this Order, so, however, that jurisdiction over such foreign ships shall not be exercised otherwise than according to the practice of the High Court in England in the exercise of jurisdiction over foreign ships.

(3.) This Order also extends, in the cases and according to the conditions specified in this Order, to Zanzibar subjects and to foreigners not otherwise subject to this Order.

6. All Her Majesty's jurisdiction exercisable in Zanzibar for the hearing and determination of suits, or for the maintenance of order, or for the control or administration of persons or property, or in relation thereto, shall be exercised under and according to the provisions of this Order, so far as this Order extends and applies.

PART III.—Constitution of Courts.

7.—(1.) There shall be, and there is hereby established, a Court styled "Her Britannic Majesty's Court for Zanzibar," hereinafter referred to also as "the Court for Zanzibar," and "the Court."

(2.) Subject to the other provisions of this Order, Her Majesty's jurisdiction in Zanzibar shall be, and is hereby, vested in the Court for Zanzibar.

(3.) The members of the Court shall be the Judge and the Assistant Judge, but as respects the Assistant Judge, subject to the provisions of this Order and to such exceptions and directions as the Secretary of State from time to time thinks fit to make.

(4.) A person appointed to be Judge or Assistant Judge must be a member of the bar of England, Scotland, or Ireland, and must be of not less than five years' standing on appointment as Judge, and of not less than three years' standing on appointment as Assistant Judge.

(5.) The Judge and the Assistant Judge shall be appointed by Her Majesty by warrant under her Royal Sign Manual. Each of them shall hold office during the pleasure of Her Majesty, and, in the event of a revocation of his warrant, until such revocation is notified to him by the Secretary of State.

(6.) In case of the illness or temporary absence of the Judge, the Consul-General may appoint either a person qualified to be appointed Judge, or the Assistant Judge, or a person appointed to hold a Subordinate Court under this Order, or a commissioned Consular officer, to act as Judge.

(7.) In case of the illness or temporary absence of the Assistant Judge, or of his temporary appointment as Judge, the Consul-General may appoint either a person qualified to be appointed Assistant Judge, or a person appointed to hold a Magistrate's Court under this Order, or a commissioned Consular officer, to act as Assistant Judge.

8. The Court shall have a seal bearing the style of the Court and a device approved by the Secretary of State; but until such a seal is provided, a stamp bearing the words "Court for Zanzibar" may be used instead thereof.

9. Subject to the directions of the Secretary of State, the Consul-General may appoint such and so many persons to be Registrars, Clerks, Bailiffs, Interpreters, and other officers of the Court as he thinks fit, and remove from office any person so appointed.

Any Registrar of the Court, and any other officer of the Court designated in this behalf by the Consul-General, may administer oaths, and take affidavits, declarations, and affirmations.

10. The Secretary of State may, if he thinks fit, appoint Subordinate Courts to be held at places in Zanzibar, and may appoint a competent person to hold any such Court, under such designation and with such remuneration as he may direct, and may assign to any such Court such of the powers and jurisdiction by this Order conferred on the Court for Zanzibar, to be exercised by the Court so constituted, as he may think fit, and may assign the district in and for which each such Court shall act, and may determine the description and number of the officers to be attached to any such Court and the mode of their appointment and removal and their duties and remuneration, and any matters incident to any of the above-mentioned purposes.

Any person appointed under the provisions of this Article shall be removable by authority of the Secretary of State.

PART IV.—Application of Law of British India and of the United Kingdom.

11.—(a.) Subject to the other provisions of this Order, and to any Treaties for the time being in force relating to Zanzibar, Her Majesty's criminal and civil jurisdiction in Zanzibar shall, so far as circumstances admit, be exercised on the principles of, and in conformity with, the enactments for the time being applicable as hereinafter mentioned of the Governor-General of India in Council, and of the Governor of Bombay in Council, and according to the course of procedure and practice observed by, and before, the Courts in the Presidency of Bombay beyond the limits of the ordinary original jurisdiction of the High Court of Judicature at Bombay according to their respective jurisdiction and authority, and so far as such enactments, procedure, and practice are inapplicable, shall be exercised under, and in accordance with, the common and statute law of England in force at the commencement of this Order.

(b.) The enactments described in the First Schedule to this Order are hereby made applicable to Zanzibar.

(c.) Any other existing or future enactments of the Governor-General of India in Council, or of the Governor of Bombay in Council, shall also be applicable to Zanzibar, but shall not come into operation until such times as may in the case of any such enactments respectively be fixed by the Secretary of State.

(d.) Any Act of the Governor-General of India in Council, or of the Governor of Bombay in Council, whether passed before or after the commencement of this Order, amending or substituted for any Act of either of those Legislatures which is by or under this Order made applicable to and brought into operation in Zanzibar, shall, subject to the provisions of this Article, also apply to Zanzibar.

(e.) For the purpose of facilitating the application of any such enactments as before mentioned—

(i.) The Court may construe any such enactments, with such alterations not affecting the substance, as may be necessary or proper to adapt the same to the matter before the Court.

(ii.) The Secretary of State may by order direct by what authority any jurisdiction, powers, or duties incident to the operation of any such enactment, and for the exercise or performance of which no convenient provision has been otherwise made, shall be exercised or performed.

(iii.) The Secretary of State may by order modify, for the purposes of this Order, any provision of any of the before-mentioned enactments, or of any amending or substituted enactment relating to civil or criminal procedure, or to procedure in bankruptcy.

(iv.) Any order of the Secretary of State made in pursuance of this Article shall be published in Zanzibar and in India in such manner as he directs, and shall have effect as from a date to be specified in the order.

12. The enactments described in the First Schedule to "The Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890," shall apply to Zanzibar as if Zanzibar were a British Colony or possession, but subject to the provisions of this Order and to the exceptions, adaptations, and modifications following, that is to say:—

(i.) The Consul-General is hereby substituted for the Governor of a Colony or British possession, and the Court for Zanzibar is hereby substituted for a Superior Court or Supreme Court and for a Magistrate or Justice of the Peace of a Colony or British possession.

(ii.) For the portions of the Merchant Shipping Acts, 1854 and 1867, referred in the said Schedule, shall be substituted Part XIII of "The Merchant Shipping Act, 1894."

(iii.) In section 51 of "The Conveyancing (Scotland) Act, 1874," and any enactment for the time being in force amending the same, the Court for Zanzibar is substituted for a Court of Probate in a Colony.

(iv.) With respect to "The Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881,"—

(a.) So much of the 4th and 5th sections of the said Act as relates to sending a report of the issue of a warrant, together with the information, or a copy thereof, or to the sending of a certificate of committal and report of a case, or to the information to be given by a Magistrate to a fugitive, shall be excepted.

(b.) So much of the 6th section of the said Act as relates to habeas corpus, and as requires the expiration of fifteen days before issue of a warrant, shall be excepted.

(c.) The Consul-General shall not be bound to return a fugitive offender to a British possession unless satisfied that the proceedings to obtain his return are taken with the consent of the Governor of that possession.

(d.) For the purposes of Part II of the said Act, Zanzibar, the East Africa, Uganda, and British Central Africa Protectorates, British India, Mauritius, Natal, and the Cape of Good Hope, shall be deemed to be one group of British possessions.

PART V.—Criminal Matters.

13. Subject to the other provisions of this Order, the Code of Criminal Procedure and the other enactments relating to the administration of criminal justice in India, for the time being applicable to Zanzibar, shall have effect as if Zanzibar were a district in the Presidency of Bombay, and the Assistant Judge shall be deemed to be the Magistrate of the district; the Judge shall be deemed to be the Sessions Judge; the High Court of Judicature at Bombay (hereinafter called the High Court of Bombay) shall be deemed to be the High Court; and the powers both of the Governor-General in Council and of the Local Government under those enactments shall be exercisable by the Secretary of State, or, with his previous or subsequent assent, by the Governor-General of India in Council.

14. When any person is committed to the High Court of Bombay for trial, the Consul-General may, under and in accordance with the provisions of section 6 of "The Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890," send him to Bombay for trial; and in such case the Court may, if it thinks fit, bind over such of the proper witnesses as are British subjects, or any of them, in their own recognizances, to appear and give evidence on the trial.

15. If any person subject to this Order smuggles or imports into or exports from Zanzibar any goods whereon any duty is charged or payable to the Government of Zanzibar, with intent to evade payment of the duty, he shall be punished with imprisonment for a term which may extend to two months, or with fine which may extend to 1,000 rupees, or with both.

16. Any act which if done in British India would be an offence against the law for the time being in force in British India relating to trade-marks, merchandize-marks, copyright, designs, or inventions, shall, if done in Zanzibar by a person subject to this Order, be an offence, whether such act is done in relation to any property or right of a British subject, or of a foreigner or native, or otherwise; and any person convicted of such offence shall be punished with imprisonment for a term which may extend to two months, or with a fine which may extend to 1,000 rupees, or with both.

17.—(1.) In cases of murder or culpable homicide, if either the death or the criminal act which wholly or partly caused the death happened in Zanzibar, a Court acting under this Order shall have the like jurisdiction over any person subject to this Order who is charged either as a principal offender or as an abettor, as if both the criminal act and the death had happened in Zanzibar.

(2.) In the case of any offence committed on the high seas, or within the Admiralty jurisdiction, by any person subject to this Order who at the time of committing such offence was on board a British ship, or on board a foreign ship to which he did not belong, a Court acting under this Order shall have jurisdiction as if the offence had been committed within Zanzibar.

(3.) In cases tried under this Article no different sentence can be passed from the sentence which could be passed in England if the offence were tried there.

18.—(a.) The Consul-General may, if he thinks fit, by general order, prescribe the manner in which, and the places in Zanzibar at which, sentences of imprisonment are to be carried into execution.

(b.) The Consul-General may, if he thinks fit, in any case, by warrant under his hand and official seal, cause an offender convicted and sentenced to imprisonment before the Court to be sent and removed to, and imprisoned in, any place in Zanzibar or in the East Africa Protectorate.

19. Where an offender convicted before the Court is sentenced to imprisonment, and the Consul-General, proceeding under section 7 of "The Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890," authority in that behalf being hereby given to him, considers it expedient that the sentence should be carried into effect within Her Majesty's dominions, the place shall be a place in some part of Her Majesty's dominions out of the United Kingdom the Government whereof consents that offenders may be sent thither under this Article.

20.—(1.) Where it is shown by evidence on oath, to the satisfaction of the Consul-General, that any person subject to this Order has committed, or is about to commit, an offence against this Order, or is otherwise conducting himself so as to be dangerous to peace and good order in Zanzibar, or is endeavouring to excite enmity between the Sultan or people of Zanzibar and Her Majesty, or is intriguing against Her Majesty's power or authority in Zanzibar, the Consul-General may, if he thinks fit, by order under his hand and official seal, prohibit that person from being in Zanzibar during any time therein specified, not exceeding two years.

(2.) If the person named in the order of prohibition fails to obey, or acts in contravention of the order—

(i.) He shall be guilty of an offence against this Order, and, on conviction thereof, shall be liable to imprisonment for any time not exceeding two years, without prejudice to the operation of the order of prohibition;

(ii.) Whether the offender has been convicted of, or imprisoned for, that offence or not, the Consul-General may, if he thinks fit, by order under his hand and official seal, authorize and direct that he be taken into custody, and be removed in custody to some place named in the order of removal, being a place to which a person can under this Order be deported beyond the limits specified in the order of prohibition;

(iii.) The offender shall be taken into custody and removed accordingly, and in such removal force may be used if necessary; and he shall be discharged from custody at the place named in the order of removal.

(3.) In any case in which the Consul-General can, under this Order, make an order of prohibition, he may, if he thinks fit, in lieu of such order, make and execute an order of deportation in like manner, and with all the like consequences, as an order of deportation can, under this Order, be made and executed in the case of a person who, after conviction of an offence, has failed to give security required for good behaviour.

(4.) An appeal shall not lie against an order of prohibition, or removal, or deportation made under this Order.

(5.) The Consul-General, by order under his hand and official seal, may vary any order of prohibition (not extending the duration thereof), and may revoke any order of prohibition or removal.

(6.) The Consul-General shall forthwith report to the Secretary of State every order made by him under this Article, and the grounds thereof, and the proceedings thereunder.

21. Where a person subject to this Order is convicted of an offence, the Court before which he is convicted may, if it thinks fit, require him to give security to the satisfaction of the Court for his future good behaviour, and for that purpose may, if it thinks fit, cause him to come or be brought before the Court.

22.—(a.) If any person required by an order under the last preceding Article, or under the law relating to criminal procedure for the time being in force, to give security for good behaviour, or for keeping the peace, fails to do so, the Court may, if it thinks fit, with the approval of the Consul-General, order that he be deported from Zanzibar.

(b.) The Court, on making an order of deportation, shall forthwith report to the Consul-General the order and the grounds thereof.

(c.) Thereupon the person ordered to be deported shall be, as soon as practicable, and in the case of a person convicted, either after execution of the sentence, or while it is in course of execution, removed in custody, under the warrant of the Consul-General, to the place named in the warrant.

(d.) The place shall be a place in that part (if any) of Her Majesty's dominions out of the United Kingdom to which the person belongs, or in some other part of those dominions the Government whereof consents to the reception therein of persons deported under this Order, or a place under the Protectorate of Her Majesty, or in the country out of Her Majesty's dominions to which the person belongs.

(e.) The Court, on making an order of deportation, may, if it thinks fit, order the person to be deported to pay all or any part of the expenses of his deportation, to be fixed by the Court in the order.

(f.) The Consul-General shall forthwith report to the Secretary of State every order of deportation made under this Order, and the grounds thereof and the proceedings thereunder.

(g.) If a person deported under this Order returns to Zanzibar without permission in writing of the Consul-General or Secretary of State, he shall be punished with imprisonment for a term which may extend to two months, or with fine which may extend to 1,000 rupees, or with both.

(h.) He shall also be liable to be again deported under the original or a new order and a fresh warrant of the Consul-General.

23.—(a.) Where a person entitled to appeal to the High Court of Bombay from any Judgment or order passed in the exercise of criminal jurisdiction under this Order desires so to appeal, he shall present his Petition of appeal to the Court for Zanzibar, and the Petition shall with all practicable speed be transmitted by the Court for Zanzibar to the High Court, with certified copies of the charge (if any) and proceedings, of all documentary evidence admitted or tendered, of the depositions, of the notes of the oral testimony, and of the Judgment or order, and any argument on the Petition of appeal that the appellant desires to submit to the High Court.

24. The Court for Zanzibar shall postpone the execution of the sentence pending the appeal, and shall, if necessary, commit the person convicted to prison for safe custody, or detain him in prison for safe custody, or shall admit him to bail, and may take security, by recognizance, deposit of money, or otherwise, for his payment of any fine.

25.—(a.) Where, under this Order, a person is to be sent, or removed, or deported from Zanzibar, he shall, by warrant of the Consul-General under his hand and seal, be detained, if necessary, in custody, or in prison, until a fit opportunity for his removal or deportation occurs, and then be put on board one of Her Majesty's vessels of war, or, if none is available, then on board some other British or other fit vessel.

(b.) The warrant of the Consul-General shall be sufficient authority to the person to whom it is directed or delivered for execution, and to the Commander or master of the vessel, to receive and detain the person therein named, in the manner therein prescribed, and to send, or remove, and carry him to the place therein named, according to the warrant.

(c.) In case of sending or removal for any purpose other than deportation, the warrant of the Consul-General shall be issued in duplicate, and the person executing it shall, as soon as practicable after his arrival at the place therein named, deliver, according to the warrant, with one of the duplicates of the warrant, to a constable, or proper officer of police or keeper of a prison, or other proper authority or person there, the person named in the warrant, to be produced on the order of the proper Court or authority there, or to be otherwise dealt with according to law.

26. When a warrant or order of arrest is issued by a competent judicial authority in the East Africa Protectorate or in the Uganda Protectorate for the apprehension of a person who is accused of crime committed in that Protectorate, and who is, or is supposed to be, within Zanzibar, and that warrant or order is produced to any Court acting under this Order, the Court may back the warrant or order, and the same, when so backed, shall be sufficient authority to any person to whom it was originally directed, and also to any constable or officer of the Court by whom it is backed, and to any person named on the back of the warrant or order, to apprehend the accused person at any place within the limits of this Order and to carry him to and deliver him up within the jurisdiction of the authority issuing the warrant or order.

PART VI.—Civil Matters.

27. Subject to the other provisions of this Order, the Code of Civil Procedure, "The Bombay Civil Courts Act, 1869," the Indian Succession Act, and the other enactments relating to the administration of civil justice for the time applicable to Zanzibar, shall have effect as if Zanzibar were a district in the Presidency of Bombay; the Judge shall be deemed to be the District Judge, and the Assistant Judge, the Joint District Judge, of the district, and the Court for Zanzibar, the District Court or Principal Civil Court of Original Jurisdiction in the district; the High Court of Bombay shall be deemed to be the highest Civil Court of Appeal for the district, and the Court authorized to hear appeals from and to revise the decisions of the District Court; and the powers, both of the Governor-General in Council and the Local Government, under those enactments shall be exercisable by the Secretary of State, or, with his previous or subsequent assent, by the Governor-General of India in Council.

28. The Court for Zanzibar shall, for and within Zanzibar, and for vessels and persons coming within Zanzibar, have all such jurisdiction as is for the time being conferred on the Court by "The Consular Courts (Admiralty) Order in Council, 1894," or by any other Order in Council under section 12 of "The Colonial Courts of Admiralty Act, 1890."

The Assistant Judge shall be the Admiralty Registrar of the Court, but when he acts as Judge the Consul-General may appoint a competent person to be Acting Registrar.

29.—(a.) The Court shall endeavour to obtain, as early as may be, notice of the death of every person subject to this Order dying in Zanzibar and leaving property to be administered, and all such information as may serve to guide the Court with respect to the securing and administration of his property.

(b.) On receiving notice of the death of such a person, the Court shall put up a Notice thereof at the Court-house, and shall keep the same there until probate or administration is granted, or, where it appears to the Court that probate or administration will not be applied for, on cannot be granted, for such time as the Court thinks fit.

(c.) The Court shall, where the circumstances of the case appear so to require, as soon as may be, take possession of the property in Zanzibar of the deceased, or put it under the seal of the Court (in either case, if the nature of the property or other circumstances so require, making an inventory), and so keep it until it can be dealt with according to law.

(d.) All expenses incurred by the Court in so doing shall be the first charge on the property of the deceased, and the Court shall, by sale of the property, or part thereof, or otherwise, provide for the discharge of these expenses.

30. When a person subject to this Order dies in Zanzibar intestate, his property shall, until administration is granted, vest in the Judge.

31. If a person named executor in a will, to the establishment of whose title, as such, it is necessary to obtain probate of that will, takes possession of and administers, or otherwise deals with any part of the property of the deceased, and does not obtain probate within one month after the death, or after the termination of any proceeding respecting probate or administration, he shall be liable to be punished with fine, which may extend to 1,000 rupees.

32. If any person other than the person named executor, or the administrator, or a person entitled to represent the deceased, without obtaining probate or letters of administration, or an officer of the Court, takes possession of and administers, or otherwise deals with, any part of the property of the deceased, he shall, as soon as practicable, notify the fact and the circumstances to the Court, and shall furnish to the Court all such information as the Court requires, and shall conform to any directions of the Court in relation to the custody, disposal, or transmission of the property, or the proceeds thereof, and, in case of any contravention of this Article, he shall be liable to be punished with fine, which may extend to 1,000 rupees.

33.—(1.) When the peculiar circumstances of the case appear to the Court so to require, for reasons recorded in its proceedings, the Court may, if it thinks fit, of its own motion, or otherwise, grant letters of administration to an officer or practitioner of the Court.

(2.) The person so appointed shall act under the direction of the Court, and shall be indemnified thereby; and if he is a practitioner, shall not act otherwise than as administrator in relation to the estate.

(3.) He shall publish such notices, if any, as the Court thinks fit in Zanzibar, Bombay, the United Kingdom, and elsewhere.

(4.) The Court shall require and compel him to file, in the proper office of the Court, his accounts of his administration, at intervals not exceeding three months.

(5.) The accounts shall be audited under the direction of the Court.

(6. All expenses incurred in behalf of the Court in execution of this Article shall be the first charge on the estate of the deceased in Zanzibar; and the Court shall, by the sale of the estate, or otherwise, provide for the discharge of those expenses.

34.—(a.) Where any person entitled to appeal to the High Court of Bombay from any Decree or order made by the Court for Zanzibar in the exercise of civil jurisdiction under this Order desires so to appeal, he shall present his Memorandum of Appeal to the Court for Zanzibar, and, subject to the provisions hereinafter contained, that Court shall receive the same for transmission to the High Court in manner hereinafter provided.

(b.) The appellant shall, within such time as the Court directs, give security to the satisfaction of the Court, and to such amount as the Court thinks reasonable, for prosecution of the appeal, and for payment of any costs that may be ordered by the High Court of Bombay on the appeal to be paid by the appellant.

(c.) The appellant shall pay into the proper office of the Court for Zanzibar such sum as the Court thinks reasonable to defray the expense of the making up and transmission to the High Court of Bombay of the record.

35. The appellant may, with his Memorandum of Appeal, file any argument which he desires to submit to the High Court of Bombay in support of the appeal.

36.—(a.) The Memorandum of Appeal and the argument (if any) shall be served on such persons as respondents as the Court for Zanzibar directs.

(b.) A respondent may, within seven days after service, file in the Court for Zanzibar such arguments as he desires to submit to the High Court of Bombay against the appeal.

(c.) Copies thereof shall be furnished by the Court for Zanzibar to such persons as that Court thinks fit.

37.—(a.) On the expiration of the time for the respondent filing his argument the Court shall, without the application of any party, make up the record of appeal, which shall consist of the Memorandum of Appeal and the arguments (if any), and certified copies of the following, namely, the plaint, written statements (if any), all proceedings, all written and documentary evidence admitted or tendered, the notes of the oral evidence, the Judgment, and the Decree or order.

(b.) The several pieces shall be fastened together consecutively numbered, and the whole shall be secured by the seal of the Court, and be forthwith forwarded to the High Court of Bombay.

(c.) The Court may, if for special reasons they think fit, send any portion of the documentary evidence in original to the High Court.

PART VII.—Zanzibar and Foreign Subjects and Tribunals.

38.—(a.) The Court for Zanzibar shall hear and determine all civil questions, claims, or disputes arising between any Zanzibar subject and any person subject to this Order in which the former is plaintiff or complainant.

(b.) The High Court of Bombay shall not exercise jurisdiction in any such suit.

39.—(a.) Where it is desired to commence a suit in which one party is, and the other party is not, a person subject to this Order, the Court shall entertain the same, and shall hear and determine it.

(b.) Provided that the person not subject to this Order, if so required by the Court, first obtains and files in the proper office of the Court the consent, in writing of the competent authority (if any) on behalf of his own nation, to his submitting, and that he does submit to the jurisdiction of the Court, and, if required by the Court, gives security to the satisfaction of the Court, and to such reasonable amount as the Court thinks fit, by deposit or otherwise, to pay fees, costs, and damages, and abide by, and perform, the decision to be given by the Court or on appeal.

(c.) A cross-suit shall not be brought in the Court against a plaintiff, being a person not subject to this Order, who has submitted to the jurisdiction, by a defendant, without leave of the Court first obtained; but the Court may, as a condition of entertaining the plaintiff's suit, require his consent to any cross-suit or matter of set-off being entertained by the Court.

(d.) The Court, before giving leave, may require proof from the defendant, that his claim arises out of the matter in dispute, and that there is reasonable ground for it, and that it is not made for vexation or delay.

(e.) Nothing in this Article shall prevent the defendant from bringing, in the Court, against a person not subject to this Order, after the termination of the suit in which the latter is plaintiff, any suit which he might have brought in the Court if no provision restraining cross-suits had been inserted in this Order.

(f.) Where a person not subject to this Order obtains in the Court an order against a defendant being a person subject to this Order, and in another suit the latter is plaintiff and the former is defendant, the Court may, if it thinks fit, on the application of the first-mentioned defendant, stay the enforcement of the order pending that other suit, and may set off any amount ordered to be paid by one party in one action against any amount ordered to be paid by the other party in the other action.

(g.) Where the plaintiff, being a person not subject to this Order, obtains an order in the Court against two or more defendants jointly, being persons subject to this Order, and in another suit one of them is a plaintiff and the first mentioned plaintiff is defendant, the Court may, if it thinks fit, on application, stay the enforcement of the order pending that other action, and may set off any amount ordered to be paid by one party in one action against any amount ordered to be paid by the other party in the other action, without prejudice to the right of the person plaintiff in the second suit to obtain contribution from his co-defendants under the joint liability.

40.—(a.) Where it is proved that the attendance of any person subject to this Order to give evidence, or for any other purpose connected with the administration of justice, is required before any Court of Justice in Zanzibar other than a Court established by this Order, the Court for Zanzibar may, if it thinks fit, in a case and in circumstances in which the Court for Zanzibar would require the attendance of that person before the Court, order that he do attend as required. The order may be made subject to conditions as to payment or tender of expenses or otherwise.

(b.) If the person ordered to attend, having reasonable notice of the time and place at which he is required to attend, fails to attend accordingly, and does not excuse his failure to the satisfaction of the Court for Zanzibar, or if when so attending to give evidence he wilfully gives false evidence, or refuses to be sworn to give evidence, he shall, independently of any other liability, be liable to be punished with imprisonment for a term which may extend to two months or with fine which may extend to 1,000 rupees, or with both.

41. If a person subject to this Order—

(i.) Wilfully obstructs, by act or threat, any Court in Zanzibar not established under this Order in the performance of its duty; or

(ii.) Within or close to the room or place where such a Court is sitting wilfully misbehaves in a violent, threatening, or disrespectful manner, to the disturbance of the Court or to the intimidation of suitors or others resorting to the Court; or

(iii.) Wilfully insults any member or officer of such a Court in his going to, or returning from, any place of sitting or office of the Court;

He shall, on conviction before the Court for Zanzibar, be liable to be punished with imprisonment for a term which may extend to two months, or with fine which may extend to 1,000 rupees, or with both.

42.—(a.) Every agreement for reference to arbitration between a person subject to this Order on the one hand, and a person not subject to this Order on the other hand, may, on the application of any party, be filed for execution in the proper office of the Court.

(b.) The Court shall thereupon have authority to enforce the agreement and the award made thereunder, and to control and regulate the proceedings before and after the award, in such manner and on such terms as the Court may think fit.

(c.) Provided that the person not subject to this Order first obtains and files, in the proper office of the Court, the consent, in writing, of the competent authority (if any), on behalf of his own nation, to his submitting, and that he does submit, to the jurisdiction of the Court, and, if required by the Court, gives security to the satisfaction of the Court, and to such reasonable amount as the Court thinks fit, by deposit or otherwise, to pay fees, damages, costs, and expenses, and abide by and perform the award.

(d.) If a person subject to this Order wilfully gives false evidence in an arbitration, he shall, on conviction before the Court for Zanzibar, be liable to the same punishment as if he were convicted of giving false evidence in a proceeding in that Court.

PART VIII.—Miscellaneous.

43.—(1.) Notwithstanding anything in this Order, the Court for Zanzibar shall not exercise any jurisdiction in any proceeding whatsoever over Her Majesty's Consul-General, or his official or other residences, or his official or other property.

(2.) Notwithstanding anything in this Order, the Court for Zanzibar shall not exercise, except with the consent of the Consul-General, signified in writing to the Court, any jurisdiction in a civil action or proceeding over any person attached to or being a member of Her Majesty's Consulate-General in Zanzibar, or being a domestic servant of the Consul-General.

(3.) If, in any case under this Order, it appears to the Court for Zanzibar that the attendance of the Consul-General, or of any person attached to or being a member of Her Majesty's Consulate-General in Zanzibar, or being a domestic servant of the Consul-General, to give evidence before the Court, is requisite in the interest of justice, the Court for Zanzibar may address to the Consul-General a request in writing for such attendance.

(4.) A person attending to give evidence before the Court shall not be compelled or allowed to give any evidence or produce any document if, in the opinion of the Consul-General, signified by him personally or in writing to the Court, the giving or production thereof would be injurious to Her Majesty's service.

44. Subject to the approval of the Secretary of State, the Court may frame Rules of Procedure and other Rules, consistent with this Order, for the better execution of the provisions herein contained in respect of civil or criminal proceedings, and for regulating the conditions on which persons other than parties may be permitted to practise as advocates or solicitors in any Court, or for suspending or excluding such persons from practice in case of misconduct: Provided that any scale of remuneration fixed by such rules shall have been sanctioned by the Treasury.

45. The Consul-General may make Regulations (to be called Queen's Regulations) for the following purposes, that is to say:—

(i.) For the peace, order, and good government of British subjects, and other persons subject to this Order, in relation to matters not provided for in this Order.

(ii.) For securing the observance of any Treaty for the time being in force relating to Zanzibar, or of any native or local law or custom.

(iii.) For requiring Returns to be made of the nature, quantity, and value of articles exported from or imported into Zanzibar, or any part thereof, by or on account of any British subject or person subject to this Order, and for prescribing the times and manner at or in which, and the persons by whom, such Returns are to be made.

Any Regulations under this Article may provide for forfeiture of any goods, receptacles, or things in relation to which, or to the contents of which, any breach is committed of such Regulations, or of any Treaty, or any native or local law or custom, the observance of which is provided for by the Regulations.

Any Regulations under this Article shall, when allowed by the Secretary of State, and published as he directs, have effect as if contained in this Order.

Any breach of the Regulations shall be an offence against this Order, and any person guilty thereof, shall, on conviction, be liable to a fine which may extend to 1,000 rupees, or to imprisonment which may extend to two months, or both, in addition to any forfeiture as aforesaid.

46. The Consul-General may also make Regulations for the governance, visitation, care, and superintendence of prisons in Zanzibar, and for the infliction of corporal or other punishment on prisoners committing offences against those Regulations.

Any Regulation under this Article shall, when allowed by the Secretary of State, have effect, as if contained in this Order, and copies thereof shall be exhibited in every prison to which they apply in such manner as the Consul-General may direct.

Any breach of Regulations under this Article, committed by any officer of a prison, or by any other person (not being a prisoner), shall be punishable in like manner as a breach of Queen's Regulations, under the last preceding Article.

47.—(a.) A non-testamentary instrument to which a British subject is a party, executed after the 28th day of November, 1893, and purporting or operating to create, declare, assign, limit, or extinguish, whether in present or in future, any right, title, or interest, whether vested or contingent to, in, or over immovable property situate in Zanzibar, shall not affect any immovable property comprised therein, or be received as evidence of any transaction affecting that property, unless it has been registered at such time and place and in such manner as may be prescribed by Rules made by the Consul-General and approved by the Secretary of State, and for the time being in force.

(b.) Provided that nothing in this Article shall make any instrument inadmissible in evidence in any criminal proceeding.

48.—(a.) The Consul-General may, with the approval of the Secretary of State and concurrence of the Treasury, make rules imposing fees leviable in respect of any proceedings in, or processes issued out of, any Court established under this Order, and in respect of the registration of any instrument under this Order.

(b.) But the Court may in any case, if it thinks fit, on account of the poverty of a party, or for any other reason, dispense in whole or in part with the payment of any fee chargeable in respect of such matter.

(c.) The Court shall in every such case forthwith report the dispensation to the Consul-General, and he shall give such directions thereon as he thinks fit.

(d.) Nothing in this Order shall affect any Order in Council prescribing a Table of fees to be taken by Consular officers; and, where a fee is taken under that Order, no fee shall be taken in respect of the same matter under this Order.

1897

49.—(a.) All fees, charges, expenses, costs, fines, damages, and other money payable under this Order, or under any law made applicable by this Order, may be enforced under order of the Court by attachment and sale of goods, and, in case of deficiency, by imprisonment, which may extend to one month.

(b.) Any bill of sale or mortgage, or transfer of property, made with the view of avoiding such attachment or sale, shall not be effectual to defeat the provisions of this Order.

(c.) All fees, penalties, fines, and forfeitures levied under this Order, except such as may under Treaty be paid to the Sultan of Zanzibar, shall be paid to the public account, and shall be applied in such manner as the Secretary of State, with the concurrence of the Treasury, may direct.

50. Subject to the other provisions of this Order, all expenses of removal of prisoners and others, and the expenses of deportation, and of the sending of any person to Bombay, or to any part of Her Majesty's dominions, including expenses of maintenance, shall be defrayed in such manner as the Secretary of State, with the concurrence of the Treasury, directs.

51.—(a.) If an officer of the Court employed to execute an order loses, by neglect or omission, the opportunity of executing it, then, on complaint of the person aggrieved, and proof of the fact alleged, the Court may, if it thinks fit, order the officer to pay the damages sustained by the person complaining, or part thereof.

(b.) The order may be enforced as an order directing payment of money.

52.—(a.) If a clerk or officer of the Court, acting under pretence of the process of authority of the Court, is charged with extortion, or with not paying over money duly levied, or with other misconduct, the Court may, if it thinks fit, inquire into the charge in a summary way, and may for that purpose summon and enforce the attendance of all necessary persons as in an action, and may make such order for the repayment of any money extorted, or for the payment over of any money levied, and for the payment of such damages and costs, as the Court thinks fit.

(b.) The Court may also, if it thinks fit, on the same inquiry, impose on the clerk or officer a fine not exceeding 50 rupees for each offence.

(c.) A clerk or officer punished under this Article shall not, without the leave of the Court, be liable to an action in respect of the same matter; and any such action, if already or afterwards begun, may be stayed by the Court in such manner and on such terms as the Court thinks fit.

(d.) Nothing in this Article shall be deemed to prevent any person from being prosecuted under any other law for any act or omission punishable under this Article, or from being liable under that other law to any higher punishment or penalty than that provided by this Article. Provided that no person shall be punished twice for the same offence.

53. The Consul-General, or any Consular officer appointed by him in that behalf, may exercise any power conferred on any Justices of the Peace within Her Majesty's dominions by any Act of Parliament for the time being in force, regulating merchant seamen or the mercantile marine.

54. Not later than the 31st March in each year the Consul-General shall send to the Secretary of State a Report on the operation of this Order up to the 31st December in the previous year showing, for the then last twelve months, the number and nature of the proceedings, criminal or civil, taken under this Order, and the result thereof, and the number and amount of fees received, and containing an abstract of the list of registered British subjects, and such other information, and being in such form as the Secretary of State from time to time directs.

PART IX.—Repeal and Transitory Provisions.

55.—(a.) From the commencement of this Order, the Orders in Council described in the Second Schedule to this Order shall be repealed as to Zanzibar, but this repeal shall not—

(i.) Affect the past operation of any of the repealed Orders, or any Regulation, Rule, or appointment made, or any right, title, obligation, or liability accrued, or the validity or invalidity of anything done or suffered, under any of those Orders before the commencement of this Order;

(ii.) Interfere with the institution or prosecution of any proceeding or suit, criminal or civil, in respect of any offence committed against, or forfeiture incurred, or liability accrued under, or in consequence of any provision of the repealed Orders, or any regulation made thereunder;

(iii.) Take away or abridge any protection or benefit given or to be enjoyed in relation thereto.

(b.) Notwithstanding the repeal of the Orders in Council aforesaid, or any other thing in this Order, every Regulation, Rule, appointment, and other thing in this Article mentioned, shall continue and be as if this Order had not been made, but so that the same may be revoked, altered, or otherwise dealt with under this Order, as if it had been made or done under this Order.

No. 2A. [Council Office.]

[June 25, 1897.]

The Law Officers of the Crown to Sir C. L. Peel.

Royal Courts of Justice, June 25, 1897.

Sir,

As to Zanzibar and East Africa Orders in Council being Statutory Rules.

WE were favoured with your letter of the 17th instant, stating that you were directed by the Lord President of the Council to transmit to us the drafts of proposed Orders in Council under "The Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890," entitled, "The Zanzibar Order in Council, 1897," and "The East Africa Order in Council, 1897," which were forwarded to the Privy Council Office by the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs on the 31st ultimo for submission to Her Majesty.

That having regard to the Report of the Law Officers of the Crown of the 29th April, 1895, as to whether a draft Order in Council entitled, "The Foreign Marriages Order in Council, 1895," came within the provisions of section 1 of "The Rules Publication Act, 1893," it appeared to the Lord President that inasmuch as the draft Orders in Council referred to seemed to embody Regulations which were subsidiary to the Act under which they were proposed to be made, they came within the scope of "The Rules Publication Act," and accordingly a letter was addressed to the Foreign Office on the 3rd instant to that effect, and stating that notice of the intention to submit these draft Orders in Council to Her Majesty would be published in the "London Gazette" at the earliest possible date, unless Lord Salisbury saw any objection to that course, and that as no such objection was made before the 11th instant, the Notices were published in the "Gazette" of that day.

That a letter had, however, been received from the Foreign Office directing attention to the Report of the Law Officers of the 26th February, 1895, &c., with reference to a proposed Order in Council under "The Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890," and stating that, in the opinion of Lord Salisbury, the present draft Orders came within the language of that Report, and, consequently, was outside section 1, sub-section 4, of the "Rules Publication Act."

That, in these circumstances, the Lord President requested that we would be pleased to inform his Grace whether, in our opinion, these draft Orders came within the scope of "The Rules Publication Act, 1893."

In compliance with the request contained in your letter, we have the honour to

Report—

That, in our opinion, the Orders in Council in question are not Statutory Rules within the meaning of "The Rules Publication Act, 1893," and do not require to be dealt with under that Act.

We are, &c.
(Signed) RICHARD E. WEBSTER.
ROBERT B. FINLAY.

56. Criminal or civil proceedings begun under any Order in Council repealed by this Order, and pending at the commencement of this Order, shall, from and after that time, be regulated by the provisions of this Order, as far as the nature and circumstances of each case admit.

57. This Order shall commence and have effect as follows:—

(1.) As to the making of any warrant or appointment under this Order, immediately from and after the date of this Order.

(2.) As to the framing of Rules of Procedure or Regulations, and the approval thereof by the Secretary of State, immediately from and after the date of this Order.

(3.) As to all other matters and provisions comprised and contained in this Order, immediately from and after the expiration of one month after this Order is first exhibited in the public office of the Consul-General; for which purpose he is hereby required forthwith, on receipt by him of a copy of this Order, to affix and exhibit the same conspicuously in his public office, and he is also hereby required to keep the same so affixed and exhibited during one month from the first exhibition thereof; and notice of the time of such first exhibition shall, as soon thereafter as practicable, be published in Zanzibar in such manner as the Consul-General directs; and, notwithstanding anything in this Order, the time of the expiration of the said month shall be deemed to be the time of the commencement of this Order.

(4.) Proof shall not in any proceeding or matter be required that the provisions of this Article have been complied with, nor shall any act or proceeding be invalidated by any failure to comply with any of such provisions.

58. A copy of this Order shall be kept exhibited conspicuously in the Court and in the Consulate at Zanzibar.

Printed copies shall be provided and sold at such reasonable price as the Consul-General directs.

And the Most Honourable the Marquess of Salisbury, K.G., and the Right Honourable Lord George Hamilton, two of Her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, are to give the necessary directions herein as to them respectively appertain.

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, August 23, 1897.

Acquisition of land for Uganda Railway.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit to you the papers marked in the accompanying list which relate to the question whether the lands acquired for the purposes of the Uganda Railway in the East Africa and the Uganda Protectorates should be vested in Her Majesty, her heirs and successors.

It will be seen from this correspondence that a belt of land on each side of the track of the Uganda Railway has been reserved for the purposes of the railway by a Proclamation issued by Her Majesty's Commissioner and Consul-General in the East Africa Protectorate, and that Her Majesty's Acting Commissioner and Consul-General in Uganda has been instructed to issue a similar Proclamation as regards the land in that Protectorate. The Proclamation issued in the East Africa Protectorate (Document A) will be found in Sir A. Hardinge's despatch No. 99 of the 10th May last (Document B), and the instruction in regard to Uganda in the draft despatch No. 56 to Major Ternan of the 31st May last (Document C).

In this despatch Sir A. Hardinge inquires whether the belt of land reserved to the railway should be assigned or transferred to Her Majesty, and, if not, to whom it should be transferred. This question was referred to Mr. Albert Gray, whose reply forms Document (D). The Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury, to whom the question was thereupon referred, suggested that the matter was one on which your opinion should be obtained.

Copies of the Land Regulations for the East Africa Protectorate and of "The East Africa Order in Council, 1897," are transmitted herewith (Documents E and F respectively), together with the Regulations or Orders enacting in the East Africa Protectorate the Indian Land Acquisition Act (Document H).

It may be mentioned that at the time the Proclamation reserving the belt of land was issued in the East Africa and Zanzibar Protectorates those Protectorates were respectively under "The Africa Order in Council, 1889" (Document J) and "The Zanzibar Order in Council, 1884" (Document K). "The Africa Order in Council, 1889," is still applicable to the Uganda Protectorate.

I have the honour to request that you will take into your consideration the papers now submitted to you, and that you will favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion as to whether the land thus reserved for the purposes of the Uganda Railway should be vested in Her Majesty, her heirs and successors, or, if not, in whom it should be vested; and, generally, with any observations which, in your opinion, will be of use to his Lordship in dealing with this question.

With reference to my letter of the 23rd ultimo respecting land in the East Africa Protectorate, I have the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit to you the accompanying correspondence* with the India Office relating to the authority to be assigned to the various officers of the East Africa Protectorate for the purpose of administering Indian law as applied to the Protectorate.

Report.

In our opinion, the land should be vested in trustees to be appointed by Her Majesty's Government, who should have power to remove trustees and name fresh trustees as may be necessary. Should, at any time, it be possible to vest the land in any Corporation or Company, it would be convenient, as the reappointment of new trustees would be avoided and transfers simplified, but until this can be arranged the land should be vested in trustees appointed by Her Majesty's Government.

Succession duty in British Central Africa Protectorate.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit to you the papers noted in the accompanying list which relate to the question whether succession duty is due to the Treasury of the British Central Africa Protectorate on real property situated in that Protectorate, and forming part of the estate of a deceased British subject, or of any other person assimilated to a British subject in regard to such a matter.

Your opinion is requested in order that his Lordship may reply to the inquiry made in Messrs. Stibbard, Gibson, and Wills' letter of the 17th October last (document A).

The British Central Africa Protectorate is a Protectorate in the sense in which the term is ordinarily used at the present time. The territory comprised in it is recognized by Great Britain and by other Powers as being within the sphere of influence of Great Britain and under her protection. But every portion of the territory is, with more or less regularity, placed under the immediate sovereignty of native Rulers, who have, however, tacitly or explicitly delegated to the Queen the power necessary for enabling her to exercise within their several sovereignties administrative and legislative authority over all persons other than their respective immediate subjects. These functions are exercised by the Queen, in conformity with the provisions of the Foreign Jurisdiction Acts, by means of Orders of Her Majesty in Council, the most important of which, and probably the only one that you need consider for the purpose of the present reference, is "The Africa Order in Council, 1889" (document B).

Article 13 of this Order provides that, subject to the other provisions of the Order, the civil and criminal jurisdiction exercisable in any place under the Order shall, so far as circumstances admit, be exercised upon the principles of and in conformity with the substance of the law for the time being in force in and for England; and the fee Table annexed to the instructions (document C), issued under the Order in Council, directs that the fee payable on probate, &c., shall be the like sum as is payable for the time being in England for stamp duty in like case, not exceeding a certain fixed limit.

It does not appear that the Foreign Jurisdiction Acts, the above-mentioned "Africa Order in Council, 1889," or any other Acts or Orders in Council, make provision for the exercise of jurisdiction by Her Majesty in regard to real property situated without her immediate dominions, whether it be situated in the British Central Africa Protectorate or not.

Lord Salisbury has been advised that such a matter as the succession and the taxation of such property on transfer by succession or otherwise is held in English law to be governed by the lex loci rei sitæ; it is therefore consonant with this principle that the Foreign Jurisdiction Acts and the Orders in Council issued thereunder should abstain—as it is thought they do—from making provision for the exercise by the Queen of jurisdiction in regard to the succession to or succession duties on real property situated without Her Majesty's immediate dominions.

It is therefore conceived that, so far as concerns the principles and substance of English law, succession to and succession duties on real property in the British Central Africa Protectorate must be held to be governed by the particular native law applicable to the property.

It does not appear that Her Majesty has acquired technically the power to legislate on the subject of the succession to and succession duties on real property situated in the Protectorate, and forming part of the estates of British subjects, neither does it appear that Her Majesty's Representative in the Protectorate has, on the assumption that he possessed such authority, issued any legislative provisions purporting to regulate such matters.

I have the honour to request you to take the papers sent herewith into your consideration, and to favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion on the following points:—

1. Is succession duty on real property in the British Central Africa Protectorate, when it forms part of the estate of a deceased British subject or other person assimilated to a British subject in regard to such matters, leviable according to the provisions of the law on the subject for the time being in force in England, or according to any legislative provision issued under the authority of the Foreign Jurisdiction Acts, and applied in the proper manner to the Protectorate; or should succession to and succession duties on such real property be held to be subject to native custom.

2. Would it be competent to the Queen or to Her Majesty's Representative in the Protectorate to regulate such matters in accordance with English law or otherwise on receiving a delegation of authority for the purpose from the native Ruler within whose sovereignty the property is situated.

I have also the honour to request you to favour his Lordship with any observations on the case generally which would, in your opinion, be of use to him in dealing with it.

I have, &c.

Report.

The English law as to succession duty is not applied to the British Central Africa Protectorate by the Order in Council of 1889. We cannot read clause 13 of that Order as imposing this tax.

Native custom is not applicable for the purpose of succession to and succession duty on real property of British subjects in the Protectorate. There is no settled system of native law in respect of real property to which it can be supposed that British subjects have submitted themselves. These matters ought to be regulated by Order in Council.

Her Majesty in substance and in fact exercises dominion in these territories subject to the rights of the Chiefs over their own followers, and the tribal usages observed by them.

We are of opinion that Her Majesty has authority to regulate succession to real property of British subjects and the succession duties payable. Great confusion would result if these matters were to be decided by ill-defined native usages—probably quite inapplicable to Europeans—prevailing in different territories of very uncertain boundaries.

We therefore recommend that an Order in Council should be issued dealing with these matters. At present no succession duty is payable.

Submission of Treaties of South African Republic for Queen's approval.

WE were honoured with your commands signified in Mr. Wingfield's letter of the 18th instant, stating that with reference to our Report of 27th April, 1896, respecting the submission of Treaties by the South African Republic for the Queen's approval under Article IV of the London Convention, he was directed by you to transmit to us a copy of the material part of the correspondence on the subject which had passed since our Report was made.

That Mr. Wingfield was also to transmit to us copies of two despatches which you had addressed to the High Commissioner for South Africa on the 6th March last, dealing with certain breaches of the London Convention. That the former of those was sent in pursuance of our Reports of the 9th December, 1896, and 1st March, 1897, on the subject of the Aliens Immigration Law of the South African Republic. That the latter contained a statement of the case generally in regard to breaches of the Convention, and included further observations on the submission of Treaties under Article IV.

That the reply of the Government of the South African Republic to those two despatches would be found in the despatch from the High Commissioner of the 12th May last.

That Mr. Wingfield was to submit to us the draft—prepared in the Colonial Office and approved by the Foreign Office—of a despatch which it was proposed to send to the High Commissioner, containing the answer of Her Majesty's Government to the letters of the Government of the South African Republic of the 8th April and 7th May last.

That Mr. Wingfield was to draw our attention particularly to the last part of paragraph 12 of the draft despatch, and to the observations upon it in the Foreign Office letter, and to the alternative words suggested in italics by the Colonial Office, and that he was to explain that the main object was to prevent Treaties negotiated by the South African Republic with a Foreign State being submitted to the Legislature of that Foreign State before the Treaty had been submitted for the Queen's approval.

That Mr. Wingfield was to inquire whether we concurred in the draft despatch as amended at the Foreign Office and Colonial Office, or whether we had any further amendments to suggest; and that he was especially to request that we would advise you as to the wording of paragraph 12, with the view of meeting the objections pointed out in the Foreign Office letter of the 27th August, and, at the same time, attaining the object in view.

We have taken the papers into our consideration, and, in obedience to your commands, have the honour to

Report—

That we are of opinion that in paragraph 12 of the draft despatch it would be better simply to adhere to the view that the Treaty must be submitted to Her Majesty as soon as it has been signed by the Plenipotentiairies, without making any alternative proposal.

1897

If, however, an alternative proposal is to be made, we prefer the draft in black ink as last prepared by the Colonial Office. We think that the objections raised by the Foreign Office to the original draft are sound, as the proposal there made would be attended with difficulty in its working.

We do not understand the inverted commas in paragraph 21. We presume the passage included therein is cited from some official document. They do not occur in the Convention of 1884, and, while we agree in their substance, if—as we gather—they are only intended to give the effect of the Convention of London, the inverted commas should be omitted. If they are taken from some other official covering document, the date should be given.

We have made a slight alteration in paragraph 22.

We have, &c.

Annex.

Draft of Despatch from Mr. Chamberlain to High Commissioner Sir A. Milner.

(South Africa. No. .)

Downing Street, September , 1897.

Sir,

HER Majesty's Government have carefully considered the note of the Acting State Secretary of the South African Republic of the 7th May, a translation of which you transmitted with your despatch No. 446 of the 12th May, conveying the reply of the Government of the Republic to my despatches Nos. 92 and 93 of the 6th March of this year.

2. They have learned with much satisfaction that the Volksraad, on the recommendation of the Government of the South African Republic, has repealed the Alien Immigrants Law (No. 30 of 1896), and thus removed a serious ground of complaint on the part of Her Majesty's Government in connection with the London Convention. They note that the reason assigned for its repeal is not that it conflicts with the Convention, but that it has exposed the inhabitants of the neighbouring States and Colonies to inconvenience, an admission which proves that Her Majesty's Government had substantial grounds for objecting to it on its merits, and independently of the fact that its enactment without the assent of Her Majesty's Government constituted a clear breach of the Convention.

3. The Government of the South African Republic decline the proposal of Her Majesty's Government for a friendly discussion between themselves and Her Majesty's Agent at Pretoria, with a view to agreeing upon the terms of a measure which, while securing the objects which they had in view in enacting the law now repealed, might justify Her Majesty's Government in waiving the strict interpretation of Article XIV of the Convention; but they propose to endeavour to come to an agreement with other Governments in South Africa as to the principles of legislation for the purpose of excluding dangerous or detrimental immigrants.

4. Her Majesty's Government consider that a Conference on this subject of the several South African Governments is desirable, but they cannot withdraw their claim to be consulted before any legislation is introduced in the South African Republic derogating from the rights secured by the Convention, to which the other South African Governments are not parties.

5. Her Majesty's Government cannot accept the restricted construction which the Government of the South African Republic seek to give Article XIV of the Convention. That Article contains one of the essential conditions upon which the internal independence of the South African Republic was accorded by Her Majesty; its terms are clear and comprehensive, expressly including all persons, other than natives, without any other qualification than that of conforming to the laws of the Republic; and Her Majesty's Government maintain that, without their consent, the Government of the South African Republic are precluded from imposing any restriction upon the entrance of aliens other than natives. At the same time they have expressed their willingness to consider and confer with the Government of the South African Republic upon any proposed measure for effecting such restriction as may be shown to be necessary for the safety or good government of the Republic.

6. Her Majesty's Government must remind the Government of the South African Republic that when they desire to enact a law excluding Asiatic immigrants they were advised by Dr. Leyds, then State Attorney, that such a law would be contrary to the London Convention.

7. The words in Article 14, which make conformity with the laws of the Republic a condition of the right to enter, travel, and reside therein, do not, in the opinion of Her Majesty's Government, give an implied power to the South African Republic to legislate for the purpose of excluding persons who would otherwise be entitled to the benefit of the Article, by imposing conditions which it is impossible for them to fulfil. Such an implication would enable the Republic to reduce the Article to a nullity.

8. The arguments adduced in the note of the Acting State Secretary, based on the general principles of international law as applied to ordinary Treaties between independent Powers, and on the actual or proposed legislation of other nations (including the United Kingdom), do not, in the view of Her Majesty's Government, apply to the case under consideration, which is not that of a Treaty between two States on an equal footing, but a declaration by the Queen of Great Britain and Ireland of the conditions upon which she accorded the internal independence of the South African Republic subject to her suzerainty, these conditions having been accepted by the Delegates of the South African Republic and subsequently ratified by the Volksraad.

9. Her Majesty's Government maintain that the South African Republic is bound to adhere strictly to the terms of those conditions, and is not entitled to import into them any qualifications based on rights of nations which are not bound by similar obligations arising out of similar circumstances.

10. The Alien Immigrants Law having been repealed, Her Majesty's Government do not think it necessary to discuss further the details of its provisions to which objection was taken by them.

11. The note proceeds to comment on the cases mentioned in my despatch No. 93, in which, in the opinion of Her Majesty's Government, the Government of the South African Republic have failed to observe the requirements of Article IV of the Convention. The views of the Government of the South African Republic upon these cases have also been stated in the letters of the 8th April and the 7th May, translations of which were transmitted with your despatches No. 378 of the 16th April and No. 465 of the 14th May.

12. As regards the Extradition Treaties with the Netherlands and Portugal, the point of difference between the two Governments lies in the meaning to be assigned to the word "completion" in Article IV of the Convention. From the context it is certain that the word is not used in the sense of final conclusion, and Her Majesty's Government must adhere to the view that it refers to the stage at which a Treaty first assumes a complete shape, viz., the signature of the Plenipotentiaries or other negotiators. It has been already pointed out in previous despatches that the submission of a Treaty for the approval of the Queen before it is submitted for confirmation by the Volksraad or by the Legislature of the other Contracting State obviates the risk in the one case of friction with the Volksraad, and in the other of any complaint of a breach of international comity which might arise in the event of Her Majesty declining to approve a Treaty after it had been confirmed by the Volksraad or by the foreign Legislature, and for this reason Her Majesty's Government have attached importance to the maintenance of what they held to be the correct interpretation of Article IV; but they would be prepared in the case of Treaties which require ~~the approval of the Volksraad (a condition which does not apply to Extradition Treaties such as those which are immediately in question) to raise no objection to the Treaty not being submitted for the Queen's approval until after its acceptance by the Volksraad, provided that it is so submitted before being presented to the Legislature of the other Contracting State. This can be secured by obtaining the approval of the Volksraad before the Treaty is signed~~ to be confirmed by the Legislatures of the Contracting States, and which contain or have appended to them a declaration that they will not come into force until they have been either expressly approved by the Queen or submitted to Her Majesty's Government for her approval and not objected to within six months after such submission, to waive their strict rights and be satisfied if such Treaties are submitted to them immediately after having been confirmed by the Legislatures of the Contracting States.

13. The passage cited in the note of the Acting State Secretary from Lord Derby's letter of the 15th February, 1884, does not appear to have any bearing on the question of the stage at which a Treaty is to be submitted for the approval of Her Majesty.

14. In the matter of the accession of the South African Republic to the Geneva Convention, Her Majesty's Government, while they maintain that the London Convention required the Government of the South African Republic to obtain the Queen's approval of such accession, are willing to admit that the language of Article IX of the Geneva Convention may have led the Government of the South African Republic to infer that such approval might be assumed; but they desire to point out that the Geneva Convention was signed in 1864. Twenty years afterwards the London Convention was concluded, under which certain restrictions were laid down in regard to the engagements into which the Republic could enter with foreign States. It would seem, therefore, to follow that the terms of the Geneva Convention in its relation to the South African Republic must be read in conjunction with the London Convention, and with due regard to the limitations imposed on the Republic thereby. With reference, however, to the remark in the Acting State Secretary's letter of the 7th May, inclosed in your despatch No. 465, that the accession of the South African Republic to the Geneva Convention was not in conflict with the interests of Great Britain, it must be observed that the objections taken by Her Majesty's Government have not been to the substance of the Treaties or engagements in question, but to the methods by which the Government of the South African Republic have appeared to them to seek to avoid the provisions of Article IV of the Convention.

15. The Aliens Expulsion Law and the Press Law, which form the next subject of discussion in the note of the Acting State Secretary, were referred to in my despatch No. 93, not as in themselves necessarily conflicting with the London Convention, but as containing provisions which, if applied to foreigners not shown to have failed to conform to the laws of the Republic, might amount to breaches of that Convention.

16. Her Majesty's Government have been glad to learn that the Volksraad has passed a Resolution in favour of an amendment of the former of these laws, which they trust may be of such a nature as to remove the danger of a breach of the Convention. As regards the Press Law, as has been stated in my despatch No. 93, a case has already occurred under it which it appears to justify the objection taken to it.

17. Her Majesty's Government note with satisfaction that the Government of the South African Republic see in the fulfilment of the mutual obligations under the London Convention one of the best guarantees for the maintenance of a mutual understanding and for the promotion of reciprocal confidence. Her Majesty's Government have uniformly fulfilled these obligations on their part, and they must strongly protest against what appears to be an implication in the note under consideration that the incursion of Dr. Jameson can be considered as either a breach of the Convention by Her Majesty's Government or a grievance against them. That incursion was the act of private individuals unauthorized by Her Majesty's Government, and was repudiated by them immediately it became known. The immense importance to the Government of the South African Republic of that repudiation, and of the Proclamation issued by the High Commissioner under instructions from Her Majesty's Government, is recognized throughout South Africa.

18. Her Majesty's Government maintain strongly that since the Convention of 1881 there has never been any breach or even any allegation of a breach on their part of that or the subsequent Convention, and, as the subject has been raised by the implied accusation contained in the note under consideration, Her Majesty's Government feel constrained to contrast their loyal action in the case of the Jameson raid with the cases in which they have had cause to complain that the Government of the South African Republic failed to interfere with, if they did not countenance, invasions of the adjacent territories by its burghers in violation of the Convention, and they feel bound to remind the Government of the Republic that in one of these cases Her Majesty's Government were compelled to maintain their rights by an armed expedition at the cost of about 1,000,000*l*., for which no compensation has ever been received by them.

19. Finally, the Government of the South African Republic propose that all points in dispute between Her Majesty's Government and themselves relating to the Convention should be referred to arbitration, the Arbitrator to be nominated by the President of the Swiss Republic.

20. In making this proposal the Government of the South African Republic appear to have overlooked the distinction between the Conventions of 1881 and 1884 and an ordinary Treaty between two independent Powers, questions arising upon which may properly be the subject of arbitration.

21. By the Pretoria Convention of 1881 Her Majesty, as Sovereign of the Transvaal territory, accorded to the inhabitants of that territory complete self-government, subject to the suzerainty of Her Majesty, her heirs, and successors, upon certain terms and conditions, and subject to certain reservations and limitations set forth in thirty-three Articles, and by the London Convention of 1884 Her Majesty, "while maintaining the preamble of the earlier instrument, directed and declared that certain other Articles embodied therein should be substituted for the Articles embodied in the Convention of 1881." The Articles of the Convention of 1881 were accepted by the Volksraad of the Transvaal State, and those of the Convention of 1884 by the Volksraad of the South African Republic.

22. Under these Conventions, therefore, Her Majesty holds towards the South African Republic the relation of a Suzerain who has accorded to the people of that Republic self-government, subject to her suzerainty, upon certain conditions, and it would be incompatible with ~~her honour and dignity as the Suzerain~~ that position to submit to arbitration the construction of the conditions on which she accorded self-government to the Republic.

23. One of the main objects which Her Majesty's Government had in view in retaining the suzerainty under the Conventions was the prevention of the interference of any foreign Power between Her Majesty and the South African Republic, a matter which they then held, and which Her Majesty's present Government hold, to be essential to British interests, and this object would be defeated by the course now proposed.

24. The clear intention of Her Majesty's Government at the time of the London Convention, that questions in relation to it should not be submitted to arbitration, is shown by the fact that when the Delegates of the South African Republic, in the negotiations which preceded that Convention, submitted to Her Majesty's Government in the first instance (in a letter of the 26th November, 1883, which will be found on p. 9 of the Parliamentary Paper, C. 3947 of 1884) the draft of a Treaty or Convention containing an arbitration clause, they were informed by the Earl of Derby that it was neither in form nor in substance such as Her Majesty's Government could adopt.

25. The Government of the South African Republic put forward as a precedent for the proposed arbitration the provision in Article I of the London Convention for the settlement of the details of the line to be fixed as the boundary of the Republic; but there can be no comparison between the fixing of the exact details, which could not be ascertained before the signature of the Convention, of a boundary which had been agreed upon in principle and the construction of the conditions laid down in the Convention itself.

26. The other case relied on as a precedent is one in which Her Majesty's Government agreed to submit to the arbitration of the Chief Justice of the Orange Free State a question arising out of the construction of a Law which had been passed by the Volksraad. It is essential, however, to the proper conception of this transaction to point out that this Law had only been passed by the Volksraad on the prior and voluntary assurance of Her Majesty's Government that Her Majesty would, for the occasion, waive the rights she had reserved to herself under the Convention in respect of the Law proposed; and, as a matter of fact, the construction of the Law and not of the Convention (though it had some bearing on the question in dispute) was the subject of arbitration.

27. Her Majesty's Government, therefore, for the foregoing reasons, cannot consent to submit questions as to the infringement of the Convention to the arbitration of any foreign State or of the nominee of any foreign State.

28. I request that you will instruct Her Majesty's Agent at Pretoria to communicate a copy of this despatch to the Government of the South African Republic.

cation which, by the second of the two Declarations, is to be drawn between Say on the Niger and Barruwa on Lake Tchad.

The despatches and other documents which have been written on the subject, and the several meanings which it has been sought to attach to the Declaration regarding the Say-Barruwa line, are discussed in the inclosed Memorandum (Document A).

I have the honour to request you to take these papers into your consideration, and to favour Lord Salisbury, at your earliest convenience, with your opinion on the following points:—

1. Does the Declaration of the 5th August, 1890, assure to Great Britain all that lies east of a line drawn from Say due south to meet the coast, or to the point where such line drawn southward would meet some other and intermediate boundary-line recognized by Great Britain and France? or

2. Does the Declaration in question assure to Great Britain only such territory as lies east of the Niger? and

3. I have the honour to request you to favour his Lordship with any observations on the meaning of the Declaration generally.

Other interpretations of the Declarations besides the two in regard to which your opinion is now more especially sought have at various times been put forward. It would be difficult to eliminate from the papers and considerations submitted to you the documents and portions of documents relating to these other interpretations, and they will doubtless be of use to you in advising his Lordship generally on the meaning of the Declaration.

It will, moreover, be seen that the most important statements by Her Majesty's Government have been made in denial of the several interpretations put forward by France, and that they would not be intelligible without full consideration of the opinions which they were intended to refute.

Report.

In our opinion, the Declaration of the 5th August, 1890, assures to Great Britain the territory to the south of the Say-Barruwa line only so far as it lies to the east of the Niger.

This appears to us to be the effect of the second Article of the Declaration, taken as a whole.

The first clause of that Article, if it stood alone, would, in our opinion, assure to Great Britain the whole of the territories to the south of the Say-Barruwa line, whether to the west or the east of the Niger. It seems to us impossible to construe this Article as unilateral only. By necessary implication it recognizes the rights of Great Britain to the south of the Say-Barruwa line as against the French, from whatever direction they might advance, and it is not confined to the Kingdom of Sokoto.

As regards the territory to the east of the Niger, the Article is unqualified, and, indeed, the provision at the end of the Article as to the determination of the respective spheres of influence in the region which extends to the west and south of the Middle and Upper Niger shows, in our opinion, that the delimitation to the east of the Niger was considered as settled by the Say-Barruwa line.

But as regards the territory to the west of the Niger, this provision at the end of the second Article appears to us to show that no definite arrangement had been arrived at. The Commissioners are to determine the spheres of influence of the two countries in the region which extends to the west and the south of the Middle and Upper Niger. Although the extent of the Middle Niger is perhaps not capable of very exact geographical definition, it appears impossible to contend that the Middle Niger does not extend to a point far below Say. Apparently, it extends to a point somewhere about Rabba.

The boundary between French Dahomey and the British territory of Lagos had been delimited by the fourth Article of the Arrangement of the 10th August, 1889, from the coast as far as the ninth degree of north latitude, but no further.

We do not see that it could be successfully contended that the Commissioners, under the last clause of the second Article, are not at liberty to include in the area to be delimited by them the territory between the Middle Niger and a line drawn to Say from the point on the ninth degree of north latitude marking the boundary between French Dahomey and the British territory to the east.

This is inconsistent with the idea that the Declaration treats as British territory what is included in the triangle in question.

The rights of the two countries to the territory in this triangle must be determined by other considerations. We do not think that the effect of the Declaration, taken as a whole, is to recognize British influence as paramount in the district between the Middle Niger and a line drawn southward from Say.

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Treaties made by Royal Niger Company with native Chiefs.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, December 4, 1897.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit to you the papers noted on the accompanying list, which relate to a point raised by the French Minister for Foreign Affairs during the progress of the Niger negotiations, which, as you will doubtless be aware, are now proceeding at Paris.

M. Hanotaux, in the course of conversation with Her Majesty's Ambassador, adverted to certain objections which he said he might have occasion to raise as to the validity of the various Treaties made from time to time in West Africa by the agents of the Royal Niger Company on the ground of their having been concluded by persons not in the direct employment of Her Majesty's Government, but by the agents of a trading Company.

This conversation is recorded in Sir E. Monson's despatch No. 330, Africa, of the 22nd ultimo (Paper A).

M. Hanotaux was, as will be seen, informed, in reply, that Her Majesty's Government could admit no discussion on this point, and nothing more has been said with regard to it; but in view of the probability of the point being again raised, it is thought desirable that Her Majesty's Ambassador should be furnished in anticipation with a full answer to it from a legal point of view.

The following appear to be the most important facts bearing on the case in so far as they can be stated within a brief compass:—

By Article XXX of the Act of Berlin (Paper B), Great Britain undertook in 1885 to apply the principle of freedom of navigation on so much of the waters of the Niger, its affluents, branches, and outlets as were or might be under her sovereignty or protection.

Then, as now, the only jurisdiction exercised by this country in those parts was exercised solely through the Company, the status of which, as representing the Protecting Power, may thus be said to have been recognized implicitly, if not explicitly, by the European Powers.

In 1886 a Royal Charter was granted to the Company (Paper C).

The Charter recognized various acts of cession, as specified in a Schedule annexed thereto, by which certain Kings and Chiefs had ceded territories or rights to the Company, while by Article 12 power was given to the Company, subject to the approval of the Secretary of State, to acquire any rights, interests, authorities, or powers of any kind or nature whatever in, over, or affecting other territories, lands, or property in the region aforesaid, and to hold, use, enjoy, and exercise the same for the purposes of the Company and on the terms of the Charter.

The Charter thus not only recognized such Treaties as had already been made by the Company at the time of its being granted, but gave the fullest authority for the conclusion of such others as the Company might deem desirable.

The Charter appears to establish in the clearest manner that the Company is not solely a trading Company, as contended by M. Hanotaux.

The Treaties more immediately under consideration when M. Hanotaux made the above-mentioned observation to Sir E. Monson were those negotiated by Major Lugard, who acted under the instructions from the Royal Niger Company, copy of which is inclosed (Paper D).

The following is the form of approval which he attached to these Treaties:—

> "I, Captain Lugard, for and on behalf of the Company, do hereby approve and accept the above Treaty, and hereby affix my hand.
>
> (Signed) "F. D. LUGARD, Captain,
> "Commanding Borgu Expedition."

It appears, however, to Lord Salisbury that the validity of the Treaties, from the international point of view, is derived, not so much from the Powers held by the negotiator from the Company, as from the Treaties, when concluded, being recognized first by the Company and then by Her Majesty's Government.

In 1887 a Notification (Paper E) was published in the "London Gazette" proclaiming a British Protectorate over the "Niger districts," which it defined as consisting, in the first place, of "the territories on the line of coast between the British Protectorate of Lagos and the right or western river bank of the mouth of the Rio del Rey;" and, secondly, of "all territories in the basin of the Niger and its affluents" which were or might be, for the time being subject to "the Government of the National African Company (Limited) (now called the Royal Niger Company), in accordance with the provisions of the Charter of the said Company, dated the 10th July, 1886."

The British Protectorate in the Niger districts is, therefore, extended, pari passu, with the extension of the territories under the Government of the Company.

Since the date of the above-mentioned Notice a large number of Treaties have been concluded by the Company, by whom they have been regularly submitted for the approval of Her Majesty's Government.

In 1894, negotiations commenced between M. Hanotaux, on the part of France, and Mr. Phipps, acting for this country, with a view to arriving at a settlement of various outstanding West African questions. No definite result was achieved, but during the course of the negotiations the Treaties concluded by the Niger Company frequently formed the subject of discussion, and though repeatedly called in question by the French Commissioners as being invalid in form or subsequent in date to those concluded by French officials, these Treaties were never challenged on the ground of their having been made by agents of the Company as distinguished from Agents directly accredited by Her Majesty's Government.

The negotiations were resumed in 1896, but with a like abortive result. No objection, however, was raised by the French Government to the Niger Company's Treaties on the last-mentioned ground.

It appears to Lord Salisbury that the facts as set forth above would be sufficient to establish that, in the conclusion of their Treaties, the agents of the Niger Company were to all intents and purposes Agents of Her Majesty's Government, and that the Treaties so concluded are as valid from the point of view of bringing the territories they affect under British protection as though they had been concluded by Agents directly accredited by Her Majesty's Government.

I have the honour to request you to take the accompanying papers into your consideration, and to favour his Lordship with your opinion as to the reply that should be made to the contention put forward by M. Hanotaux, as recorded in the above-mentioned despatch (Paper A) from Sir E. Monson, and also with any observations which you may consider will be useful to his Lordship in instructing Her Majesty's Ambassador or Her Majesty's Representatives on the Niger Commission as to the language they should use in the event of this contention being again brought forward.

Gentlemen,

With reference to my letter of the 4th instant on the question of the validity of Treaties made with native African Rulers by the Agents of the Royal Niger Company, I have the honour, by the direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit to you the accompanying papers,* which relate to a further question connected with these Treaties, which is intimately allied with that already before you, namely, whether, and, if so, in what manner, the interest of the Company in such Treaties can be conveyed to Her Majesty's Government in the event of the Company's Charter being revoked.

The facts which it is desired specially to bring to your notice in regard to this matter are, briefly, as follows:—

The National African Company (Limited) was incorporated in 1882 under "The Companies Acts, 1862 to 1880."

The Memorandum of Association declared the objects of the Company to be (among others) "to acquire and hold any Charters, Acts of Parliament, privileges, monopolies, patents, or other rights or powers from the British Government or any potentate or local or other authority."

The Company entered into Treaties with potentates and other local authorities.

In July 1886 a Royal Charter was granted to the Company, which thereupon, with the sanction of the Secretary of State, changed its name to the Royal Niger Company, Chartered and Limited.

Under powers given or confirmed by the Charter, the Company have since entered into Treaties with potentates and local authorities.

Of these Treaties, whether made before or after the grant of the Charter, some are made by and with the Company (Forms 5, 7, 8), and the remainder by and with the Company, its heirs, administrators, or assigns (Forms 1, 2, 3, 4, 6, 9, 10).

Her Majesty's Government are now engaged in negotiations with the Company, which may result in the revocation of the Charter, and I have the honour to request you to take into consideration the papers herewith transmitted to you, and also those which accompanied my above-mentioned letter of the 4th instant, and to ask you to favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion.

1. Will the said Treaties or any of them lapse on the revocation of the Charter?

2. If not, will the Treaty rights remain in the Company?

3.—(a.) Can the Company, before the revocation of the Charter, transfer those rights to their heirs, administrators, or assigns, so that such rights shall remain in them after the revocation? and (β.) Can the Company constitute Her Majesty's Government their heirs, administrators, or assigns?

4. Would such transfer require the assent of the potentate or local authority with whom the Treaty was made?

5. In the possible alternative that the present Charter will not be revoked, but will be modified by a Supplementary Charter, taking over from the Company its rights of administration and leaving to it its rights as a commercial Company, would the answers to the foregoing questions be modified, and if so, in what respect?

The terms of the Memorandum of Association of the National African Company are recited in the Charter (inclosed in my letter of the 4th instant).

Report.

The Royal Niger Company is not a mere trading Company, but has also power to acquire, retain, and govern territory. It resembles the East India Company, the position of which was explained by Chief Justice Tindal in the case of Gibson v. East India Company, 5 Bingham, New Cases (Common Pleas Reports), p. 273.

The late Mr. Hall, in his book upon international law (4th Edition, note on pp. 133, 134), takes the view that territory acquired by the Royal Niger Company is part of British dominions, and in the note on p. 110 of the same work he treats as obvious the proposition that the acts of such a Company as the East African Company are to be classed in point of competence with those of commissioned Agents of the State.

It appears to us that these views are correct. The Royal Niger Company must be regarded as a British subject, and it has acquired territory and a Charter from the British Crown.

Chief Justice Tindal, in the case already cited, at p. 272, said that the principle that all conquests made by subjects must belong to the Crown is a general principle pervading the law both of this and other States.

The same rule must, in our opinion, apply to the case of territory ceded or acquired by Treaty, and it appears to us to be quite clear that Treaties granted to the Niger Company are as effective for the purpose of establishing British rights as if they had been granted to a commissioned officer of the Crown.

Subject, of course, to the rights of the Company under the Charter, we have no doubt that, as a matter of British Constitutional Law, the Crown is entitled to assume to itself the benefit of these Treaties, just as all acquisitions made by the East India Company were regarded as being at the disposal of the nation.

We do not think that the Company has any general right to assign these Treaties. We attach no importance to the variation in the terms of the Treaties. In many cases they are expressed to be made with the Company alone, or with the Company and its administrators, which means the same thing. Even in cases where the Treaty was made with the Company and its asssigns, we do not think that this conferred a general power of assignment upon the Company, as this would be inconsistent with the terms of the Charter, which conferred upon the Company personally the right to acquire and administer territory, and with the nature of the transaction embodied in the Treaty with the native Chief.

The title of the Crown to these Treaty rights depends not on any power of assignment given to the Company by the terms of the Treaty, but on the paramount rights of the Crown when a British subject has acquired territory abroad.

We do not think that any general answer can be given to the question whether any fresh consent by the African Chief or other authority should be regarded as necessary to confer on the Crown a valid title as against him. The answer might depend upon that which took place when the Treaty was signed.

In view of the questions which we understand France has raised, or may raise, as to the validity and effect of these Treaties, and the circumstances under which they were made, it is in our opinion very undesirable to take any course which might give the French any apparent ground for disputing the continued validity of these Treaties.

If the Company were dissolved or reduced to the position of a mere trading Corporation, it might be contended by the French Government that the Treaty rights lapsed, that they had been conferred upon the Company personally, and that when the Company came to an end or ceased itself to administer these rights, the Chief was in the same position as if no Treaty had been entered into.

In any event, if any action is taken it should, in our opinion, be in the direction of control by Imperial Officers over the administration by the Company of its territory.

By arrangement with the Company the Government may acquire from it such rights in land as are necessary for Government purposes.

The above Report appears to us to answer all the questions submitted to us, and we have only to add that we think it very undesirable that any change in the position of the Company, such as is suggested, should be made while the questions now pending with the French are unsettled.

Foreign Office, January 11, 1897.

Gentlemen,

Expulsion of Mr. Ben Tillett from Antwerp.

I HAVE the honour, by the direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to inform you that representations, based on the opinions expressed in your Report of the 3rd November, were made by Her Majesty's Minister at Brussels to the Belgian Government on the subject of the manner in which the expulsion of Mr. Ben Tillett from Antwerp was carried out in August last.

L.O.R. 1896 (Conf. 6918), p. 20.

I am now to transmit to you a despatch which has been received from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Brussels containing the reply of the Belgian Government, and other despatches from Mr. Adam forwarding documents relative thereto.

The Belgian Government maintain that the circumstances attending the arrest and expulsion of Mr. Tillett were fully justified, and they decline to recognize that there was anything in the treatment accorded to him which could afford just ground for complaint.

Lord Salisbury will be glad to learn whether, after due consideration of the arguments advanced and of the precedents quoted by M. de Favereau in support of the action of the Belgian Government, you are disposed in any way to modify the opinions formulated by you in answer to his Lordship's previous reference on the subject; and whether, in your opinion, Her Majesty's Representative at Brussels should be instructed to make any further, and if so what, representations on behalf of Mr. Tillett.

Copies of the letter of reference addressed to you from this Department on the 26th October last in connection with this case, and of your Report, dated the 3rd November last, in reply thereto, are inclosed herewith.

The inclosures which accompanied the reference of the 26th October, and which are rather numerous and bulky, are also annexed in a separate packet, in case you should desire again to refer to them.

Report.

In our opinion the arguments advanced, and the precedents quoted by M. Favereau, are not such as to require any modification of the opinion already given by us.

The right of the Belgian Government to expel Mr. Tillett was never disputed, nor has it ever been asserted that detention, reasonably necessary for securing expulsion, would be unjustifiable.

The Belgian Government appear to contend that the treatment of foreigners in Belgium is a matter entirely in the discretion of the Government, and that they may not only be expelled, but subjected to arbitrary imprisonment.

It appears to us that Her Majesty's Government ought not to acquiesce in the position thus asserted.

If the powers of the Belgian Government are used in such a way as to inflict unnecessary and unjustifiable hardship upon a foreigner, the Government of his country are justified in demanding redress. It appears to us that in the present case these powers were so exercised, and that Her Majesty's Government should maintain the position already taken up.

How far further representations should be pushed is a question of policy. The nature of Mr. Tillett's mission to Belgium was probably such as to deprive him of sympathy on the part of a great many people in Belgium as well as in this country; but he was, in our opinion, undoubtedly treated with unnecessary harshness.

The claim so peremptorily put forward by the Belgian Government involves principles which are, in our opinion, of great importance, and we think that Her Majesty's Government should at least again put on record the fact that they decline to admit them.

If it could be arranged, the claim of Mr. Tillett to redress is one which might well be referred to the arbitration and decision of some independent jurist of eminence.

Gentlemen,

Draft Convention with Belgium respecting arrest, &c., of Mr. Ben Tillett.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to inform you that further representations in the sense of your opinion of the 21st January last were addressed to the Belgian Government on the subject of the arrest and imprisonment of Mr. Ben Tillett, and that, in the event of the Belgian Government being unable to fall in with the views of Her Majesty's Government, it was proposed to refer the question to the arbitration of some independent jurist of eminence. The Belgian Government replied by accepting the suggestion of arbitration.

A draft Convention between Great Britain and Belgium "for submitting to arbitration a claim for compensation arising out of Mr. Tillett's arrest and imprisonment in Belgium" has accordingly been prepared, and is transmitted herewith.

I have the honour to request that Lord Salisbury may be favoured with your opinion as to the terms of the proposed Agreement, and with any general observations which you may have to offer on the subject.

Annex.

Draft Agreement between Great Britain and Belgium.

WHEREAS on the 21st day of August, 1896, Mr. Ben Tillett, a British subject, was arrested at Antwerp, in pursuance of orders issued by the Belgian Minister of Justice, was detained, and was subsequently expelled from the country;

Whereas it is alleged by the aforesaid Mr. Ben Tillett that the said detention occasioned to him expense and loss of time, that it was accompanied with circumstances of unjustifiable indignity and hardship, and that his health has suffered in consequence of the treatment to which he was subjected;

Whereas Her Majesty's Government, while not contesting the right of the Government of Belgium to expel Mr. Tillett, are nevertheless of opinion that his arrest and detention, and the various circumstances of hardship by which they were attended, were altogether in excess of anything that could be justified as incidental to the right of expulsion, and that, consequently, some expression of regret, as well as some tangible compensation is due by the Belgian Government to Mr. Tillett;

And whereas the Belgian Government, on their part, are unable to share this opinion:

Now, therefore the Governments of Her Britannic Majesty and of the King of the Belgians, being desirous that the difference of opinion between them should be settled in a just and equitable manner, have agreed that the aforesaid difference shall be submitted to the examination and decision of an Arbitrator.

Article 1. The Governments of Her Britannic Majesty and of His Majesty the King of the Belgians agree to invite his Excellency the President of the French Republic to name a French Jurist to act as Arbitrator in the matter aforesaid.

Art. 2. It shall be the duty of the Arbitrator to consider whether the claim for a pecuniary indemnity, advanced by Her Majesty's Government on behalf of Mr. Tillett, is well founded, and if so, to determine the amount of such indemnity

Art. 3. Her Majesty's Government shall forward to the Arbitrator, through the diplomatic channel, within a period of one month after the signature of the present Agreement, a Memorandum in support of their claim on behalf of Mr. Ben Tillett, and shall at the same time furnish a copy thereof to the Belgian Government.

Within a period of one month after receiving such copy the Belgian Government shall forward to the said Arbitrator a Counter-Memorandum, of which they shall at the same time furnish a copy to Her Majesty's Government.

Within a period of three weeks after receipt of this copy Her Majesty's Government may, if they think it expedient, forward to the Arbitrator a reply, of which they shall, at the same time, furnish a copy to the Belgian Government.

Art. 4. After the exchange of these Memoranda no communication, either written or verbal, shall be made to the Arbitrator unless the latter should address himself to the Parties to this Agreement in order to obtain from them, or from one of them, further information in writing.

The Party which may give such information shall immediately furnish a copy thereof to the other Party, and the latter may, if they think well, within a month after the receipt of such copy, communicate in writing to the Arbitrator any observations to which it may give rise. These observations shall likewise be concurrently furnished, in copy, to the other Party.

The Arbitrator may, if he thinks fit, require evidence to be laid before him, in such manner as he may direct, on any point on which the Parties are in conflict.

Art. 5. The Arbitrator shall, thereafter, give his Award as soon as possible, and shall likewise determine the amount of necessary costs incident to the arbitration, and settle which of the Parties shall defray them. These costs, the amount of which it is clearly understood shall be limited as much as possible, may be adjudged to either Party in whole or in part.

Art. 6. The High Contracting Parties mutually engage to accept as final the decision pronounced by the Arbitrator within the limits of the present Agreement, and to submit to it unreservedly.

Art. 7. If at any time before the case be decided the Arbitrator should cease to act as such, from other than temporary causes, his Excellency the President of the French Republic shall be requested to appoint a substitute to proceed with the arbitration in his stead.

No. 9.

[September 28, 1897.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, September 13, 1897.

Gentlemen,

Draft Agreement with Belgium as to Arbitration respecting arrest, &c., of Mr. Ben Tillett.

I HAVE the honour, by the direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit to you further documents respecting the draft Agreement between Great Britain and Belgium referring to arbitration the questions arising from the arrest and detention of Mr. Ben Tillett on the occasion of his expulsion from Antwerp in August 1896.

The British draft Agreement, as corrected in accordance with your Report of the 18th June, was submitted by Her Majesty's Minister at Brussels to M. de Favereau, the Belgian Minister for Foreign Affairs; and Sir F. Plunkett's despatch No. 125, Commercial, of the 14th August (Paper A) contains M. de Favereau's counter-draft and a copy of a note from his Excellency explaining the views of the Belgian Government on the terms of the Agreement. For facility of comparison the British draft Agreement and the Belgian counter-draft have been printed in parallel columns, and the amendments and additions made in the latter are marked in red ink.

The first point in the counter-draft to which I am to call your attention is the addition in the preamble of the substance of the case of the Belgian Government; and I am to request your particular consideration of the interpretation which M. de Favereau in the latter portion of his note to Sir F. Plunkett of the 13th August (inclosure in Paper A) desires to put in the language employed in that part of the preamble in which the attitude of the British Government is set forth.

M. de Favereau draws attention to the words "son arrestation et sa détention ainsi que certaines circonstances rigoureuses dont elles ont été entourées, excèdent absolument tout ce qui peut être justifié comme une conséquence du droit d'expulsion . . . ." and he states that it would appear from this language that the fact itself of the arrest and detention of Mr. Ben Tillett, apart from the circumstances attending them, is considered by the British Government as excessive, and going beyond the powers incidental to the right of expulsion.

His Excellency maintains that the Belgian Government have never admitted that their sovereign rights in the matter of the expulsion of foreigners could be so questioned, and he proceeds to quote, in support of his attitude, the words used by Sir F. Plunkett, and taken from your Report of the 21st January, "nor has it ever been asserted that detention reasonably necessary for securing expulsion would be unjustifiable."

M. de Favereau also informed Sir F. Plunkett in conversation (see Paper A), that the Belgian Government cannot admit any doubt as to their sovereign right to arrest and detain a person whom they have reason to expel, and that what they have agreed to submit to arbitration in the present case is only whether any excessive hardship or other improper treatment attended the arrest and detention of Mr. Ben Tillett such as to justify compensation.

It might be understood from the above that the Belgian Government would consider that any question as to the arrest and detention of Mr. Ben Tillett—apart from the circumstances attending them—being in excess of anything which could be justified as incidental to the right of expulsion would be beyond the cognizance of the Arbitrator, and his Lordship would be glad to be favoured with your view as to how far this limitation of the case to be decided by the Arbitrator is compatible with the opinions expressed by you in your Reports of the 3rd November, 1896, and the 21st January, 1897, wherein considerable emphasis is laid on the doubtful necessity of Mr. Tillett's arrest, and the unjustifiable duration of the detention to which he was subjected.

The second point to which I am to call your attention, is the addition which has been made by M. de Favereau to Article 3, and which gives to the Belgian Government, as defendants in the case, the right to make the final rejoinder. Procedure analogous to this, was followed in the "Costa Rica Packet" and Antioquia Railway Arbitration cases, and the point appears to Lord Salisbury one that may justly be conceded to the Belgian Government.

Article 8, dealing with the payment of the indemnity, if any, is altered to meet the necessities of the Belgian Constitution. Lord Salisbury proposes to insert a provision binding the Belgian Government to call upon the Chambers, on the first possible occasion, to vote the money in the event of an Award unfavourable to the Belgian Government.

The other alterations in the preamble are a matter of form, and may, in Lord Salisbury's opinion, be accepted.

The substitution of "étranger" for "French" in Article 1, seems an improvement.

The omission in the Belgian text of the words "at the same time," in Article 3, is probably due to a clerical error which should be rectified.

In Article 5, the word "thereafter" appears superflous, and might be omitted.

I am to request that you will take these papers into your consideration, and favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion—

1. As to whether the reserve made by M. de Favereau with regard to the interpretation of the wording of the preamble, can be accepted by Her Majesty's Government, or, if not, whether it would meet the case to alter the portion of the preamble in question so that it should read as follows: whereas Her Majesty's Government, while not contesting the right of the Government of Belgium to expel Mr. Tillett, nor asserting that detention reasonably necessary for securing expulsion would be unjustifiable, are nevertheless of opinion that the circumstances of his arrest and detention, and the hardships by which they were attended, were altogether in excess of anything that could be justified as incidental to the right of expulsion, &c.

2. Whether there is any objection to the amended form of Article 3 giving right of final rejoinder to the Belgian Government.

Lord Salisbury will also be glad to receive any observations you may have to make on the other alterations made by the Belgian Government in the draft Agreement, and on the Belgian draft Agreement as a whole.

I have, &c.

Report.

The reserve made by M. de Favereau as to the wording of the preamble ought not, in our opinion, to be accepted by Her Majesty's Government. The alteration proposed may properly be adopted, inserting after the words "are nevertheless of opinion," the following additional words, "that his arrest and detention were unnecessary, and." We have altered the draft accordingly.

There is, in our opinion, no objection to the amended form of Article 3 giving the right of final rejoinder to the Belgian Government.

The Belgian Government should contract to pay the amount of the Award, if any, to Her Majesty's Government; the date of payment to be within one month after the Chambers have voted the money.

We have no further observations to make.

British Draft Agreement between Great Britain and Belgium.

WHEREAS on the 21st day of August, 1896, Mr. Ben Tillett, a British subject, was arrested at Antwerp, in pursuance of orders issued by the Belgian Minister of Justice, was detained, and was subsequently expelled from the country;

Whereas it is alleged by the aforesaid Mr. Ben Tillett that the said detention occasioned to him expense and loss of time, that it was accompanied with circumstances of unjustifiable indignity and hardship, and that his health has suffered in consequence of the treatment to which he was subjected;

Whereas Her Majesty's Government, while not contesting the right of the Government of Belgium to expel Mr. Tillett, nor asserting that detention reasonably necessary for securing expulsion would be unjustifiable, are nevertheless of opinion that his arrest and detention ~~and~~ were unnecessary, and that the various circumstances of hardship by which they were attended, were altogether in excess of anything that could be justified as incidental to the right of expulsion; and that, consequently, some expression of regret, as well as some tangible compensation, is due by the Belgian Government to Mr. Tillett; and whereas the Belgian Government, on their part, are unable to share this opinion:

Gentlemen,

Arbitration Agreement with Belgium in Ben Tillett Case.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, a despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Brussels,* transmitting a note from the Belgian Minister for Foreign Affairs, assenting to the form of the preamble of the Agreement for arbitration in the Ben Tillett case, which was suggested in your Report of the 28th September last.

The French version given by M. de Favereau in his note, it is thought, is slightly more emphatic in its wording than the English text, but his Lordship is, at the same time, disposed to think that Mr. Ben Tillett's interests will not be in any appreciable way prejudiced or damnified by its acceptance.

Lord Salisbury proposes, therefore, unless you see any objection to so doing, to accept the wording suggested by the Belgian Government without demur.

I have, &c.

Gentlemen,

Interference of Icelandic authorities with British trawlers.

I COMMUNICATED to the Board of Trade, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, your Report of the 28th December last, containing observations on the legal aspects of the recent interference of the Icelandic authorities with British trawlers in waters adjacent to the coasts of Iceland.

L.O.R. 1896 (Conf. 6918), p. 38.

I have now the honour to inclose a copy of a letter from the Board, recording their views and the construction which they place upon that Report; and I am to request that you will be so good as to take their communication into your further consideration, and to favour Lord Salisbury with any general criticisms or observations which you may be disposed to offer thereupon.

I have, &c.
(Signed) GEORGE N. CURZON.

Report.

The summing up in the letter from the Board of Trade, of what they understand to be the effect of our opinion, appears to rest on the assumption that that opinion was directed to some point other than the questions specifically asked in the letter of the 10th December, 1896, from the Foreign Office, in reply to which we expressed our opinion.

We are unable to accept that summing up as a correct statement of our opinion. We were not asked to advise, and did not advise, on the points as to the Icelandic Law which are raised by the Board of Trade.

There is, of course, nothing in the opinion given by us which implies that the Icelandic authorities would be justified in enacting a law which goes so far as to forbid the mere innocent, and possibly unintentional, presence of British trawlers in territorial waters.

We based our opinion upon the view that there is no obligation of international law upon any State to permit the use of its ports by foreign vessels. The criticisms of the Board of Trade upon that opinion appear to rest, to some extent at all events, upon the assumption that there is such an obligation. Upon this point we refer to our former Report.

Of course, the refusal, without reason, to permit access to any port would be a breach of international comity, but such a refusal appeared to us to be justified by the facts disclosed in the papers then laid before us. It does not appear to us to be a tenable proposition that the fact that the trawling outside the territorial waters is not illegal by international law makes a refusal of access by trawlers to ports a breach of the comity of nations. Such a refusal may by justified if it be the case that the trawling off the coast of Iceland, though outside the territorial waters, is attended with the consequences to the Icelandic fishermen which were described in the papers previously before us.

Board of Trade to Foreign Office.

Board of Trade, February 11, 1897.

Sir,

I AM directed by the Board of Trade to acknowledge the receipt of copy of the Report from Her Majesty's Attorney-General and the Solicitor-General containing their observations upon the legal aspect of the recent interference of the Icelandic authorities with British trawlers in waters adjacent to the coast of Iceland.

The assistance of the Law Officers was desired in order to ascertain whether the Icelandic Act, which formed the ground of such interference, amounted in itself to an infringement of international law or international comity in declaring it to be a criminal offence for a vessel to be found within the territorial waters of Iceland having a trawl on board, although not actually engaged in fishing at the time.

With a view to elicit the views of the Law Officers upon that question, they were requested to advise whether it is a matter of international obligation either of international law or international comity and right conduct—

1. To permit the innocent passage of merchant-vessels through the territorial waters of a State for the purpose of navigation;
2. To permit commercial intercourse with another State;
3. To permit the presence of trawlers within the territorial waters when not fishing or intending to fish or to trade.

Having regard to the fact that the Icelandic Law is directed against the presence of trawlers in territorial waters, the substance of these questions may be conveniently stated as follows:—

Whether it is a matter of international obligation—

1. To permit the presence of trawlers in territorial waters for innocent passage through them;
2. To permit their presence there for the purpose of trading, apparently described by the Law Officers as making the Icelandic ports a "base of operations" for trawling;
3. To permit their presence there when without intention to trade or to fish.

The Board of Trade note that, with respect to the first question, the opinion of the Law Officers is in accordance with the views expressed by the Board of Trade in their letter of the 1st October last, viz., that it is an accepted principle of international law that the innocent passage of merchant-vessels for the purposes of navigation should be permitted through territorial waters.

It is clear and admitted on all hands that no objection can be reasonably urged against a law requiring that trawlers passing through territorial waters should have their trawls properly stowed, and not ready to be shot. It follows that the Icelandic Act, which is not limited to the imposition of "reasonable restrictions" of this kind, but forbids the passage of trawlers altogether, is an infringement of the "accepted principle of international law" to which the Law Officers refer.

In dealing with the second question, the Board of Trade observe that the Law Officers further concur with them in the view that it would be a violation of international comity and of right conduct as between civilized States to forbid commercial intercourse without some adequate reason.

Reading the Law Officers' answer to the third question, in combination with, and by the light of, their answer to the second question, the Board of Trade understand it to mean that, although a State may lawfully take measures of precaution "to prevent the right of access and intercourse from being used to its injury," still, apart from the question of injury, it is not in accordance with international comity to forbid the presence of trawlers within territorial waters even when intending to trade, and à fortiori, therefore, when (in terms of the third question put to the Law Officers) they are present in those waters without intending to trade. Notwithstanding the admitted right of trawlers in ordinary circumstances to resort to the territorial waters of a foreign State, the Law Officers are understood to advise that the injury in the present case, in view of which the Althing have declared it to be a punishable offence for a trawler to be found within territorial waters, although not fishing at the time, is such as to justify a refusal of commercial intercourse, and the enforcement of that refusal by means of penalties.

The Law Officers, however, base this opinion upon the assumption that the injury caused by the operations of the trawlers outside territorial waters is so great that they are "making a prosecution of the line fishery by the Icelanders impossible, and destroying the fishery beds," an assumption to which the Board of Trade are not prepared wholly to assent. But even if the case could be put so high, the Law Officers fully concede the right of the trawlers to prosecute their industry outside territorial waters, notwithstanding that "it may inflict injury and entail ruin upon the Icelandic fishermen." The injury suggested as a justification for the Icelandic Act is, therefore, the legal exercise by British trawlers of an undoubted international right on the high seas, a right which they share in common with the Icelandic fishermen themselves, and with all the world. If the trawlers are admittedly acting within their rights, can they properly be said to be doing the Icelanders an injury which justifies reprisals or harsh and unusual enactments?

In these circumstances, the Board of Trade entertain a doubt whether it might not be an inconvenient precedent to accept without further consideration the proposition that lawful acts done upon the high seas outside the territorial waters of a State, and outside its jurisdiction, constitute a valid and adequate reason on the part of that State for repudiating its obligations in international law or comity, and for passing a municipal law which treats the mere presence of fishing-boats with their gear in its territorial waters as a crime.

Although, however, the Law Officers are of opinion that the Icelandic authorities are justified in excluding trawlers from their ports when they use them as a base of operations, the Board of Trade do not understand the Law Officers to mean that the Icelandic authorities are justified in enacting a law which goes so far as to forbid the mere innocent and even unintentional presence of British trawlers in territorial waters.

If the innocent passage of trawlers through territorial waters is a matter of international right, subject to the restriction of stowing their trawls while so passing, their mere presence there at anchor under a similar restriction is obviously also a matter of international right.

The opinions of the Law Officers may, therefore, be summed up as follows:—

1. The Icelandic Act contravenes the law of nations because it forbids altogether the innocent passage of trawlers, instead of permitting it subject to the restriction that their trawls must be stowed, and not ready to be shot.

2. The Icelandic Act violates international comity by forbidding commercial intercourse, but exclusion from such intercourse is justifiable in the present case because British trawling on the high seas, although perfectly lawful in itself, in fact injures the competing Icelandic fishermen by its superior method of fishing.

3. The Icelandic Act violates international right because it forbids altogether the innocent presence of trawlers, instead of permitting it under the restriction of stowing their trawls.

It is important to form a correct judgment upon these points, for it has been assumed by the Icelandic authorities that British trawlers have no right in international law to be present in territorial waters, even for the purpose of innocent passage or shelter, and that the Icelandic authorities are, therefore, justified not only in refusing passage through their territorial waters and the hospitality of their ports, but in treating the presence of British trawlers there as a criminal offence.

If the views of the Law Officers have been correctly summarized, these, and not the assumptions of the Icelandic authorities, should, in justice to British trawlers, be made the true basis for a negotiation with the Danish Government.

If that which is a matter of right be treated as a matter of grace and concession, it seems possible that the interests of the trawlers may be to a certain extent prejudiced.

That is one of the points to which the Board of Trade deemed it right to draw the attention of Lord Salisbury in their letter of the 1st October last. The other point had reference to the abrogation or alteration of the Icelandic Act. It now seems perfectly clear that it is an infringement of international law. It is directed almost entirely against British trawlers, and has been enforced by the Icelandic authorities with what is alleged to be some harshness.

The Board of Trade, therefore, retain the opinion already expressed, and would suggest that in any efforts which may be made to arrive at a comprehensive arrangement with the Danish Government, it will be desirable for Lord Salisbury to consider the propriety of pressing for a modification of the Act in the coming Session of the Althing in July next, so as to provide that the presence of British trawlers in the territorial waters of Iceland shall be a punishable offence only when their trawls are not stowed, and thus to bring the enactment into conformity with the requirements of international law.

No. 12.

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, June 19, 1897.

Position of Mixed Tribunals in Egypt.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, the papers noted in the accompanying list, which relate to the position of the Mixed Tribunals in Egypt.

It will be seen from the former of Lord Cromer's two despatches (Paper A) that the quinquennial period for which the existence of these Tribunals was last renewed expires on the 1st February, 1899, and that the Egyptian Government propose to issue a Circular, of which a copy is inclosed (see Inclosure No. 1 in Paper A), to the Representatives of the Powers who were parties to the establishment of the Mixed Tribunals, stating that, if certain amendments which are considered necessary in two Articles of the existing Charter, or "Règlement d'Organisation" (see Paper C) are accepted by the Powers before the expiration of the current quinquennial period, the Egyptian Government will be ready to maintain the institution of the Tribunals for a further period of five years.

Full particulars as to the origin and working of these Courts and of the proposed alterations in the existing Charter will be found in a Memorandum by Sir John Scott, the Legal Adviser to the Egyptian Government (see Inclosure No. 2 in Paper A).

Lord Cromer points out that the real question at issue is whether the Egyptian Government have the right to refuse their assent to the continuance of the Mixed Tribunals if they should consider it desirable to do so. The Egyptian Government hold that they possess this right. They assume it to exist in the first paragraph of their proposed Circular to the Powers, and their view is supported by Sir John Scott, whose arguments on this point are set forth in a separate Memorandum (see Inclosure No. 3 in Paper A).

But as this right has been, and possibly will again be, contested, Lord Cromer asks what is the view which, as a matter of strict right, Her Majesty's Government take as to the powers of the Egyptian Government in this respect.

I am to request that you will favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion on this point and with your views on the proposed alterations in the existing Charter as well as with any general observations you may have to offer on the whole question.

I have, &c.

Report.

We are clearly of opinion that Egypt can, at the end of the period, withdraw from the system of Mixed Tribunals.

That system came into force only by virtue of the consent of Egypt. That consent was given for a limited period only, and when it expires the system falls to the ground unless renewed by like consent.

There is no agreement by Egypt with the Powers that there is to be a renewal at the option of the Powers. The 40th Article, to which it would appear that such a construction has been attributed, merely provides that the Powers may, at the end of the period, either return to the old system of Consular Courts, or try to make new arrangements with Egypt.

We approve of the terms of the proposed Circular; but we do not quite understand why the plural "des droits" has been employed instead of the singular, as in the former Article; the object being, as we understand, to confine the jurisdiction of the Court to the cases of damage sustained by particular individuals and not of a class.

We further think that the words "soit par des Traités, soit par des Lois, soit par des Conventions" should be omitted unless there is good reason for their retention, as also pointing to rights given to classes and not to individuals.

There may, however, be reasons for the language chosen, and we only submit the observations on the wording for consideration.

Draft Circular.

M. le Ministre,

LA dernière prorogation des pouvoirs des Tribunaux Mixtes prendra fin le 1er Février, 1899. L'expérience ayant démontré que des améliorations devraient être apportées à leur fonctionnement pour le rendre plus conforme au texte et à l'esprit tant du Règlement d'Organisation Judiciaire que des Conventions qui les ont établis, le Gouvernement de Son Altesse serait disposé, si ses propositions étaient acceptées, avant la fin de la période en cours, à maintenir l'institution de ces Tribunaux pour une nouvelle période de cinq ans.

Ces améliorations devraient viser les points suivants :—

1. Interprétation de l'Article 11, Titre I, du Règlement d'Organisation Judiciaire :
2. Interprétation de l'Article 9, même Titre, du même Règlement.

Interprétation de l'Article 11.

Cet Article a été très discuté par la Commission de 1869. Les diverses Commissions qui l'ont suivie s'en sont occupées aussi, sur la demande du Gouvernement Égyptien, et la Commission de 1884 avait approuvée une nouvelle rédaction qui n'a pas eu de suite.

Néanmoins, il est certain que les membres de la Commission de 1869 n'ont voulu, par cet Article, que donner aux Tribunaux Mixtes le même droit qui est accordé aux Tribunaux Ordinaires dans les pays d'Europe où il n'existe pas de Tribunaux administratifs. C'est ainsi que M. Mancini, dans son Rapport présenté à la Chambre Italienne en 1874, compare le dit Article 11 à la Loi Italienne du 20 Mars, 1865, Articles 2, 4, et 5.

Contrairement à l'esprit qui a dicté cet Article et au principe de la séparation des pouvoirs, les Tribunaux Mixtes se sont crus en droit de statuer sur tous les actes du Gouvernement Égyptien, sans distinguer entre les actes de souveraineté destinés à assurer le fonctionnement régulier de l'État et l'accomplissement de ses fins naturelles, actes qui par cela même doivent échapper à leur compétence, et les mesures qui ne sont que des actes individuels pouvant léser des droits acquis en vertu du Code Civil.

Déjà en 1880, le Baron de Ring, tout en faisant l'éloge des Tribunaux Mixtes, signalait à la Commission Internationale l'esprit trop envahissant de la Cour et déclarait qu'elle n'a pas toujours su échapper au soupçon d'avoir donné place à la politique dans ses préoccupations (séance du 9 Décembre, 1880, pp. 6 et 7).

Malgré les services éminents rendus par les dits Tribunaux, ce même reproche a pu malheureusement dans la suite être formulé de nouveau non sans quelque apparence de raison, tant en ce qui regarde l'administration générale du pays qu'en ce qui concerne la gestion par le Gouvernement des intérêts financiers.

Les intérêts des créanciers de l'Égypte, ayant été mis d'après les arrangements internationaux sous la sauvegarde de la Caisse de la Dette, il devrait être expliqué clairement que c'est seulement dans le cas où la Caisse de la Dette intenterait une action contre le Gouvernement pour prétendu violation des dits arrangements, que les Tribunaux seraient compétents. Quant aux mesures que le Gouvernement Khédivial aurait prises sur l'avis conforme de la Caisse, elles ne peuvent, en aucun cas, être appréciées par les dits Tribunaux, ni faire l'objet d'une discussion quelconque de leur part.

Il serait donc utile, à tous égards, afin d'arrêter cette tendance des Tribunaux, de donner à cet Article une rédaction aussi claire et aussi nette que possible.

Aussi s'inspirant du principe même de la séparation des pouvoirs, ainsi que d'un Jugement du Tribunal d'Alexandrie confirmé par la Cour (Arrêt Sursock, 22 Avril, 1880) le Gouvernement de Son Altesse propose-t-il la rédaction suivante comme respectant d'avantage ce principe fondamental :—

"Article 11. Ces Tribunaux ne pourront pas statuer sur la propriété du domaine public.

"Le Gouvernement n'est pas justiciable de ces Tribunaux pour les mesures prises par lui dans les intérêts généraux de l'Égypte, ni pour les actes qu'il pose en vue de l'exécution ou de l'application des lois et règlements d'Administration Publique.

"Mais, sans pouvoir interpréter ou arrêter l'exécution d'une mesure administrative, ils sont compétents pour juger des atteintes qu'un acte d'administration peut porter à des droits individuels acquis, reconnus aux étrangers, soit par des Traités, soit par des Lois, soit par des Conventions.

"Ces Tribunaux ne connaîtront, ni directement, ni indirectement, sous quelque forme que ce soit, des mesures prises par le Gouvernement pour l'organisation ou la disposition des finances publiques, sauf dans le cas où une action serait intentée et portée devant eux par la Caisse de la Dette. Ils ne peuvent, en aucun cas et sous quelque forme que ce soit, connaître d'une mesure prise sur l'avis conforme de la Caisse de la Dette, lorsque cet avis est exigé par les arrangements internationaux. Ils ne pourront non plus rechercher ou apprécier la valeur de cet avis."

Interprétation de l'Article 9.

Nonobstant le texte de cet Article aussi précis et formel, qui ne laisse subsister aucun doute sur l'intention du législateur de déterminer la compétence des Tribunaux d'après la nationalité du plaideur et non d'après les intérêts qu'il peut représenter, ces Tribunaux se sont déclarés compétents pour connaître des cas où il n'y avait en cause que des indigènes, sous prétexte qu'il y avait en jeu un intérêt étranger.

C'est ainsi qu'ils ont déclaré la Daïra Sanieh et les Chemins de Fer, Administrations purement gouvernementales, justiciables des Tribunaux Mixtes dans les affaires avec les indigènes.

De même ils ont déclaré, que les causes dans lesquelles étaient engagées les Sociétés et les Compagnies Égyptiennes avec des indigènes, étaient de leur compétence et ce, au mépris des Articles 46 et 47 du Code de Commerce Mixte, qui disposent que toutes les Compagnies fondées en Égypte sont de nationalité Égyptienne.

La Municipalité d'Alexandrie, qui n'est qu'une émanation du pouvoir central et qui a été déclarée constituer "une personnalité civile de nationalité indigène" (Article 13 du Décret du 5 Janvier, 1890) a été néanmoins considérée par la Cour comme une personnalité mixte.

Il résulte de là, que si ces Tribunaux suivaient cette jurisprudence jusqu'au bout, rien ne les empêcherait de faire entrer dans leur compétence les contestations des indigènes avec le Gouvernement et toutes ses Administrations.

D'un autre côté, et en contradiction avec leur jurisprudence susmentionnée, ces mêmes Tribunaux se sont déclarés compétents pour statuer sur des affaires dans lesquelles n'était engagé aucun intérêt étranger. Ils ont décidé, en effet, qu'un indigène peut choisir un prête-nom parmi les étrangers afin de porter son action contre un autre indigène devant les Tribunaux Mixtes. Cette doctrine, qui est le renversement de l'ordre des juridictions, porte un préjudice énorme aux parties en les obligeant à soumettre leurs différends à une juridiction autre et une législation autre que celles sous le régime desquelles elles avaient contracté. Or, il est de principe, et la Cour l'a d'ailleurs proclamé elle-même, que l'ordre des juridictions constitue une question d'ordre public, et qu'il ne saurait y être dérogé par des conventions particulières. Cependant, au mépris de ce principe elle permet (par l'intervention d'un prête-nom sans intérêt au procès) à une des parties de faire par sa simple volonté ce qu'elle ne pourrait pas faire avec l'assentiment de la partie adverse. Il est vrai que la Cour, après avoir consacré l'admissibilité du prête-nom par deux Arrêts différents en 1892 et 1893, est revenu sur sa jurisprudence par un Arrêt daté du 1er Mai, 1895 ; mais rien n'empêcherait la Cour d'adopter de nouveau la première jurisprudence.

En 1890 le Gouvernement avait fait des réserves sur la tendance de la Commission Internationale, qui voulaït rendre les Tribunaux Mixtes compétents dans les matières réelles immobilières entre indigènes. Ces réserves avaient été approuvées par plusieurs Puissances. De son côté la Cour d'Appel a, par plusieurs Arrêts, proclamé son incompétence pour trancher les questions immobilières entre indigènes et n'a pas depuis modifié sa jurisprudence.

Pour consacrer cette jurisprudence et obvier aux inconvénients signalés plus haut, il serait donc nécessaire de donner à l'Article 9 une rédaction nouvelle, indiquant clairement la compétence des Tribunaux Mixtes en matière immobilière et précisant nettement que nonobstant l'intérêt que les parties en cause pourraient représenter, c'est la nationalité du plaideur en la qualité qu'il agit qui devrait fixer la compétence.

L'Article 9 pourrait dès lors être formulé comme suit :—

"Article 9. Ces Tribunaux connaîtront seuls des contestations en matière civile et commerciale entre indigènes et étrangers et entre étrangers de nationalité différente en dehors du statut personnel.

"Leur compétence sera déterminée uniquement par la nationalité des parties réellement en cause, sans avoir égard aux intérêts mixtes qui pourraient être indirectement engagés.

"Ils connaîtront seulement des actions réelles immobilières entre indigènes et étrangers, ou entre étrangers de même nationalité ou de nationalité différente."

Je me plais à espérer, M. , que le Gouvernement de , en portant son examen sur ces deux propositions, voudra bien se convaincre que le Gouvernement de Son Altesse n'a d'autres préoccupations que celles d'améliorer le fonctionnement des Tribunaux Mixtes, et je me permets de compter sur vos bons offices pour obtenir dans un bref délai l'adhésion de votre Gouvernement.

Veuillez, &c.

Case for the Opinion of the Attorney- and Solicitor-General.

Trial of E. Arton for an offence other than those for which he was extradited.

L.O.R. 1896 (Conf. 6918), p. 51.

THE Law Officers of the Crown are requested to further advise the Secretary of State with reference to the case of Émile Arton whom the French Government propose to try for an offence other than those for which he was surrendered to France by Her Majesty's Government.

The opinion of the Law Officers on the case submitted to them in November 1896 (sent herewith for reference) having been communicated to the Foreign Office with an expression of the Secretary of State's concurrence with the reply which the Law Officers suggested to the French Minister's note, a note was addressed by the Marquess of Salisbury to M. Geoffray on the 1st December, 1896, in the following terms:—

"Sir, "Foreign Office, December 1, 1896.

"Her Majesty's Government have attentively considered your note of the 10th instant respecting the case of Émile Arton, who was surrendered in extradition to France, upon certain specific charges, in February last.

"It appears from that note that Arton desires voluntarily to renounce the benefit of Article IV of the Extradition Treaty of 1876 between Great Britain and France, whereby it is provided that a person surrendered by one country 'shall not be tried for any crime or offence committed in the other country before the extradition, other than the crime for which his surrender has been granted;' and that he claims the right to be tried on all the heads of accusation brought against him.

"In these circumstances you state that the obstacle presented by the terms of the Treaty is 'suppressed by the act of the person concerned,' and that the French Minister of Justice considers that Arton should be again arraigned on the charges which led to his condemnation, 'by default,' in 1893.

"You accordingly announce that Arton must appear before the Tribunal of the Seine in order to purge himself of his default, and to be tried afresh for the crime contemplated by the provisions of Article 177 of the French Penal Code.

"I have the honour to state to you, in reply, that, in the opinion of Her Majesty's Government, the trial of Arton on the charge in question cannot properly, having regard to the terms of the Treaty, take place without the consent, not merely of Arton himself, but of both of the High Contracting Parties thereto having been previously obtained; and that, accordingly, if such consent is desired, formal application should be made for it by the Government of the French Republic to that of Her Majesty.

"I have, &c.
(Signed) "SALISBURY.

"M. Geoffray,
"&c. &c. &c."

To this note the French Minister replied as follows:—

"M. le Marquis, "Londres, le 24 Décembre, 1896.

"Je n'ai pas manqué de communiquer à mon Gouvernement la lettre du 1er de ce mois par laquelle votre Seigneurie m'informant que, dans l'opinion du Gouvernement de la Reine, pour que le nommé Arton pût être jugé sur un chef d'accusation pour lequel son extradition n'a pas été expressément accordée, les termes du Traité d'Extradition Franco-Britannique exigent non seulement le consentement de l'inculpé mais encore le consentement des deux Gouvernements qui ont conclu la Convention.

"M. Hanotaux, après avoir pris connaissance de cette communication, en a référé à son collègue le Garde des Sceaux qui, après avoir soumis la question à un nouvel examen, n'a pas cru pouvoir se ranger à l'opinion exprimée par le Gouvernement de la Reine.

Le Gouvernement Français estime, en effet, que l'Article IV de la Convention du 4 Août, 1876, sur lequel est fondée l'argumentation contenue dans la lettre que vous avez bien voulu m'adresser, n'a pas la portée qui lui est attribuée par les autorités Britanniques.

"Cette disposition n'a d'autre objet que de consacrer un principe universellement admis en droit international, et d'après lequel le pouvoir judiciaire a le devoir strict de se conformer aux conditions de l'Acte d'Extradition en vertu duquel un inculpé lui est déféré.

"Mais elle laisse en dehors de ces provisions le cas où l'extradé, postérieurement à la remise, consent et demande formellement à être jugé sur un chef d'inculpation pour lequel son extradition n'a pas été originairement autorisée.

"Or, il importe précisément, dans l'espèce, de déterminer la valeur de ce consentement et la procédure à suivre, s'il y a lieu, pour lui faire produire son plein et entier effet.

"On chercherait vainement dans les dispositions du Traité de 1876 un texte qui permit d'éclairer utilement ce point.

"La Convention est muette à cet égard, et il n'apparaît pas qu'au cours des négociations qui ont précédé la conclusion du Traité, la question, qui se présente aujourd'hui, ait fait l'objet d'un examen entre les deux Gouvernements.

"Dans cette situation, il convient manifestement de se référer aux principes du droit international sur la matière.

"Il est généralement reconnu que l'extradé peut, s'il le demande, être poursuivi et jugé sur tous les chefs d'inculpation relevées contre lui, qu'ils soient ou non compris dans la nomenclature des infractions prévues par la Convention.

"Cette solution qui, ainsi que l'établit M. Billot (Traité d'Extradition, p. 363) ne porte aucune atteinte aux prérogatives des Puissances Contractantes, se justifie par le respect dû aux droits de l'extradé. Celui-ci, en passant la frontière, n'a perdu aucun des droits que les lois assurent aux accusés; il est donc libre d'apprécier s'il est de son intérêt de se prévaloir des garanties que peut lui offrir le Traité d'Extradition ou de les répudier pour invoquer le droit primordial de se défendre contre toute accusation portée contre lui. Admettre une solution contraire serait non seulement méconnaître les intérêts de l'accusé, mais encore lui faire une condition pire que celle qu'il aurait eue s'il s'était livré spontanément aux autorités de son pays.

"Cette théorie, consacrée en France par un arrêt de la Cour de Cassation du 24 Juin, 1847, et par plusieurs autres décisions de jurisprudence, n'a cessé, depuis lors, d'être appliquée dans tous nos rapports avec les Puissances étrangères et n'a motivé, de la part de ces dernières, aucune objection.

"De l'exposé qui précède, il ressort qu'aux termes de la jurisprudenc internationale actuelle la renonciation volontaire de l'extradé aux garanties du Traité d'Extradition a pour effet de permettre de le juger sur tous les chefs relevés à sa charge. Le Gouvernement qui a obtenu la remise n'a dans ce cas d'autre obligation que de fournir au Gouvernement requis la preuve de cette renonciation.

"C'est pour satisfaire à cette condition que j'ai été invité par mon Gouvernement à faire parvenir au Cabinet Britannique la lettre dans laquelle Arton déclare avoir 'résolu de renoncer volontairement au bénéfice du Traité d'Extradition.'

"J'ajouterai que cet extradé, interrogé le 3 de ce mois par M. le Président de la Cour d'Assizes de la Seine, a déclaré persister dans sa demande, ainsi qu'il résulte des termes d'un procès-verbal que m'a fait parvenir M. le Ministre des Affaires Étrangères et que je m'empresse de vous envoyer ci-joint.

"Dans ces conditions M. le Garde des Sceaux a pensé qu'il ne lui était pas possible de revenir sur la décision qu'il a prise antérieurement de donner satisfaction à la résolution d'Arton en le faisant juger à nouveau du chef de corruption de fonctionnaires publics.

"La thèse soutenue dans l'espèce par le Gouvernement Français a, d'ailleurs, été adoptée par les Gouvernements étrangers dans des cas indentiques. Ces Gouvernements ont toujours admis que la renonciation d'un extradé au bénéfice du Traité d'Extradition équivalent à un retour volontaire de celui-ci en France.

"Le Gouvernement de la République se plaît, dès lors, à espérer que votre Seigneurie, après examen des considérations que j'ai l'honneur de lui exposer, voudra bien reconnaître que la notification que j'ai été chargé de lui faire le 10 Novembre dernier, constituait une démarche à laquelle n'obligeaient pas les termes de la Convention de 1876 et qu'elle était simplement dictée par une pensée de courtoisie à l'endroit des Ministres de la Reine.

" Sa Seigneurie le Marquis de Salisbury,
" &c. &c. &c."

Copy of M. Geoffray's note having been communicated to the Home Office, it was referred by Sir Matthew Ridley to the Chief Magistrate, who has reported on the subject as follows :—

" Sir, " Police Court, Bow Street, January 7, 1897.

" With reference to the despatch of the French Ambassador to the Marquess of Salisbury, dated the 24th December, 1896, on the subject of the extradition of Arton, I beg to observe that the conclusion to be arrived at depends entirely on the proper interpretation of Article IV of the Treaty of 1876. The contention of the French Government is that Article IV is entirely dumb on the point in question, and it wishes the Article to be read as if the words " without his consent " had been inserted after the words " shall not be tried." This would be a material and important addition to the Article and ought not to be allowed, unless it is shown conclusively that it must have been intended by both the High Contracting Parties.

" In order to consider whether it was so intended I would call attention to the state of the law in England. In Sub-section 2 of Section 3 of " The Extradition Act, 1870," it is provided that a fugitive criminal shall not be surrendered to a foreign State unless provision is made by ' the law of that State or by arrangement that the fugitive criminal shall not, until he has been restored or had an opportunity of returning to Her Majesty's dominions, be detained or tried in that foreign State for any offence committed prior to his surrender other than the extradition crime proved by the facts on which the surrender is granted,' and therefore no fugitive criminal can be extradited unless the Treaty provides for the carrying into effect of this Subsection; for it is clear that the law of France did not make such a provision, and Article IV of the Treaty was framed to make by arrangement what was required by the law of England in order to surrender a fugitive criminal. I think it perfectly clear by our law that it would be impossible to construe Sub-section 2, Section 3, as if it contained the words ' without his consent ' after the words ' shall not.' Under these circumstances I think it is evident that, on the English side at any rate, the framer of Article IV never intended that it should be construed in the manner contended for by the French Government.

" It is said that the Treaty is ' dumb ' on the point, but Article IV is concise and free from any ambiguity both in French and English, and excludes the power of trying for all crimes whatsoever, committed prior to his surrender, for which the accused has not been extradited.

" I am not able to say whether the question was discussed at the time of negotiating the Treaty. I was not then Chief Magistrate, and there are no papers here which throw any light upon it. With regard to the contention that Article IV, as construed by the British Government, infringes the rights of the extradited person, it seems to me that the whole Law of Extradition infringes what were understood to be the original rights of individuals, and the Article, as drawn, is to a great extent framed for the protection and benefit of the extradited person, and it is in extremely few cases that a desire such as M. Arton evinces has been, or is likely to be, expressed by the person extradited.

I think it is unnecessary to consider the principles of international law on the subject, unless it could throw light on the proper construction of the Treaty; but I would refer to some of the dicta of the American Judge, Mr. Justice Miller, reported in ' Moore on Extradition (Limitations as to Trial),' vol. i, pp. 233–238. It is worthy of consideration as showing that the matter has been under discussion, that a Royal Commission in 1877 sitting to consider the subject of the amendment of the extradition laws, assumed that the law was the same as is now contended for by Her Majesty's Government, and came to the conclusion that they should recommend that accused persons might be tried for offences other than those for which they had been surrendered, political and local offences excepted. This opinion, however, was not acted upon. The matter has, however, been considered under two heads, first, whether a man could be tried by his own wish for extradition crimes other than those for which he was surrendered; and, second, whether he could be tried for any crime whatever by his own desire; but there has been no uniform international rule established en the subject. I would here point out that Arton was not extradited from this country for the crime for which he now wishes to be tried, not only because there was no sufficient evidence to establish the charge, but also because the offence (' corruption de fonctionnaires ') is not an extradition crime.

" I think I ought also to draw attention to the fact that there was for some time an idea, which was acted upon, that if a man ordered for extradition desired to give up his right not to be surrendered for fifteen days after his committal, he should be allowed to do so; but this was found in one case to have led to a condition of things which created a possibility of the accused escaping from justice, and it has never been allowed since. This shows the great importance of keeping strictly to the letter of the Treaty, which I submit should never be departed from.

" I am, &c.
(Signed) " JOHN BRIDGE.

" The Under-Secretary of State,
" Home Office."

The Secretary of State thinks it desirable to bring under the consideration of the Law Officers, with the Chief Magistrate's letter, a case which was laid before the Law Officers in 1882 (and which has come under consideration since the previous reference to them with respect to Arton) with reference to one Charlot who was extradited to Belgium.

Case and opinion of 1882 herewith.

It will be seen that the view of the French Government is, stated briefly, as follows :—

The object of Article IV of the Treaty of 1876 (which provides that a person surrendered by one country " shall not be tried for any crime or offence committed in the other country before the extradition other than the crime for which his surrender has been granted "), is to confirm a principle universally recognized in international law; but the Article makes no provison for the case where the person extradited after his surrender consents and formally applies to be tried on a charge for which his surrender has not been authorized.

The Treaty of 1876 being silent with respect to such a case, and there being nothing to show that it was considered in the course of the negotiations which preceded the conclusion of that Treaty, the French Government observe that the obvious course is to refer for guidance to the principles of international law upon this matter. They then proceed to argue that, according to those principles, Arton is entitled to be (again) tried for the offence of corrupting public functionaries, which was not included among the offences for which his extradition was granted (not so included, it may be observed, because, among other reasons, that offence is not one of those specified in the Treaty of 1876); and further, that the only obligation resting upon the French Government is to furnish Her Majesty's Government with the proof of Arton's voluntary renunciation of the safeguard assured to him by the IVth Article of the Treaty.

Passing by the apparent inconsistency between this last observation and that contained in the last paragraph of the French Minister's note, viz., that the notification contained in his note of the 10th November was an act of courtesy which was not required by the Treaty, it does not appear that the question arising in this case is one to be settled by reference to the theoretical principles of international law. If it could be so dealt with, it might be contended that there is no such uniformity of opinion among the authorities on this subject as the French Government appear to hold; though the arguments set forth in the French Minister's note would no doubt deserve great consideration if an Extradition Treaty were now in course of negotiation, and the point to be settled were what provisions should be embodied in it.

It is the case, as the French Government observe, that in the negotiations which led to the present Treaty no reference appears to have been made to such a case as the present; but in 1878, the year in which the Treaty came into operation, a Bill was introduced into the French Senate for the purpose of putting the practice of extradition upon a legal basis, and, to quote the words of the Minister who introduced it, of making known to foreign Governments the principles which guided the French Government in a matter previously decided by the Executive Power. The text of this Bill, and the speech of the Minister of Justice in introducing it, appear in the "Journal Officiel" of the 16th May, 1878; the Report of the Commission appointed to examine the Bill appears in the "Journal Officiel" of the 17th January, 1879; a fresh draft of the Bill appears in the issue of the 20th March, 1879; and the "Journal Officiel" of the 4th and 5th April, 1879, contains a report of the sittings of the Senate when the measure with certain amendments was adopted.

The following is a quotation from the "Journal Officiel" of the 5th April:—

"Suite de la deuxième délibération sur le Projet de Loi relatif à l'extradition des malfaiteurs.

"M. le Président.—L'ordre du jour appelle la suite de la deuxième délibération sur le Projet de Loi relatif à l'extradition des malfaiteurs.

"Le Sénat se souvient que la discussion s'est arrêtée hier à l'Article IV.

"La parole est à M. le Rapporteur.

"M. Bertauld (Rapporteur).—Messieurs, au nom de la Commission, je vous demande la modification de l'Article IV.

"Cet Article décide que l'extradé ne peut être jugé que pour les faits qui ont motivé l'extradition; toutefois il apporte une exception pour le cas d'nn consentement spécial donné dans les termes du Traité par le Gouvernement requis.

"La Commission demande de substituer aux mots 'dans les termes du Traité' ceux-ci, 'dans les conditions de la loi.'

"Voici la cause pour laquelle nous désirons ce changement.

"Les Traités peuvent toujours être modifiés par les Parties Contractantes. Par conséquent, tout consentement de la Puissance requise est valable en tant qu'il est conforme aux conditions de la loi. La Commission est unanime pour réclamer la modification dont je crois vous avoir montré l'intérêt.

"Le premier paragraphe de l'Article IV se trouverait donc ainsi rédigé:—

"'L'extradition ne sera demandée ou accordée qu'à la condition que l'individu extradé ne sera ni poursuivi, ni puni pour une infraction autre que celle ayant motivé l'extradition à moins d'un consentement spécial dans les conditions de la loi par le Gouvernement requis.'

"M. le Président.—Il n'y a pas d'observations?

"Je mets aux voix le paragraphe de l'Article IV avec la modification proposée par la Commission.

"(Le paragraphe ainsi modifié est adopté.)

"M. le Président.—Je donne lecture du second paragraphe de l'Article IV:—

"'Sera considéré comme soumis, sans réserve, à l'application des lois de la nation requérante à raison d'un fait quelconque antérieur à l'extradition et différent de l'infraction qui a motivé cette mesure, l'individu livré qui aura eu pendant un mois depuis son élargissement définitif la faculté de quitter le territoire de cette nation.'

"Le paragraphe est mis aux voix et adopté."

The measure did not pass into law, but it appears to be an obvious inference from the tenor of the IVth Article, whether as introduced or adopted in the Senate, that if such an exceptional case as the present had been contemplated when the Treaty of 1876 was arranged, the consent of the surrendering Government would have been made a preliminary condition to the trial of a person extradited for an offence other than that for which he had been surrendered, unless, indeed, he had been allowed before such trial an opportunity of quitting the country to which he had been surrendered.

The Law Officers are requested to advise the Secretary of State whether, in view of the considerations now submitted to them, they see reason to modify in any respect the opinion they gave on the 25th November, 1896.

Opinion.

We see no reason to modify in any respect our previous opinion.

By Article IV of the Convention the French Government agreed with the British Government that a person extradited for one crime should not be tried for another.

The Article does not say that he shall not be so tried "except with his consent," but that he shall not be so tried.

Her Majesty's Government can waive this stipulation if they are satisfied that the accused desires it. If the accused does not desire it (as in the case before the Law Officers in 1882) they cannot properly waive it, as they are morally bound to enforce it for his benefit.

Without the consent of Her Majesty's Government, the French Government cannot try Arton on another charge without a breach of the Convention. It seems to us a quite impossible contention that the consent of a prisoner in custody is to authorize such a proceeding. Any such practice is obviously capable of the gravest abuse.

The French Government obtained the surrender of Arton on the promise made, by the IVth Article of the Convention, to the British Government, that he should not be tried for any other offence. It is for the British Government to determine whether they will waive this stipulation, and, with a view to this, it is the British Government—not the French—that must be satisfied that Arton consents.

Gentlemen,

British missionary property in Madagascar.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit to you the papers enumerated in the accompanying list, in connection with certain questions which have arisen in regard to the tenure of land and houses by British Missionary Societies in Madagascar since the annexation of the island by France.

Paper A relates the circumstances in which a claim was put forward in the name of the Queen of Madagascar, to resume possession of a plot of land granted by her in 1889 to the London Missionary Society, and Friends' Foreign Missions Association.

The grant of the 4th February, 1889 (Inclosure 2 in Paper A) states that the land is to be used for no other than hospital purposes, that the buildings and land cannot be claimed for or indemnified under any circumstances, for they belong to the Queen of Madagascar, and that should the Societies cease to carry on hospital work on that land, whatever has been done by them shall remain the property of the Queen of Madagascar, and the Queen shall dispose of the buildings as she thinks fit. In November 1896 a letter reached the hospital authorities from the Queen which, after referring to the grant, ordered them to vacate "her land and buildings" in the shortest possible time.

Paper B (Inclosure 2) shows that on learning the contention advanced in the Queen's name, the British Vice-Consul at Antananarivo had represented to the French Resident-General that it was clear from the terms of the grant that it was only meant to bestow the rights of resumption upon the Queen if and when the grantees should cease to use the land for the purpose for which it was originally granted to them, and Paper C contains instructions in a similar sense to Her Majesty's Ambassador at Paris. No reply has been received to the representations made by the latter to the Government of the French Republic, and the Resident-General merely informed the Vice-Consul that his arguments could be urged by the interested parties at the proper time before the Court of competent jurisdiction.

On the 15th November (Paper B, Inclosure 5) the Resident-General issued an "Arrêté," which, after referring to various French laws, and amongst others to the French law declaring Madagascar to be a French Colony, stated that there was no sufficient hospital accommodation for the army of occupation, and ordered the hospital and its contents to be placed, within ten days, at the disposal of the military authorities. A Committee was appointed at the same time to settle the compensation due.

Paper D contains correspondence between the French Mayor of Antananarivo and the English Societies on the subject of the compensation awarded by the Committee, and a letter from the British Vice-Consul to the Resident-General on the same matter. The Societies declined to accept the amount awarded, on the ground of its total inadequacy, whereupon a summons was issued for them to appear before the Tribunal of 1st Instance of Antananarivo, in order that Judgments might be given against them for the sums tendered. The case was heard before the Tribunal, and Judgment delivered on the 4th January, confirming the award, and condemning the Medical Mission in costs.

In considering the case presented in the foregoing summary, it is important to bear in mind the attitude assumed by Her Majesty's Government in regard to the general question of the effect on British Treaty rights in Madagascar of the French annexation of the island; and the Paper marked E will put you in possession of the position which has been reached in the negotiations with France.

I have to request that you will take the papers now submitted to you into your consideration, and favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion as to whether the facts are such as to justify Her Majesty's Government in making a representation to the French Government on behalf of the parties interested, and, if so, on what special grounds such a representation can most advantageously and properly be based.

Report.

We feel no doubt that on the true construction of the instrument the use of the land on which the hospital is built was granted by the Queen to the missionaries so long as it should be used for hospital purposes.

We cannot see any justification for the resumption, nominally by the Queen, of the land and buildings. It appears to us to be a mere act of spoliation.

It is difficult to suppose that any redress can be obtained in the Courts of Madagascar for what would probably be supported there as an act of the Royal prerogative.

We think that the matter is one for diplomatic representation. It should be based on the terms of the grant, and the inadequacy of the compensation offered.

Mining concessions granted by Malagasy Government to Harrison, Smith, and Co.

I HAVE the honour to submit herewith the papers marked in the margin, with reference to the attitude now being adopted by the French Government towards Messrs. Harrison, Smith, and Co., a British firm who have acquired certain mining rights in Madagascar, under concessions made to them by the Malagasy Government before the island came under French control.

The circumstances of the case appear briefly to be as follows:—

In November 1889 Messrs. Harrison, Smith, and Co. entered into a preliminary contract with the Malagasy Government, which resulted in the grant to them by that Government on the 18th May, 1893, of a mining concession (Paper A), in which the late Prime Minister of the island had an interest. By the terms of this document, Messrs. Harrison, Smith, and Co. were allowed to export the gold produced from their mines free of duty, and a special confirmatory authority to that effect was given them on the 8th September last, by M. Laroche, then Resident-General of France in Madagascar. On General Gallieni succeeding to the office of Resident-General, however, he applied, to the detriment of Messrs. Harrison, Smith, and Co., a Decree, which only came into force on tho 20th November, 1896, and which forbids the exportation of gold from a concession which has not been properly regularized. Messrs. Harrison, Smith, and Co.'s concessions have not yet been regularized, but until such time as the Governments of Great Britain and France shall have come to an arrangement with regard to the general question of foreign concessions in the island, that firm claim exemption from the operation of the Decree, on the ground that the special permission given to them by M. Laroche, the then French Resident-General, on the 8th September, 1896, was antecedent to the promulgation of the Decree which came into force only on the 20th November last.

I have the honour to request that you will take the papers sent herewith into your consideration, and will favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion as to whether his Lordship would be justified in addressing a formal representation to the French Government in regard to Messrs. Harrison, Smith, and Co.'s case, and, if so, on what grounds such a representation could, in your judgment, most advantageously and properly be based.

Lord Salisbury will at the same time be glad to receive any observations of a more general nature which you may think it desirable to offer on the papers.

We think that Her Majesty's Government would be justified in addressing a formal representation to the French Government in regards to Messrs. Harrison, Smith, and Co.'s case.

The ore was extracted by them on the faith of the assurance given by M. Laroche that it might be exported.

It is not just that, in virtue of a subsequent "Arrêté," the export of the gold so extracted should be forbidden.

We think that the French Government may be fairly asked to give effect to the arrangement made by M. Laroche pending the regularization of the concession.

Gentlemen,

Smith and Co.'s Banking Monopoly in Monaco.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit to you the papers noted in the accompanying list, with regard to the treatment received at the hands of the French and Monégasque Courts, by Messrs. Smith and Co., a firm of British bankers carrying on business in Monaco, who are the grantees of a Concession for exclusive banking in that Principality.

By a decree of His Serene Highness the Prince of Monaco, dated the 15th September, 1887, this firm was granted for a period of twelve years, the monopoly of all banking operations in the Principality, under conditions which were laid down in a "Cahier des Charges."

(Paper A). This Concession was renewed and confirmed on the 4th March, 1891.

The "Cahier des Charges" declared that the exclusive rights thus granted included the collection of bills, and every operation which it is possible legitimately to include under the name of banking, in return for which, Messrs. Smith and Co., undertook to pay an annual royalty of 12,000 fr., and to submit to a permanent surveillance on the part of a Monégasque official.

Messrs. Smith found, however, in spite of this Decree that other banks, established on the Monaco frontier, were carrying on, in the Principality, every kind of banking business which did not actually necessitate the occupation of a building, and they eventually initiated proceedings against one of the offending banks, the "Banque Populaire de Menton," before the Tribunal de Commerce of that town in June 1892. This Court gave Judgment on the 12th July, 1892, in favour of the "Banque Populaire," against which Messrs. Smith appealed to the Court of Aix, which latter Court delivered Judgment on the 9th December, 1892, declaring that, although Messrs. Smith and Co., had, by the terms of the Concession, an exclusive privilege of banking in the Principality and the "Banque Populaire de Menton" had infringed that privilege, yet that freedom of commerce, having by the French Law of the 2nd March, 1791, become one of the fundamental privileges of the French Republic, a French Court could not uphold a monopoly. They, therefore, confirmed the Judgment of the Court of Mentone.

Messrs. Smith and Co., finding, however, that their case yet admitted of reference to the "Cour de Cassation" at Paris, took it to that ultimate Court, on the plea that the Law of 1791, even if prohibiting monopolies in France, was not applicable to a foreign country, namely, Monaco. The "Cour de Cassation," however, rejected their appeal, confirming the Judgment of the Court of Aix on the 29th May, 1894.

Encouraged, however, by the fact that the reason given for the adverse decisions of the French Courts was a purely juridical one and applicable only in France, and also by the opinions of Professors Lyon-Caen and Despagnet (Paper D), Mr. Unwin, who succeeded to Messrs. Smith's Concession, brought an action against the Crédit Lyonnais Bank in the Court of Monaco on the 8th June, 1895, once more decided against Messrs. Smith on the ground that, in their opinion, the privilege acquired by Messrs. Smith consisted only of the right of opening a bank in the Principality, but did not give them the exclusive right of carrying on banking operations therein.

The Judgment was immediately referred to the Court of Revision (the only Court of Appeal in the Principality).

This Court has apparently only consultative powers; it reports to the Prince of Monaco, who himself pronounces the confirmation, or, in the alternative, what is called the reformation, of His Highness' own Court.

In an "Ordonnance," dated Paris, the 1st September, 1896, the Prince rejected Mr. Unwin's appeal (Paper E), whereupon, having exhausted, as they contended, every legal remedy, Messrs. Smith laid the matter before Lord Salisbury (Paper F).

In view of the fact that questions of French and Monégasque Law were so largely involved, his Lordship requested Her Majesty's Ambassador at Paris to obtain the advice of an expert in those branches of law, and the papers were accordingly submitted by Sir E. Monson to Mᵉ Clunet, who advises Her Majesty's Embassy at Paris on such questions. In the opinion of Mᵉ Clunet (see Paper G), Mr. Unwin has no legal means left him to obtain redress; and he (Mᵉ Clunet) adds that the only remedy remaining would appear to be through diplomatic intervention, with a view to obtaining for Messrs. Smith some compensation, such as a prolongation of the Concession.

I have the honour to request that you will take the papers transmitted herewith into your consideration, and that you will favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion whether a representation on behalf of the concessionnaires can now properly be made through the diplomatic channel, and, if so, on what special grounds such representations might most suitably be based.

His Lordship would also be glad to be favoured with any general observations you may have to offer on the matter.

Report.

If this case depended solely on the question whether the view as to the scope of the Concession taken by the French Court of First Instance and the Courts of Monaco, or that taken by the Court of Aix and the "Cour de Cassation," were correct, we should not advise diplomatic interference.

There is a good deal to be said for the former of these two views, and the matter has been decided in the Courts of Monaco by which the concessionnaire agreed to be bound.

It cannot be said that the decision is corrupt or outrageously wrong. But the matter does not rest there.

In the Mémoire of Messrs. Smith and Co., it is stated (pp. 13–14) that the Government of Monaco authorized the construction of a staircase to give access from the Casino to the Bank of the Crédit Lyonnais, just over the frontier. The Government of Monaco might not be able to prevent the erection of that Bank as it is on French soil.

But on the narrowest reading of the Concession, the Government of Monaco, even if they observed their obligations to the letter certainly did not observe them in spirit and substance when they gave facilities of this kind to attract custom to a rival bank set up just beyond the border and in the immediate vicinity of the Casino.

We think that a representation may be made to the Government of Monaco, as to the treatment which the concessionnaires have received. In that representation the views of the Superior French Courts as to the scope of the Concession may properly be cited.

It may further be pointed out that the Government of Monaco have, in the manner described in the Memorial, given facilities for the competition with the concessionnaires of the Crédit Lyonnais, and they may be fairly asked to make them some suitable allowance or compensation.

Gentlemen,

Removal of British subjects to Lunatic Asylums abroad.

I AM directed by the Marquess of Salisbury to transmit to you the correspondence and papers noted in the accompanying list, relating to the detention of a number of British subjects in a French lunatic asylum.

Lord Salisbury's attention was first called to this matter by the reports from Mr. Lethbridge, British Vice-Consul at Caen, forwarded by Her Majesty's Consul-General at Havre (see the Papers marked A, D, and E, in the inclosed list). These reports dealt mainly with the cases of two ladies who had apparently been taken from this country to Caen for the purpose of being confined in the Bon Sauveur Asylum at that place. Such information as Mr. Vice-Consul Lethbridge was able to obtain by application to the authorities of the asylum, and from personal interviews with the inmates, made it appear very doubtful whether the requirements both of French and of English law had been properly complied with in these cases.

Lord Salisbury therefore decided to communicate with the Commissioners in Lunacy in regard to the matter, and after some correspondence (see Papers marked F and G), it was arranged, with the concurrence of the French authorities, that two of the Commissioners should proceed in person to the asylum at Caen, for the purpose of examining all British subjects there detained. Before their arrival at Caen, however, one of the ladies, whose case had been specially reported upon by the Vice-Consul, and who is described in the correspondence as Sister Smith, had been discharged from the asylum, and sent to the Mill Hill Convent at Hendon, under circumstances which will be found explained in Consul-General Hertslet's despatches of the 18th, 19th, and 21st May (Papers H, I, and K).

As a result of their investigation, the two Visiting Commissioners were satisfied (see letter marked L) that all the British subjects then detained in the Bon Sauveur Asylum were of unsound mind, and were proper cases for detention, with the exception of Mrs. Crosby, who, although insane, might, in their opinion, if properly looked after, be treated out of an asylum. The Commissioners reported that "Although the Medical certificates upon which solely the patients were admitted into the asylum were much less explicit than would have been the case with such certificates under the English law, the arrangements under the French law which regulated their subsequent detention and discharge seemed to be sufficient to safeguard the liberty of the subject." On the other hand, they found that both Mrs. Crosby and Sister Smith —the only persons, apparently, from whom it was possible to gather any information on this point—were undoubtedly induced to leave England by misrepresentation. This aspect of the case appeared to Lord Salisbury sufficiently serious to call for some further investigation, and the Commissioners in Lunacy were accordingly consulted as to what further action, if any, could usefully be taken in the matter.

In reply to this inquiry, Lord Salisbury has received from the Commissioners a letter (Paper N), in which they suggest that before proceeding any further, it would be desirable to consider generally the question of the deportation from this country of British subjects who are of unsound mind, in order to determine exactly how far, if at all, such deportation is under any circumstances legal. The questions arising in this connection are, according to the Commissioners, the following, namely:—

1. Is it an offence against the English common law forcibly to remove to an asylum abroad, with a view to certification there, a person of unsound mind, who has not been certified as a lunatic in this country?

2. Is it an offence against the English common law forcibly to remove from this country a person of unsound mind, who has been so certified?

3. Is it an offence against the English common law to induce, by misrepresentation, a person of unsound mind, who is not under certificates, to leave this country with a view to place such person in an asylum abroad?

4. Is it an offence against the English common law to induce, by misrepresenta-

Case for the Opinion of the Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Marriage Act, 1892.

(55 & 56 Vict., cap. 23.)

Prosecution for false declaration at a Consular marriage.

THE following is a copy of a letter addressed to the Director of Public Prosecutions by the Foreign Office:—

"Sir,

"Foreign Office, May 13, 1897.

"I am directed by the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs to transmit to you the correspondence noted in the accompanying list relative to a marriage solemnized at Her Majesty's Consulate General at Antwerp on the 23rd February last, between Charles Verner Wallace Russell and Mena Dorothea Dyas, both British subjects.

"The attention of the Secretary of State was first called to this case by the Registrar-General for Ireland in his letter of the 15th March, transmitting papers to show that at the time of the marriage ceremony at the English church at Antwerp, which is reported to have taken place on the 16th February, subsequently to the civil ceremony at the Consulate General under 'The Foreign Marriage Act, 1892,' Mr. Russell was a minor, and stating that the latter had previously attempted to obtain a marriage licence at Dublin, when, owing to his inability to produce the consent of his father to the intended marriage, his application was refused.

"The Secretary of State called upon Consul-General Perry for a Report on the matter, which was duly furnished in the despatch dated the 27th March. It appeared from this Report that the formal provisions of 'The Foreign Marriage Act, 1892,' and of 'The Foreign Marriages Order in Council, 1892,' were properly complied with, both parties (amongst other things) making a declaration that they were not under the age of 21 years.

"In the light of the information given in the letter from the Registrar-General for Ireland of the 14th ultimo, there seems little, if any, room for doubt that Mr. Russell knowingly and wilfully made a false declaration as to his age, thereby bringing himself within the scope of section 15 of the Act of 1892, in which it is provided that:—

"'If a person (a) knowingly and wilfully makes a false oath or signs a false notice under this Act . . . . . . such person shall suffer the penalties of perjury.'

"The case appears to the Secretary of State to be one of considerable aggravation, in which it may be desirable in the public interest to institute proceedings against Mr. Russell if an opportunity presents itself of doing so with a reasonable chance of success.

"I am therefore to request that you will take this correspondence into your consideration, and take such action in the case as you may think advisable.

"I am, &c.

(Signed) "F. H. VILLIERS.

"The Director of Public Prosecutions."

The documents forwarded with that letter are sent herewith, and disclose an offence against section 15 of the above Act by Charles V. W. Russell.

The case is of its kind rather a bad one, and the Director would probably have felt it his duty to institute proceedings, but on looking at the words of section 15, giving the English jurisdiction, it appeared to him doubtful whether process could be issued in England for the arrest of a person residing—as is the case here—in Ireland or residing in Scotland, so that the accused might be arrested on such warrant and brought from a place where he could not, to a place in which he could, be tried.

1897

Having regard to this, the Director of Public Prosecutions conferred with Sir John Bridge on the subject, who wrote as follows:—

"My dear Cuffe, "Police Court, Bow Street, May 20, 1897.

"I think that no warrant for the apprehension of a man living at Dublin ought to be granted where the information shows only a false oath under 'The Foreign Marriage Act, 1892,' taken abroad, and does not show that the alleged offender is in the county where the warrant is applied for. Warrants can only be granted where the offence is committed within the jurisdiction of the Magistrate who grants it, or where the offender is within his jurisdiction (11 & 12 Vict., cap. 42, sec. 1). The words of section 15 of 'The Foreign Marriage Act, 1892,' do not authorize any such warrant, and if a warrant were issued an action would, in my opinion, lie against the Magistrate issuing it, and no prudent Magistrate would render himself liable to such an action unless it were absolutely necessary.

"Believe me, &c.
(Signed) "J. BRIDGE."

And the following letter, addressed to Mr. Davidson of the Foreign Office, states the views of the Director of Public Prosecutions, and the result of his communication with the Chief Magistrate:—

"Re C. V. W. Russell.—Foreign Marriage Act, 1892.

"Dear Davidson, "Treasury, May 21, 1897.

"With reference to the Foreign Office letter to me of the 13th May, asking me to take the above case into consideration, and take such action as I think advisable, I do not suppose the Foreign Office want any official report as to what I am doing, but I think it may be convenient to let you know how the matter stands. That an offence under section 15 of 'The Foreign Marriage Act, 1892' (55 & 56 Vict., cap. 23), has been committed appears to be clear, and the case is, of its kind, a bad one, so that if it were practicable to do so, I should have felt it my duty to institute proceedings in respect of that offence.

"When, however, I came to look at the words of the Statute, I felt considerable doubt whether it was possible for me to take any action. The offender lives in Ireland, and, for some reason which it is not quite easy to understand without knowing the history of the Statute, the jurisdiction for trying an offence under that section is limited to counties in England, so that no proceedings can be instituted against him by the Irish authorities in their Courts. The question then arose whether, under that section, a warrant could be issued by a Magistrate in England, sent to Ireland, and executed, and the accused brought within the jurisdiction of an English Court, in order to be tried there in due course of law.

"Where a general jurisdiction of this kind is given, there are generally some words of limitation, e.g., in bigamy and forgery an offender may be tried wherever he may be apprehended or be in custody, and under the Foreign Enlistment Act for all purposes of trial and punishment the offence may be deemed to have been committed in any place within Her Majesty's dominions in which the person who committed such offence may be. No such words are to be found in section 15 of 'The Foreign Marriage Act, 1892,' and the question arose as to whether the concluding words of that section were sufficiently wide to admit of a Magistrate here issuing a warrant or other process under section 1 of 11 & 12 Vict., cap. 42.

"I thought the point by no means clear, but the inclination of my mind was that, although it was arguable that such a course might be adopted, the sounder view was that it would hardly be safe for a Magistrate to adopt this course.

"I therefore put the circumstances informally before Sir John Bridge, Chief Magistrate, and discussed it with him, and, to a certain extent, with Mr. Lushington, another Magistrate at Bow Street. He took time to consider the point, and now writes to me that, in his opinion, no warrant for the apprehension of a man living at Dublin ought to be granted where the information shows a false oath under 'The Foreign Marriage Act, 1892,' taken abroad, and does not show that the alleged offender is in the county where the warrant is applied for. He points out that, under section I of the Act of 1848, to which I have already referred, warrants can only be granted where the offence is committed within the jurisdiction of the Magistrate who grants it, or where the offender is within his jurisdiction, and is of opinion that the words of section 15 of the Foreign Marriage Act do not authorize any such warrant, so that, in his opinion, if a warrant were issued, an action would lie against the Magistrate issuing it.

"I do not remember whether you were at the Foreign Office at the time the Act was passed, but it would be interesting to know why the jurisdiction was limited to England, and whether the question of the insertion of any words of limitation, such as exist in the other Statutes to which I have referred, was considered by those who drew the Bill.

"Yours very truly,
(Signed) "H. CUFFE.

"W. E. Davidson, Esq., Q.C., C.B.,
"Foreign Office."

On receipt of the Director's letter, Mr. Davidson communicated with Sir Henry Jenkyns, and forwarded to the Director the following letter from Sir Henry:—

"Office of the Parliamentary Counsel,
"Dear Davidson, "3, Whitehall Gardens, May 25, 1897.

"Ilbert and I have looked at Cuffe's letter to you as to 'The Foreign Marriage Act, 1892.'

"You will recollect that the Act of 1892 was purely a Consolidation Act, and section 15 reproduced almost exactly the old section 16 of the Act of 1849 respecting the punishment of perjury.

"We have, of course, no information as to the reasons which, in 1848, led to the framing of that section in its present shape.

"We think, however, that it is quite open to argument that the effect of the section is to declare that the offence shall be deemed to have been committed within the jurisdiction of any Magistrate in England, and that, therefore, he can issue a warrant for the man's arrest as if the offence had been actually there committed.

"The matter is of so much importance that I suppose you will take the Law Officers' opinion on the subject.

"Yours truly,
(Signed) "H. JENKYNS."

If the section empowers a Magistrate of any county in England to issue a warrant, whether the alleged offender is or is not actually within the limits of his jurisdiction, he might not only do so in such a case as this, but, if the offender were living, say, in Cornwall, a prosecutor might get the warrant in Northumberland.

In fact, a prosecutor might choose any county he liked irrespective of any consideration of fairness to the prisoner, if the effect is such as is suggested here.

It would appear, unless there are any political or other considerations of expediency against it, that the simplest way out of the difficulty would be to substitute "United Kingdom" for "England," and give the jurisdiction wherever the accused may be.

The Attorney- and Solicitor-General are requested to advise—

Whether the view taken by the Chief Magistrate and the Director of Public Prosecutions should be accepted as the correct view.

If so, whether they recommend legislation on the subject.

Opinion.

We are of opinion that the view taken by the Chief Magistrate and the Director of Public Prosecutions is correct.

We recommend legislation in the sense proposed; the actual form of enactment should be carefully considered, so as to express clearly that proceedings may be taken in any county of the United Kingdom in which the person charged may happen to be.

tion, a person of unsound mind who is under certificates, to leave this country for the purpose of placing such person in an asylum abroad?

The Commissioners entertain but little doubt as to the correct answer to the first two of the above questions, calling attention in this regard to the case of Mary Ryan, referred to in the 19th Report of the Commissioners in Lunacy to the Lord Chancellor (1865), of which a copy will be found among the annexed papers (marked O).

I am to request that you will take the subject of this correspondence into your consideration, and favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion on the points raised in the four questions formulated by the Commissioners in Lunacy, and that you will at the same time add any other observations of a more general nature which you may desire to offer on the papers.

Report.

In our opinion the first and second of the questions formulated by the Commissioners must be answered in the affirmative.

The third and fourth questions as they are put must be answered in the negative. Such a misrepresentation could not by itself be made the subject of criminal proceedings. An indictment would, however, lie for a conspiracy by several persons to induce by misrepresentations a lunatic, whether certificated or not, to go abroad with a view to deprive him of the protection of English law, and have him confined in an asylum, by taking advantage of a system of foreign law less favourable, on this point, to the liberty of the subject, than the English law.

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen,

Foreign Office, October 22, 1897.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, the accompanying papers relating to the detention and imprisonment of Mr. Philip Sidney Stott at Bocholt, in Westphalia, in the months of October and November 1895.

Imprisonment of Mr. P. S. Stott. Claim for compensation.

Sometime in the early part of 1895, Mr. Stott was approached by Messrs. Summer and Co., of Manchester, Continental Agents, who requested him to prepare certain plans and designs for the erection of a cotton spinning mill at Bocholt, for M. Franz Bechmann.

Mr. Stott's instructions were merely to design the structure, for which purpose he was given the dimensions of the site, the number of floors of which the building was to consist, and a description of the machinery which it was proposed to set up; and he was informed that he was to make his calculations on the same basis as if he were designing a similar structure for erection on firm ground in England.

The plans were duly made, and forwarded by post to Messrs. Summer and Co. in Manchester. In the month of August 1895, Mr. Stott received payment for his services from Messrs. Summer and Co., and so far the transaction was accordingly completed. The whole of the contract was between Mr. Stott and Messrs. Summer, and Messrs. Summer's instructions were Mr. Stott's sole guide in designing his plans.

In the month of October 1895, Mr. Stott, being on business in Germany, decided to call at Bocholt to see the mill which had been erected from the plans he had thus furnished. No request had been made that he should undertake, nor was it any part of the arrangement, or of his duty to undertake, such a journey; and it was so undertaken entirely at his own cost, and merely to satisfy his personal desire for information.

On his arriving at Bocholt on the 9th October, 1895, he saw Bechmann, the owner, and with him went to the mill, and he was told by him that the mill was in every respect satisfactory. It has since appeared, however, that the building was erected on moving sand.

Whilst Mr. Stott was on the premises the building fell, and many persons were killed, and others injured.

The owner was arrested, and Mr. Stott was told that his evidence would be required at the Court of Inquiry, and that he must not leave the town. On the following day—10th October—he gave his evidence, and was informed that further evidence would be required of him, and that he must stay for a day or two longer. The following day—11th October—he was arrested and again examined; he was then told that he would be free to leave the town at the end of the week. By this time it was clearly in evidence that Mr. Stott had no control over the men on the building at the time of the accident, but be was nevertheless detained in the common gaol.

The reason assigned for Mr. Stott's detention was that he had rendered himself liable to two charges under the Imperial German Criminal Code of Procedure, viz:—

1. That in completing the design for the mill he had contravened the general well-known rules of architecture in such a manner as to entail danger to others.

2. That his negligence caused the death of several persons, and injury to others.

During the months of October and November Her Majesty's Embassy at Berlin, acting under instructions from the Marquess of Salisbury, applied to the German Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs for his good offices in order to obtain Mr. Stott's release, and informed his Excellency that Mr. Knott, Mr. Stott's solicitor, was personally prepared to undertake that his client would return to Germany when equired, and to give a bond to that effect to any amount deemed necessary.

The local authorities, however, in view of the very serious loss of life caused by the collapse of the cotton mill, and of the (in their view) strong presumption that Mr. Stott was wholly or in part responsible for the accident, were of opinion that it would be contrary to the provisions of the law to release Mr. Stott, whatever bail might be offered.

At this time Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Berlin questioned Mr. Knott as to Mr. Stott's treatment in prison, and he was assured that on this point there was no ground for complaint.

On the 11th November (1895) Mr. Gosselin was informed by an official of the German Foreign Office that the result of the preliminary inquiry into the case had proved so unfavourable to Mr. Stott that the examining Magistrate had ordered his committal for trial, and would not accept bail; and, according to a Memorandum communicated by the Prussian Minister of Justice, the actual condition of things on the scene of the disaster after the removal of the debris led the judicial experts to believe that the iron frame work for which Mr. Stott was considered responsible had in general been designed without sufficient care, and that the catastrophe was partly caused by a serious defect of construction, for which they also held Mr. Stott responsible, namely, the absence of ribs ("rippen") at the base of the supporting iron pillars.

The Memorandum further explained that, although everything was being done to press forward the inquiry, and to keep the investigation clear of side issues, it would presumably embrace a considerable range, as it was evident that a number of causes had contributed to the final catastrophe, and that the circumstances were besides by no means of a simple nature.

In a later Memorandum it was stated that efforts were still being made to hasten as much as possible the course of the inquiry, but that its termination could not be expected immediately, owing to the dimensions which it had now assumed; that the depositions of witnesses were being constantly taken; that specimens of masonry, concrete, &c., were being submitted to the examination of the Experimental School at Charlottenburg; that this and other information had to be obtained before the judicial experts could make a complete report; and that it had only been possible to carry on the preliminary inquiry systematically since the 29th and 30th October, when, after the removal of the debris, the facts of the case had been ascertained.

Instructions were, however, given to the State authorities to take Mr. Stott's petition for release on bail again into consideration, should the grounds of incrimination appear to be in any degree lessened in the course of the preliminary inquiry.

In consequence of the refusal to release Mr. Stott on bail, it was necessary to enter into the details of the plans and calculations which the German authorities stated to have been at fault. German and English engineers were employed on his behalf, numerous documents were prepared to prove him to be a capable designer and to have acted as architect for some of the largest cotton mills in Lancashire, and considerable expense was incurred in rebutting the charges.

On the 30th November Mr. Gosselin was able to announce that a renewed inspection of the locality and a further inquiry into the facts had somewhat weakened the case against Mr. Stott, that the judicial experts were no longer unanimous in the opinion that an error in construction, for which he could be held responsible, was partly the cause of the disaster, and that Mr. Stott had been released on bail on the 22nd of that month upon depositing a sum of 10,000 marks and upon giving his word of honour to present himself for trial when required.

On receipt of this announcement Mr. Gosselin was authorized, should he think it expedient, to offer the thanks of Her Majesty's Government to the German Government for their courtesy in keeping him informed of the proceedings and for their promise to continue to do so.

The next intelligence which reached this Office on the subject of the case was contained in a despatch from Mr. Gosselin, dated 9th May, 1896, which announced that proceedings against Mr. Stott for an offence against sections 330, 222, and 73 of the Imperial Criminal Code had been finally dropped, on the ground that the act of which he was accused was committed outside German territory.

In September 1896 Mr. Knott, Mr. Stott's solicitor, forwarded a general statement of the case, in the hope that the Secretary of State might find in it a sufficient cause for diplomatic intervention.

It appears from this statement that, after the preliminary proceedings already referred to, the Public Prosecutor drew up an indictment, and a trial took place before the Landsgericht at Münster in the month of March 1896. By the Judgment of that Court Mr. Stott was discharged from the case. The following is an extract from the Judgment:—

"The defendant, Philip Sidney Stott, architect, of Oldham, is struck out of the case as regards the charges brought against him under section 196 St. P. O. The warrant for his arrest is withdrawn."

* * * * * *

"As regards the two charges under sections 222 and 230 of the Imperial Code of Criminal Law, a causal connection between the death or the bodily injury of the persons named in sections 1 and 2 respectively and the acts and work of the defendants Stott and Cremer, judging from the reports of Professor Krohn, Government Building Inspector Hillenkamp, and Niermann of the Imperial Board of Works, is not proved and cannot be proved.

"Professor Krohn, on pp. 46–47 of his Report, says:

"'But owing to the circumstance that the foundation of the pillars (four) was still worse than the ironwork, we cannot really make Mr. Stott responsible for the disaster.'

1897

"And on pp. 51–52 :—

"'Accordingly, Mr. Stott cannot be made responsible, nor partially responsible, for the great extent of the disaster and the speed with which it took place.'

"Hillenkamp, the Inspector of Buildings, on p. 10 of his Report says :—

"'I also answer the question whether defects and mistakes in the plans occasioned or contributed to bring about the disaster in the negative.'

"Building inspector Niermann expresses it on p. 7 only as being probable that faults in the cast-iron portions assisted in bringing about and enlarging the extent of the disaster and the rapidity with which it happened.

"With regard to the accusation under section 330 of the Imperial Code of Criminal Law the defendant cannot be regarded as Manager and contractor in the sense of the aforesaid reading of the law.

"According to this, proof was no longer required as to whether, according to section 4 of the Criminal Code, a criminal prosecution of the defendant Stott was permissible in Germany. Nor was it necessary to allow the application made by the counsel for the defendants Stott and Cremer that an arrangement should be made for the receiving of evidence before a decision was arrived at concerning the opening of the trial, although this cannot be regarded as of no importance."

The Public Prosecutor thereupon appealed from that decision to the Oberlandesgericht at Hanau, and the President of this Court dismissed the appeal, and in giving Judgment not only confirmed the decision on the grounds then given, but also on the further and more important ground that the entire contract was performed and fully completed in England and outside the jurisdiction of the German Courts of Law.

It is contrary to custom in Germany to allow costs to successful litigants, and Mr. Stott has accordingly had to bear the whole heavy cost entailed on him by these proceedings.

According to the opinion of a very eminent counsel in Rhenish Prussia, no action could be had against the German authorities, but he advised that the case was one for diplomatic intervention.

In consequence of his imprisonment Mr. Stott suffered in health, and he also suffered heavily in a pecuniary way, through the interruption and loss of business, as well as in reputation through the stigma cast upon him by his arrest. It is estimated that his losses in actual payment out of pocket, combined with his loss in business, amount to over 2,500*l.*, and for that sum his solicitor suggests that a claim should be preferred against the German Government. It is contended that the arrest, and most certainly the continued detention, were improper and unwarrantable; that the German authorities throughout the whole of the negotiations with them have stated the reason or cause of detention to be the supposed fault in the plans drawn and calculations made by Mr. Stott, and that at the end of the proceedings it was advanced as a reason for his dismissal from the case, that the act of which he was accused was committed outside German territory: a plea adduced in defence at the outset.

In conclusion, Lord Salisbury feels that he cannot do better than to quote the concise expression of Dr. Bloem, the imminent counsel above alluded to, viz., that according to the judgment of the "Oberlandesgericht," no prosecution should have taken place, and that according to the decision of the "Straf-Kammer," no blame attached to Mr. Stott.

Lord Salisbury requests that you will be good enough to take these papers into consideration, and that you will favour him with your opinion as to whether, having regard to all the circumstances of the case, Her Majesty's Government may properly represent the matter to the Imperial German Government as one in regard to which Mr. Stott has an equitable claim for compensation at their hands; and (2) if so, what sum might fairly be put forward as reasonable; and (3) on what grounds could the claim be most advantageously supported.

His Lordship would also be glad to be favoured at the same time with any observations of a more general nature which you may have to offer on the matter.

I have, &c.
(Signed) FRANCIS BERTIE.

Report.

In our opinion Mr. Stott's claim cannot be pressed as a matter of right.

There is absolutely nothing to show that the proceedings against him were malicious.

Such a claim might be supported as against a foreign Government responsible for the acts of its officials, if the prosecution was the result of gross negligence on their part. It does not, however, appear to us that there is any sufficient evidence of such negligence.

The prosecutor appears to have been in the first instance informed by the experts that the disaster was the result of great negligence in the plans, and although this was disproved on further inquiry, he cannot be blamed for acting in accordance with the view of the experts who advised him.

The prosecution in the Court of Appeal broke down on the ground that as the plans were prepared in England, Mr. Stott could not be tried in Germany. The Court of First Instance abstained from expressing any opinion on the point, and the Court of Appeal treat it as one that had given rise to some difference of opinion.

The proposition that a man who, in one country, negligently prepares a plan which he sends to another country in order that the building may be there carried out, may be tried in the latter if death results from his negligence, is not, in our opinion, repugnant to common sense or international comity. We cannot say that we think that the facts before us show that there was such negligence on the part of the German Prosecutor in this respect as to justify Her Majesty's Government in pressing the claim for compensation as one of right.

The case is, no doubt, one of very great hardship. Mr. Stott was arrested and tried on a charge which turned out to be without foundation, and which, in the opinion of the Court of Appeal, would not have justified a prosecution even if true.

The German Government may think the case one for equitable consideration. But for the reasons we have given we do not regard Mr. Stott's claim as one that can be supported by diplomatic pressure by Her Majesty's Government.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, April 20, 1897.

Turco-Greek War. Neutrality Proclamation, &c.

HER Majesty's Government have received intelligence from Her Majesty's Representatives at Constantinople and at Athens, as well as from the Turkish Ambassador at this Court, that war has unfortunately broken out between Turkey and Greece. Her Majesty being resolved to maintain the strictest neutrality between the belligerent Powers, I am directed by the Marquess of Salisbury to request that you will immediately take into your consideration the annexed draft (A) of a Royal Proclamation to be issued to that effect, and also draft (B) of letters to the Boards of Admiralty and Treasury, and to the Colonial Office, War Office, and India Office, announcing the same.

To facilitate the consideration of these documents, I am to transmit to you copies of those prepared in 1884* on the occasion of the hostilities then existing between France and China, which were approved by the Law Officers in their Report of the 2nd September, 1884, as well as of those prepared in 1894 on the occasion of hostilities then existing between China and Japan, which were approved by the Law Officers in their Report of the 2nd August, 1894.

L.O.R. 1884 (Conf. 5121), p. 40.

L.O.R. 1894 (Conf. 6641), p. 58.

It will be seen, on reference to the second paragraph of the draft Proclamation, marked (A), herewith inclosed, that the words "notwithstanding our utmost exertions to preserve peace between the two States" have been inserted. This phraseology appears to Lord Salisbury to be suitable to the circumstances that have preceded the present out break of hostilities. Language, somewhat similar, was employed in paragraph 2 of the Proclamation issued by Her Majesty in 1877 on the occasion of the outbreak of hostilities between Russia and Turkey. A copy of that Proclamation is also herewith inclosed.

Lord Salisbury would be glad to be informed, at your earliest convenience, whether the proposed drafts are, in your opinion, right and proper under the circumstances.

BY THE QUEEN.

A PROCLAMATION.

VICTORIA R.

WHEREAS We are happily at Peace with all Sovereigns, Powers, and States:

And whereas, notwithstanding Our utmost Exertions to preserve Peace between the two Sovereign Powers, a State of War unhappily exists between His Imperial Majesty the Sultan of Turkey and His Majesty the King of the Hellenes, and between their respective subjects and others inhabiting within their Countries, Territories, or Dominions:

And whereas We are on Terms of Friendship and amicable Intercourse with each of these Sovereigns, and with their several Subjects and others inhabiting within their Countries, Territories, or Dominions:

And whereas great Numbers of Our loyal subjects reside and carry on Commerce, and possess Property and Establishments, and enjoy various Rights and Privileges, within the Dominions of each of the aforesaid Sovereigns, protected by the Faith of Treaties between Us and each of the aforesaid Sovereigns:

And whereas We, being desirous of preserving to our Subjects the Blessings of Peace, which they now happily enjoy, are firmly purposed and determined to maintain a strict and impartial Neutrality in the said State of War unhappily existing between the aforesaid Sovereigns:

We, therefore, have thought fit, by and with the Advice of Our Privy Council, to issue this Our Royal Proclamation:

And We do hereby strictly charge and command all our loving Subjects to govern themselves accordingly, and to observe a strict Neutrality in and during the aforesaid War, and to abstain from violating or contravening either the Laws and Statutes of the Realm in this behalf, or the Law of Nations in relation thereto, as they will answer to the contrary at their Peril:

And whereas in and by a certain Statute made and passed in a Session of Parliament holden in the 33rd and 34th year of Our Reign, intituled "An Act to Regulate the conduct of Her Majesty's Subjects during the Existence of Hostilities between Foreign States with which Her Majesty is at Peace," it is, amongst other things, declared and enacted as follows. This Act shall extend to all the Dominions of Her Majesty, including the adjacent territorial Waters:—

"Illegal Enlistment.

"If any Person, without the Licence of Her Majesty, being a British Subject, within or without Her Majesty's Dominions, accepts or agrees to accept any Commission or Engagement in the Military or Naval Service of any Foreign State at War with any Foreign State at Peace with Her Majesty, and in this Act referred to as a friendly State, or, whether a British Subject or not, within Her Majesty's Dominions, induces any other Person to accept or agree to accept any Commission or Engagement in the Military or Naval Service of any such Foreign State as aforesaid,—

"He shall be guilty of an Offence against this Act, and shall be punishable by Fine and Imprisonment, or either of such Punishments, at the Discretion of the Court before which the Offender is convicted; and Imprisonment, if awarded, may be either with or without Hard Labour.

"If any Person, without the Licence of Her Majesty, being a British Subject, quits or goes on board any ship with a view of quitting Her Majesty's Dominions, with intent to accept any Commission or Engagement in the Military or Naval Service of any Foreign State at War with a friendly State, or, whether a British Subject or not, within Her Majesty's Dominions, induces any other Person to quit or go on board any Ship with a view of quitting Her Majesty's Dominions with the like Intent,—

"He shall be guilty of an Offence against this Act, and shall be punishable by Fine and Imprisonment, or either of such punishments, at the Discretion of the Court before which the Offender is convicted; and Imprisonment, if awarded, may be either with or without Hard Labour.

"If any Person induces any other Person to quit Her Majesty's Dominions or to embark on any Ship within Her Majesty's Dominions under a Misrepresentation or false Representation of the Service in which such Person is to be engaged, with the Intent or in order that such Person may accept or agree to accept any Commission or Engagement in the Military or Naval Service of any Foreign State at War with a friendly State,—

"He shall be guilty of an Offence against this Act, and shall be punishable by Fine and Imprisonment, or either of such Punishments, at the Discretion of the Court before which the Offender is convicted; and Imprisonment, if awarded, may be either with or without Hard Labour.

"If the Master or Owner of any Ship, without the Licence, of Her Majesty, knowingly either takes on board, or engages to take on board, or has on board such Ship within Her Majesty's Dominions any of the following Persons, in this Act referred to as illegally enlisted Persons; that is to say,—

"(1.) Any Person who, being a British Subject within or without the Dominions of Her Majesty, has, without the Licence of Her Majesty, accepted or agreed to accept any Commission or Engagement in the Military or Naval Service of any Foreign State at War with any friendly State:

"(2.) Any Person, being a British Subject who, without the Licence of Her Majesty, is about to quit Her Majesty's Dominions with intent to accept any Commission or Engagement in the Military or Naval Service of any Foreign State at War with a friendly State:

"(3.) Any Person who has been induced to embark under a Misrepresentation or false Representation of the Service in which such Person is to be engaged, with the Intent or in order that such Person may accept or agree to accept any Commission or Engagement in the Military or Naval Service of any Foreign State at War with a friendly State:

"Such Master or Owner shall be guilty of an Offence against this Act, and the following Consequences shall ensue; that is to say,—

"(1.) The Offender shall be punishable by Fine and Imprisonment, or either of such Punishments at the Discretion of the Court before which the Offender is convicted; and Imprisonment, if awarded, may be either with or without Hard Labour; and

"(2.) Such Ship shall be detained until the Trial and Conviction or Acquittal of the Master or Owner, and until all penalties inflicted on the Master or Owner have been paid, or the Master or Owner has given Security for the Payment of such Penalties to the Satisfaction of Two Justices of the Peace, or other Magistrate or Magistrates having the Authority of Two Justices of the Peace; and

"(3.) All illegally enlisted Persons shall, immediately on the Discovery of the Offence, be taken on Shore, and shall not be allowed to return to the Ship.

"Illegal Shipbuilding and Illegal Expeditions.

"If any Person within Her Majesty's Dominions, without the Licence of Her Majesty, does any of the following Acts; that is to say,—

"(1.) Builds or agrees to build, or causes to be built, any Ship with Intent or Knowledge, or having reasonable cause to believe that the same shall or will be employed in the Military or Naval Service of any Foreign State at War with any friendly State; or

"(2.) Issues or delivers any Commission for any ship with Intent or Knowledge, or having reasonable cause to believe that the same shall or will be employed in the Military or Naval Service of any Foreign State at War with any friendly State; or

"(3.) Equips any Ship with Intent or Knowledge, or having reasonable cause to believe that the same shall or will be employed in the Military or Naval Service of any Foreign State at War with any friendly State; or

1897

"(4.) Dispatches, or causes or allows to be dispatched, any ship with Intent or Knowledge, or having reasonable cause to believe that the same shall or will be employed in the Military or Naval Service of any Foreign State at War with any friendly State:

"Such Person shall be deemed to have committed an offence against this Act, and the following Consequences shall ensue:

"(1.) The Offender shall be punishable by Fine or Imprisonment, or either of such Punishments, at the Discretion of the Court before which the Offender is convicted; and Imprisonment, if awarded, may be either with or without Hard Labour.

"(2.) The Ship in respect of which any such Offence is committed, and her Equipment, shall be forfeited to Her Majesty.

"Provided that a Person building, causing to be built, or equipping a ship in any of the Cases aforesaid, in pursuance of a Contract made before the commencement of such War as aforesaid, shall not be liable to any of the Penalties imposed by this Section in respect of such building or equipping if he satisfies the conditions following (that is to say),—

"(1.) If forthwith upon a Proclamation of Neutrality being issued by Her Majesty he gives Notice to the Secretary of State that he is so building, causing to be built, or equipping such Ship, and furnishes such Particulars of the Contract and of any Matters relating to, or done, or to be done under the Contract as may be required by the Secretary of State:

"(2.) If he gives such Security, and takes and permits to be taken such other measures, if any, as the Secretary of State may prescribe for ensuring that such Ship shall not be dispatched, delivered, or removed without the Licence of Her Majesty until the termination of such War as aforesaid.

"Where any Ship is built by Order of or on behalf of any Foreign State when at War with a friendly State, or is delivered to or to the Order of such Foreign State, or any person who to the Knowledge of the Person building is an Agent of such Foreign State, or is paid for by such Foreign State or such Agent, and is employed in the Military or Naval Service of such Foreign State, such Ship shall, until the contrary is proved, be deemed to have been built with a view to being so employed, and the Burden shall lie on the Builder of such Ship of proving that he did not know that the Ship was intended to be so employed in the Military or Naval Service of such Foreign State.

"If any Person within the Dominions of Her Majesty, and without the Licence of Her Majesty,—

"By adding to the number of the Guns, or by changing those on board for other Guns, or by the addition of any Equipment for War, increases or augments, or procures to be increased or augmented, or is knowingly concerned in increasing or augmenting the warlike Force of any Ship which at the time of her being within the Dominions of Her Majesty was a Ship in the Military or Naval Service of any Foreign State at War with any friendly State,—

"Such Person shall be guilty of an Offence against this Act, and shall be punishable by Fine and Imprisonment, or either of such Punishments, at the Discretion of the Court before which the Offender is convicted; and Imprisonment, if awarded, may be either with or without Hard Labour.

"If any Person within the limits of Her Majesty's Dominions, and without the licence of Her Majesty,—

"Prepares or fits out any Naval or Military Expedition to proceed against the Dominions of any friendly State, the following consequences shall ensue:—

"(1.) Every Person engaged in such Preparation or fitting out, or assisting therein, or employed in any Capacity in such Expedition, shall be guilty of an Offence against this Act, and shall be punishable by Fine and Imprisonment, or other of such Punishments, at the Discretion of the Court before which the Offender is convicted; and Imprisonment, if awarded, may be either with or without Hard Labour.

"(2.) All Ships and their Equipments, and all Arms and Munitions of War, used in or forming Part of such Expedition, shall be forfeited to Her Majesty.

"Any Person who aids, abets, counsels, or procures the Commission of any Offence against this Act shall be liable to be tried and punished as a principal Offender."

And whereas by the said Act it is further provided that Ships built, commissioned, equipped, or dispatched in contravention of the said Act, may be condemned and forfeited by Judgment of the Court of Admiralty; and that if the Secretary of State or Chief Executive Authority is satisfied that there is a reasonable and probable cause for believing that a Ship within Our Dominions has been or is being built, commissioned, or equipped, contrary to the said Act, and is about to be taken beyond the Limits of such Dominions, or that a Ship is about to be dispatched contrary to the Act, such Secretary of State, or Chief Executive Authority, shall have Power to issue a Warrant authorizing the Seizure and Search of such Ship and her Detention until she has been either condemned or released by Process of Law. And whereas certain Powers of Seizure and Detention are conferred by the said Act on certain Local Authorities;

Now, in order that none of Our Subjects may unwarily render themselves liable to the Penalties imposed by the said Statute, We do hereby strictly command that no Person or Persons whatsoever do commit any Act, Matter, or Thing whatsoever contrary to the Provisions of the said Statute, upon pain of the several Penalties by the said Statute imposed, and of Our high Displeasure.

And We do hereby further warn and admonish all Our loving Subjects, and all Persons whatsoever entitled to Our Protection, to observe towards each of the aforesaid Sovereigns, their Subjects and Territories, and towards all Belligerents whatsoever with whom we are at Peace, the Duties of Neutrality; and to respect, in all and each of them, the Exercise of those Belligerent Rights which We and Our Royal Predecessors have always claimed to exercise.

And We hereby further warn all Our loving Subjects, and all Persons whatsoever entitled to Our Protection, that if any of them shall presume, in contempt of this Our Royal Proclamation, and of Our high Displeasure, to do any Acts in derogation of their Duty as Subjects of a Neutral Sovereign in a War between other Sovereigns, or in violation or contravention of the Law of Nations in that Behalf, as more especially by breaking, or endeavouring to break, any Blockade lawfully and actually established by or on behalf of either of the said Sovereigns, or by carrying Officers, Soldiers, Despatches, Arms, Ammunition, Military Stores or Materials, or any Article or Articles considered and deemed to be Contraband of War according to the Law or modern Usages of Nations, for the Use or Service of either of the said Sovereigns, that all Persons so offending, together with their Ships and Goods, will rightfully incur and be justly liable to hostile Capture, and to the Penalties denounced by the Law of Nations in that Behalf.

And We do hereby give Notice that all Our Subjects and Persons entitled to Our Protection who may misconduct themselves in the Premises will do so at their Peril, and of their own wrong; and that they will in no wise obtain any Protection from Us against such Capture or such Penalties as aforesaid, but will, on the contrary, incur Our high Displeasure by such Misconduct.

Given at Our Court at , this day of April, in the year of Our Lord one thousand eight hundred and ninety-seven, in the sixtieth year of Our reign.

GOD SAVE THE QUEEN!

*The Marquess of Salisbury to the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty.

My Lords, Foreign Office, May , 1897.

HER Majesty being fully determined to observe the duties of neutrality during the existing state of war between His Imperial Majesty the Sultan of Turkey and His Majesty the King of the Hellenes, and being, moreover, resolved to prevent, as far as possible, the use of Her Majesty's harbours, ports, and coasts and the waters within Her Majesty's territorial jurisdiction in aid of the warlike purposes of either belligerent, has commanded me to communicate to your Lordships, for your guidance, the following Rules, which are to be treated and enforced as Her Majesty's orders and directions:—

Her Majesty is pleased further to command that these Rules shall be put in force in the United Kingdom, the Isle of Man, and the Channel Islands, on and after the and in Her Majesty's territories and possessions beyond the seas six days after the day when the Governor or other chief authority of each of such territories or possessions respectively shall have notified and published the same; stating in such notification that the said Rules are to be obeyed by all persons within the same territories and possessions.

During the continuance of the present state of war, all ships of war of either belligerent are prohibited from making use of any port or roadstead in the United Kingdom, the Isle of Man, or the Channel Islands, or in any of Her Majesty's Colonies or foreign possessions or dependencies, or of any waters subject to the territorial jurisdiction of the British Crown, as a station or place of resort for any warlike purpose, or for the purpose of obtaining any facilities for warlike equipment; and no ship of war of either belligerent shall hereafter be permitted to sail out of or leave any port, roadstead, or waters, subject to British jurisdiction, from which any vessel of the other belligerent (whether the same shall be a ship of war or a merchant-ship) shall have previously departed until after the expiration of at least twenty-four hours from the departure of such last-mentioned vessel beyond the territorial jurisdiction of Her Majesty.

2. If any ship of war of either belligerent shall, after the time when this Order shall be first notified and put in force in the United Kingdom, the Isle of Man, and the Channel Islands, and in the several Colonies and foreign possessions or dependencies of Her Majesty respectively, enter any port, roadstead, or waters belonging to Her Majesty, either in the United Kingdom, the Isle of Man, or the Channel Islands, or in any of Her Majesty's Colonies or foreign possessions or dependencies, such vessel shall be required to depart and to put to sea within twenty-four hours after her entrance into such port, roadstead, or waters, except in case of stress of weather, or of her requiring provisions or things necessary for the subsistence of her crew, or repairs; in either of which cases the authorities of the port, or of the nearest port (as the case may be), shall require her to put to sea as soon as possible after the expiration of such period of twenty-four hours, without permitting her to take in supplies beyond what may be necessary for her immediate use; and no such vessel which may have been allowed to remain within British waters for the purpose of repair shall continue in any such port, roadstead, or waters, for a longer period than twenty-four hours after her necessary repairs shall have been completed. Provided, nevertheless, that in all cases in which there shall be any vessel (whether ships of war or merchant-ships) of the said belligerent parties in the same port, roadstead, or waters within the territorial jurisdiction of Her Majesty, there shall be an interval of not less than twenty-four hours between the departure therefrom of any such vessel (whether a ship of war or merchant-ship) of the one belligerent and the subsequent departure therefrom of any ship of war of the other belligerent; and the time hereby limited for the departure of such ships of war respectively shall always, in case of necessity, be extended so far as may be requisite for giving effect to this proviso, but no further or otherwise.

3. No ship of war of either belligerent shall hereafter be permitted, while in any port, roadstead, or waters subject to the territorial jurisdiction of Her Majesty, to take in any supplies, except provisions and such other things as may be requisite for the subsistence of her crew, and except so much coal only as may be sufficient to carry such vessel to the nearest port of her own country, or to some nearer destination, and no coal shall again be supplied to any such ship of war in the same or any other port, roadstead, or waters subject to the territorial jurisdiction of Her Majesty, without special permission, until after the expiration of three months from the time when such coal may have been last supplied to her within British waters as aforesaid.

4. Armed ships of either party are interdicted from carrying prizes made by them into the ports, harbours, roadsteads, or waters of the United Kingdom, the Isle of Man, the Channel Islands, or any of Her Majesty's Colonies or possessions abroad.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, May 31, 1897.

Detention of British ss. "Naworth Castle" by Greek fleet.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit to you the papers noted in the accompanying list relating to the detention of the British steam-ship "Naworth Castle" by the Greek fleet.

It will be seen from the letter from the Glamorgan Coal Company (Paper A) that the "Naworth Castle" left Cardiff on the 22nd ultimo for Salonica with a full cargo of coal consigned to Inspector Steiner for the Ottoman Railway Company (Salonica-Monastir).

The vessel, according to the statement of the master, was stopped 2 miles off Cassandra Point on the 6th May at 10·15 A.M. by four Greek ships of war, and escorted by them to a bay 26 miles distant, where the master was taken to see the Greek Commander-in-chief. The latter, having ascertained from the master that he did not know that war had been declared between Turkey and Greece, sent the ship under escort to Volo Bay, and ordered the master to see the Greek Admiral who was stationed there. On arrival at Volo Bay on the 7th May the master saw the Admiral at 9 A.M. The Admiral first stated that he would have to commnnicate with his Government on the subject, but eventually an hour later on the same day he informed the Master verbally that he could go where he pleased provided he did not proceed to a Turkish port. The master then sailed for the Piræus, where he arrived on the 18th May, and delivered his cargo there.

The Glamorgan Coal Company inquire whether the Greek fleet acted within their rights in not only stopping the vessel, but in practically taking her into custody and preventing the delivery of the cargo at its destination according to the bill of lading.

It appears that the "Naworth Castle" was forcibly detained for about twenty-four hours after she was first stopped, and that when released she was forbidden to proceed to her port of destination.

It is also to be observed that the date on which the vessel was stopped (6th May) was two days previous to the date (8th May) on which the blockade of a portion of the littoral of the Gulf of Salonica was declared by the Greek Government to have been established (see notification in Supplement to "London Gazette," 14th May, 1897, Paper B), although it is gathered that the action of the Greek fleet was probably taken, and would possibly be justified, in connection with a search for contraband of war, rather than in connection with a blockade jure gentium of the Turkish coast-line.

The destination of the "Naworth Castle" was, quâ the arresting Greek fleet, undoubtedly hostile, and her cargo was at any rate ancipitis usûs."

The circumstances of the case would, therefore, as is thonght, have justified the bringing in of the vessel for adjudication before a Prize Court and the condemnation of the cargo as contraband, if such a Tribunal had found that the presumable use to which it would be put was hostile and not peaceful.

But no attempt was made to bring the vessel and cargo in for adjudication, and it is difficult to see by what Tribunal other than a Prize Court the question whether the cargo was contraband or not could be authoritatively decided.

In these circumstances, although the Greek fleet may have been justified in stopping the "Naworth Castle" and in examining into her cargo and destination, and in subsequently, at their option, taking her in for adjudication before a properly constituted Greek Prize Court, should such exist, it appears doubtful how far they were justified in detaining her after their examination was completed, for over twenty-four hours, and in diverting her from her course and port of destination in the manner described.

I have the honour to request that you will take these papers into your consideration, and will favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion as to whether, having regard to all the circumstances it is desirable from the point of view of international law that Her Majesty's Government should protest against, or make any reservations in regard to the proceedings of the Greek ships of war, and the subsequent action of the Greek naval authorities in the matter, and, if so, in what terms such protest or reservations should be couched.

His Lordship will be glad at the same time to be favoured with any observations of a general nature which you may desire to offer on the papers.

I have, &c.

Report.

In our opinion the proceedings of the Greek fleet with respect to the "Naworth Castle" were technically irregular.

The question whether the coal was contraband of war ought to have been decided by a Prize Court, and the Greek Commander had no right to forbid the landing of the coal at any Turkish port. It does not appear that the master of the "Naworth Castle" agreed to this to avoid being taken into port for adjudication.

The true doctrine with regard to coal appears to be that it may be contraband of war or not, according to its destination. It seems extremely probable that the coal in the present case was intended to be used in transporting the Turkish army to the front, and, if so, we think it would be held contraband of war just as much as coal intended to supply the enemy's men-of-war.

We cannot say that we think the case a strong one. If, as appears probable, the coal was contraband, the "Naworth Castle" was treated with leniency. On the other hand, the proceedings of the Greek fleet were technically irregular. But, on the whole, we do not think it a case in which Her Majesty's Government should make any representation to the Greek Government. It does not appear to be a case in which compensation could be insisted on, and it is hardly worth while formally to remonstrate against the technical irregularity which has been committed.

No. 20.

[November 30, 1897.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, November 18, 1897.

Gentlemen,

Wreck of "Utopia." Proceedings against owners in Italian Courts.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit to you herewith the papers noted in the accompanying list, relative to certain legal proceedings in the Italian Courts at Naples against the firm of Henderson Brothers, of Glasgow, as managing owners of the British steam-ship "Utopia," which foundered in Gibraltar Bay after a collision with Her Majesty's ship "Anson" on the 17th March, 1891.

The circumstances in which the disaster occurred are set forth in some detail in the letter from Messrs. Henderson, of the 4th February, 1897 (Paper marked B). The vessel was bound from Naples to New York, and was carrying a large number of Italian emigrants, most of whom lost their lives and property when the ship went down. A Marine Court held immediately after the occurrence at Gibraltar expressed the opinion that the captain of the "Utopia" had committed a grave error in judgment on the fatal occasion, but considered it unnecessary to deal in any way with the certificate, which was accordingly returned to him. The finding of the Naval Court is quoted at p. 5 of the English translation of the sentence pronounced on the 27th February, 1896, by the Naples Tribunal (of First Instance) which forms the first inclosure in Messrs. Henderson's above-mentioned letter (Paper B). The sentence proceeds to relate the origin and result of the action instituted in the Naples Court in 1891, a few months after the disaster, against the managers of the "Utopia" by the survivors of the wreck, and by the heirs of those who were lost.

The Court of First Instance on that occasion declared that it had no jurisdiction in the case. But this decision was reversed on appeal, and the action eventually renewed in the lower Court, whose Judgment, given nearly five years after the first commencement of proceedings, is the one already referred to above (Inclosure 1 in Paper B). This sentence was adverse to the defendants on all the main issues. It was in turn confirmed by the Court of Appeal on the 18th June, 1897, an English translation of whose Judgment will be found inclosed in Messrs. Henderson's letter of the 3rd August last (Paper Q).

Whilst the proceedings in the Court of Appeal were still pending, Messrs. Henderson made repeated representations to Her Majesty's Embassy at Rome and to this Department complaining of the grave and palpable injustice with which they had been and were being treated by the Neapolitan Courts, the corruptness of the Judges, and the practical impossibility of obtaining redress or relief in Italy by the ordinary process of law.

To these representations the Marquess of Salisbury replied that until Messrs. Henderson had exhausted all the legal remedies which might be open to them in the Italian Tribunals, and in addition found themselves in a position to establish, as a result of such recourse, a primâ facie case of denial or miscarriage of justice, no official representation could properly be made to the Italian Government on the subject of their complaint (letter to Messrs. Henderson of the 10th July, 1897, Paper L); and this decision was maintained and repeated to Messrs. Henderson in reply to further communications from them, made subsequently to the date of the sentence of the Naples Court of Appeal (letter to Messrs. Henderson of the 6th August, 1897, Paper R). For it appeared that the sentence in question, while stated to be, according to Italian law, final as regards all findings of fact, was susceptible of yet further appeal to the Court of Cassation at Naples on points of law. It is understood that one of the most important issues raised in the proceedings and decided by the sentence of the Court of Appeal in a sense unfavourable to the British firm, is that of the personal liability of the managers of the "Utopia" for the results of the disaster, and that this question is admitted to be one of law and therefore susceptible of further appeal. It has been pointed out, on the other hand, that the ground upon which the Court chiefly relied in declaring the managers to be personally liable. was the insufficiency of the coal supply and of the life-saving apparatus carried by the vessel, which insufficiency was found as a fact by the Court of Appeal.

It has been one of Messrs. Henderson's most strongly-urged grounds of complaint that the finding of the Court of First Instance, upheld by the sentence of the Court of Appeal on these issues of fact, constitutes a flagrant miscarrage of justice, since the Court, as they contend, avowedly disregarded, and refused to consider, the evidence tendered by them, and regarded as absolutely conclusive, both as to there having been a sufficiency of coal on board the vessel at the time of the collision, and as regards the completeness and efficiency of the life-saving apparatus carried by her. Messrs. Henderson further lay stress on the manner in which the whole proceedings have been conducted by a syndicate of lawyers pleading in formâ pauperis, but alleged to be connected by ties of interest with influential Members of the Italian Government. They point to the vexatious methods of procedure adopted by the plaintiffs, the continued and prolonged delays, owing to which the case has dragged on for over six years, and the apparent violation of some of the first principles of law and justice, as proof of the corrupt influences reigning within the Tribunals, and the malevolent spirit animating the plaintiffs in the action. In the face of this state of things they declare the uselessness of having any further recourse to the Neapolitan Courts in the matter, and renew their appeal to Her Majesty's Government to intervene on their behalf with the Italian Government, pointing out the grave consequences which they must apprehend from the execution, whether provisional or definitive, of the sentence of the Court of Appeal (letter from Messrs. Henderson of 4th October, 1897, Paper U).

The views held by Messrs. Henderson on the several points involved are also reflected in the notes on the sentence of the Court of First Instance (Inclosure 2 in their letter of the 4th February, 1897, Paper B), in a letter addressed to them by Messrs. Bannatyne, Kirkwood, France and Co. with reference to the sentence of the Court of Appeal (Inclosure 2 in Messrs. Henderson's letter of the 3rd August, 1897, Paper Q), and in an article which appeared in a Genoese Shipping Magazine, for which however they disclaim responsibility (Inclosure in their letter of the 4th October, Paper U).

To sum up:

The grounds, so far as they can be gathered, on which Messrs. Henderson chiefly rely in support of these contentions, appear to be as follows:—

1. The refusal of the Italian Court to allow Messrs. Henderson to produce evidence rebutting the finding of the Marine Court at Gibraltar, which finding, as they are advised, could not be accepted by, and could not even be utilized, before, an English Court in a civil action.

2. The absolute conclusiveness of the Board of Trade Certificate, even in an Italian Court, as to the sufficiency of the life-saving apparatus on board the "Utopia."

3. The purely technical ground, viz., the sale of tickets in Italy, on which the Italian Court claimed to exercise jurisdiction in the matter.

4. The attempt to saddle the owners with an unlimited liability in lieu of the limited liability on the tonnage scale, according to English law, as the law of the ship.

It has not been thought necessary for the moment to request Messrs. Henderson to furnish a comprehensive written statement of their case, but should you think this course desirable they can readily be asked to supply such a statement for your further consideration.

As the questions raised by the proceedings appear undoubtedly to be of the greatest moment to the general interests of British shipping, and as there seems some ground to apprehend—so far as can be judged from the materials laid before the Secretary of State—that there is a possibility of grave injustice being inflicted upon British subjects under the shadow of the decision of an Italian Court of Law, Lord Salisbury would be glad if you would take the whole matter into your consideration, and furnish him with your opinion as to whether in the circumstances either the assumption of jurisdiction by an Italian Tribunal over a British vessel in respect of an occurrence which took place within British territorial waters, or the sentences given by the Neapolitan Courts of First Instance and of Appeal, taken together with the facts disclosed and the statements made by and on behalf of Messrs. Henderson in regard thereto, can be held to constitute such a grievance or a denial or miscarriage of justice as would justify Her Majesty's Government in officially addressing a diplomatic representation to the Italian Government, and, if so, on what special grounds such a representation might most properly and advantageously be based.

Lord Salisbury would also be glad to receive any observations of a more general nature which you may desire to offer in regard to the case.

I have, &c.

(W.) Report of proceedings before, and decisions of, the Marine Court held at Gibraltar on March 23 and 25, 1891.

(X.) Case submitted by Henderson Bros. to, and opinion thereon given by, Sir R. Webster and Sir E. Clarke (1891).

Report.

In our opinion substantial injustice has been done to Messrs. Henderson by the proceedings in the Neapolitan Courts.

It would appear that according to Italian law the ship-owners would have been relieved from liability if they could have shown that the disaster was the result of mere accident, and was not occasioned by negligence, and that in any event, in the absence of personal negligence or obligation, on the surrender or abandonment of the ship, the owners are under no further liability.

On grounds which we are quite unable to understand the Court refused to allow them to adduce evidence on this head. We think that it is only in accordance with natural justice that Messrs. Henderson should have been allowed to adduce evidence of their case, and cannot regard as satisfactory the opinion of the Court that such evidence must have been useless.

We think that diplomatic representation may properly be made to the Italian Government as to the impropriety of allowing Messrs. Henderson to suffer by reason of a Judgment so obtained, provided that all means of redress open to them in the Italian Courts have been exhausted by Messrs. Henderson.

Before, however, such representations are made Messrs. Henderson ought to be required either to prosecute their appeal to the Court of Cassation, or to obtain the distinct opinion of Italian lawyers of eminence that an appeal to that Court would be useless. At present it does not appear with sufficient clearness that the Court of Cassation might not set the proceedings aside on the ground that the Courts below have erred in matter of law by refusing to admit the evidence tendered by Messrs. Henderson, or even reverse the Judgment on the ground that Messrs. Henderson are not liable upon the facts established before the Court.

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

(A.)

Gentlemen,

Foreign Office, January 21, 1897.

Trial of Mrs. Carew for murder at Yokohama. As to free pardon for Miss Jacobs.

I AM directed by the Marquess of Salisbury to transmit to you the papers, which are noted in the margin, with reference to certain points of difficulty and urgency which have arisen in connection with the conduct of the prosecution of Mrs. Walter Hallowell Carew before Her Majesty's Consular Court for Japan on a charge of wilful murder, and on which his Lordship is anxious to be favoured with your opinion and advice at your earliest possible convenience.

On the 24th October last an inquest was opened at Yokohama before Mr. Hall, Acting British Consul, sitting as Coroner, into the causes of the death of Mr. W. H. R. Carew, a British subject resident at that port. The jury returned the following open verdict:—

"We find that Walter Raymond Hallowell Carew died on the 22nd October, 1896, at the Royal Naval Hospital, from the effects of arsenic, but by whom the poison was administered there is no direct evidence to show."

The evidence was, however, of such a nature that Sir E. Satow, Her Majesty's Minister and Consul-General at Tôkiô, instructed Mr. Litchfield, the Crown Prosecutor in Japan, to take steps to bring about "a Magisterial inquiry before the Assistant Judge of Her Majesty's Court for Japan." This inquiry resulted in the committal of Edith May Hallowell Carew, wife of the deceased man, on a charge of wilful murder.

Reports extracted from a local newspaper of the proceedings before the Coroner and before the Assistant Judge are transmitted herewith.

In view of the grave nature of the charge, Sir E. Satow considered it necessary that the Crown should be represented at the trial by the Crown Advocate at Shanghae, in addition to Mr. Litchfield, and Mr. Wilkinson has accordingly been requested to proceed to Yokohama to act as leading Counsel for the prosecution.

The above facts were reported by Sir E. Satow in a despatch which reached this Department on the 5th instant. On the 14th of this month a telegram was received from him, a copy of which is annexed hereto, showing that the trial of Mrs. Carew is now proceeding in the Court for Japan, but that a point of difficulty has arisen in regard to the evidence to be given by one of the witnesses for the prosecution.

It will be seen, by a reference to the Reports of the proceedings before the Coroner and the Assistant Judge (Papers A and B), that one of the principal witnesses, if not the principal witness on whose evidence the prosecution relies, is Miss Mary Esther Jacobs, an English nursery governess, who was in the service of Mrs. Carew at the time of her husband's death.

It appears that while the trial of Mrs. Carew was actually pending before the Court for Japan, the prisoner's counsel preferred before the Assistant Judge a charge against Miss Jacobs, accusing her of the murder of Mr. W. R. Carew, and that she has been remanded until after the termination of the trial of Mrs. Carew. The result of this step has apparently been to render it impossible for the prosecution to obtain Miss Jacobs' evidence in that trial, it being understood that if Miss Jacobs were called on behalf of the Crown as a witness, she would decline to give evidence, on the ground presumably that, being herself under a criminal charge in respect of the same subject-matter, she was not bound to criminate herself.

In these circumstances, the Crown Advocate, apprehending the likelihood of a miscarriage of justice, and feeling apparently entirely convinced of Miss Jacobs' innocence, has recommended that a free pardon should be granted to her.

Sir E. Satow, who expresses his concurrence in this recommendation, refers to certain letters patent issued under the Great Seal in 1866, by which the Queen's prerogative of pardon was delegated to Her Majesty's Minister and Consul-General in Japan, but states that the document cannot at present be found, implying, it would seem, that if he were completely assured, by a reference to the document itself, of his power, as Her Majesty's Minister and Consul-General, to grant a free pardon in this case, he would do so on the advice of the Crown Advocate.

The annexed copy of the letters patent of 1866, which has been made from the original draft preserved in the office of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, makes it clear, however, that the sole power thereby conferred on Her Majesty's Minister and Consul-General is that of pardoning offenders who have been actually convicted in the Consular Court.

The Marquess of Salisbury, having no materials before him on which to form an independent judgment on the merits of the case, has been unable to express any opinion as to the necessity or desirability of granting a free pardon to Miss Jacobs. But feeling that it would be difficult not to attach considerable weight to the advice, on this point, of the Crown Advocate, supported, as it is, by Her Majesty's Minister at Tôkiô, his Lordship decided to seek the advice of the Secretary of State for the Home Department in the matter, since it was clear that the grant of a free pardon was not in the power of the Minister, and that, consequently, the only method of dealing with the case in the desired sense would be the grant of a pardon by the Queen under the Great Seal or under Her Majesty's Sign Manual.

The reply returned by Sir Matthew White Ridley's direction to the application accordingly made to him is transmitted herewith. It will be seen that the Home Secretary considers it impossible, in the circumstances stated, to advise Her Majesty to grant a free pardon to Miss Jacobs.

He suggests, instead, three alternative methods of proceeding by which Miss Jacobs might be induced to tender her evidence. The desired end might, in Sir Matthew White Ridley's opinion, be obtained either (1) by Miss Jacobs appearing as a witness at the trial under the provisions of the Act of 16 Vict., cap. 30, sec. 9 (a copy of which is sent herewith), or (2) by entering a nolle prosequi in the proceedings against Miss Jacobs, or (3) by postponing the trial of Mrs. Carew until the charge against Miss Jacobs had been disposed of.

It is, however, not impossible that the suggested alternatives may present, in the eyes of the judicial officers conducting the prosecution, practical difficulties or objections.

I have accordingly been directed to lay the case before you for consideration, inclosing at the same time, for your fuller information, the accompanying copies of the Orders in Council of 1865 and 1878, regulating Her Majesty's jurisdiction in Japan, and to request that you will advise Lord Salisbury at your earliest convenience—for the matter seems to admit of no delay—as to the best course to be taken by the prosecution in the circumstances explained.

I have, &c.

Report.

In our opinion a free pardon should not be granted to Miss Jacobs, even assuming that the Crown Advocate is right in believing that she is innocent; but it is not in our view expedient that when two persons are charged with the same murder the Crown should grant a pardon to one of them for a crime which that person is believed not to have committed. The Crown should not summarily decide in this way as to which is the guilty person, and it seems an extraordinary proposal that a pardon should be granted to a person not convicted in respect of a charge which is believed to be without foundation—ex hypothesi, there is nothing to pardon.

In our opinion the trial of Mrs. Carew should proceed, and Miss Jacobs should be summoned to appear as a witness, as suggested in the first alternative proposal of the Home Secretary. If she refuses to give evidence, it must be on the ground that she does not wish to criminate herself—this course she will certainly not adopt if the Crown Advocate is right in his belief that she is innocent; if she refuses to give evidence, Mrs. Carew is presumably innocent, unless both were concerned in the murder, if murder there was. If Miss Jacobs is innocent, she will be naturally most anxious that she should have an opportunity of giving her evidence.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, January 19, 1897.

Mr. Patel's claim on Japan for losses through disturbances in Formosa.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Tokiô (Paper E) relating to the claim of Mr. Patel against the Japanese Government for losses sustained by him during recent disturbances in Formosa.

Annexed to the despatch is a Memorandum by the Librarian of this Department, in which reference is made to a Report, dated the 18th March, 1887, of the then Law Officers of the Crown in regard to British claims arising out of the burning of Colon in 1885; and I am also to inclose previous correspondence respecting the state of affairs in Formosa.

Mr. Patel claims 700 dollars in respect of his personal effects which were looted by the rebels during the outbreak of last June. It is explained in the despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at Tainan (Inclosure 1 in Paper E) that another British subject was killed in the first attack made by the rebels, and that Mr. Patel was so hurried to make good his escape that he was obliged to leave all his belongings behind. Mr. Patel, himself, states (Inclosure 2 in Paper E) that the Japanese authorities knew of the threatened attack and had given warning to their civil officials, but that they failed to give him similar notice, as well as to protect him.

In view of these circumstances, and having regard to the probability that a large number of claims of a similar nature may be preferred, Lord Salisbury would be glad to be favoured with your opinion as to whether such gross and culpable negligence can be attributed to the Japanese military authorities in regard to Mr. Patel's losses, or whether such other, and if so what, grounds exist as to justify Her Majesty's Government in presenting this claim to the Japanese Government.

Lord Salisbury would also be glad to be favoured at the same time with any observations of a more general nature which you may have to offer on the matter.

I have, &c.

Report.

In our opinion, no sufficient case is shown to justify the putting forward of a claim on behalf of Mr. Patel. The only ground upon which it could be founded would be that the Japanese Government had been guilty of gross misconduct tending in a material way to bring about the insurrection.

Whatever grounds there may be for believing such to be the case, it is not, in our judgment, possible to rely upon this fact with any hope of success, as the charge would unquestionably be denied by the Japanese Government.

A resident in a foreign country takes the same risks as those to which subjects or citizens of that country are liable.

No outside State has, under ordinary circumstances, a right to interfere in the regulation of the internal affairs of another State, and, unless the damage can be shown to have been occasioned by the direct act or neglect of the foreign Government or its Agents, or by the neglect of the military or police to afford protection which was afforded to the subjects of the country, no claim can be successfully maintained.

Under all the circumstances, upon the materials before us, we cannot recommend that Mr. Patel's claim should be pressed.

Gentlemen,
Foreign Office, January 21, 1897.

Trial of Mrs. Carew for murder at Yokohama. Action of Mr. Troup as Assistant Judge.

IN connection with the proceedings now pending in Her Majesty's Court for Japan against Mrs. Edith May Hallowell Carew, respecting which certain correspondence has been referred to you in my previous letter of this day's date, the attention of the Marquess of Salisbury has been called to a further point, on which he would be glad to be favoured with your advice, if possible, at the same time as he receives your Report in reply to the previous reference.

It will have been seen from the newspaper report of the proceedings at the Magisterial inquiry held in November last before Mr. James Troup, Her Majesty's Consul (now Consul-General) at Yokohama (or Kanagawa), which formed Inclosure (B) in my preceding letter, that Mr. Troup was described as holding that inquiry in the capacity of Assistant Judge of Her Majesty's Court for Japan. Mr. Troup was referred to by the same style and title in the official despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Tôkiô, in which the above report was forwarded to this Department.

As, however, Article 9 (1) of "The China and Japan Order in Council, 1878" (Paper H, inclosed in my previous letter), prescribes that the Assistant Judge, as well as the Judge of Her Majesty's Court for Japan, shall be appointed by warrant under the Royal Sign Manual, and as no record could be found in the archives of this Office of Mr. Troup having been so appointed, a telegram was addressed to Sir E. Satow on the 18th instant (copy annexed, Paper marked J), calling his attention to the provisions of the Order in Council, and asking for a definite statement as to the capacity in which Mr. Troup had purported to act in the case.

From Sir E. Satow's reply (also annexed, Paper marked K) it seems clear that, owing presumably to a misconception as to the proper construction of Article 6 (2) of the Order in Council, Mr. Troup has not been appointed Assistant Judge in proper form. It has, moreover, been ascertained by further inquiry that no formal appointment to that post has ever been made since the date of its creation under the Order in Council of 1878, there being no warrant under the Royal Sign Manual in existence conferring the office on any person.

There can, therefore, be no doubt that, when conducting the Magisterial inquiry which resulted in Mrs. Carew's committal for trial on a charge of wilful murder, Mr. Troup did not possess the judicial capacity in which he purported to sit. Lord Salisbury understands that a technical flaw of this character in a criminal case might possibly lead to very serious embarrassment if attention should be called to it.

The suggestion put forward in Sir E. Satow's telegram of the 20th January (Paper K) that the defect might be remedied by conferring on Mr. Troup, retrospectively, the appointment of Acting Assistant Judge as from a date anterior to the commencement of the proceedings against Mrs. Carew does not appear to offer a practical solution of the difficulty. For, apart from the obvious objection that, the post of Assistant Judge having never been filled, no Acting Assistant Judge can be appointed, Lord Salisbury is reluctant to sanction a step which could in any way be called in question as a technical irregularity, in connection with a serious criminal case, in which the life of a British subject is at stake, and in which every formality may be held to be of special importance.

In these circumstances, I am directed to request that you will advise his Lordship as to the course which you would recommend him to follow, both as regards the position of Mr. Troup in this particular case, and as regards the more general question of the validity of any proceedings in which Her Majesty's Consul, or the Acting British Consul, at Yokohama may have purported to act in the judicial capacity of Assistant Judge of the Court for Japan since the establishment of that Tribunal in 1878.

Report.

Having regard to the terms of the Order in Council, and the view taken by Mr. Davidson, the question cannot be regarded as altogether free from doubt, but upon the whole we are of opinion that sub-Article (2) of Article 6 of the Order in Council of the 14th August, 1878, applies, and that, in the absence of any direction by the Secretary of State, Mr. Troup is duly authorized as being Her Majesty's Consul for the District Consulate of Kanagawa to act as Assistant Judge.

We do not think it necessary, or, in fact possible, to take any steps to make any retrospective appointment or to validate any proceedings to which Mr. Troup has been a party, or to remove any objection which may be taken to his jurisdiction in the past, but, as it is important that there should be no doubt as to his jurisdiction in the future, we think it would be as well that Her Majesty should by warrant under her Royal Sign Manual appoint him to be Assistant Judge.

Protocol as to trade-marks, &c., in Japan.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, the inclosed papers relating to the proposed signature of a Protocol, by which Her Majesty's Government agree to renounce their extra-territorial jurisdiction over British subjects in Japan, in so far as it applies to patents, trade-marks, and designs, as soon as all other Treaty Powers shall have similarly renounced such jurisdiction over their own subjects or citizens respectively. The Treaty of the 16th July, 1894, between Great Britain and Japan (Paper A), provides for the entire abandonment of British jurisdiction in Japan in return for certain advantages to be conceded to British subjects. That Treaty has not yet come into operation; but in the Treaty between Germany and Japan of the 4th April, 1896 (Paper B), it was stipulated that Article XVII, which relates to the protection of patents, &c., should take effect at once, and the Japanese Government have consequently agreed that the corresponding Article of the British Treaty should likewise come into force forthwith.

In deference to the wishes of the Japanese Government, Lord Salisbury informed the Japanese Minister (Paper C) that Her Majesty's Government would, on their part, be prepared under certain circumstances to relinquish at once their jurisdiction in matters relating to the protection of industrial property; and in accordance with a subsequent request from Mr. Kato, a Protocol has been drafted which embodies the agreement arrived at between the two Governments.

I am to call attention to the correspondence which has passed with the Board of Trade on this subject (Papers G to K), and I am to request that Lord Salisbury may be favoured with your opinion as to whether the terms of the draft Protocol, as now amended (Paper L), are such as may properly be proposed to the Japanese Government with a view to carrying out the arrangement which has already been agreed upon in principle.

His Lordship will be glad, at the same time, to be favoured with any observations of a general nature which you may desire to offer on the papers now submitted to you.

Report.

We have altered the draft Protocol so as to strike out all reference to criminal proceedings, and have introduced a few additional words to make the meaning clearer.

We think it very inexpedient so to modify the administration of the criminal law with reference to one class of cases only, and questions of very great difficulty might arise on the question what are crimes relating to patents, trade-marks, and designs.

We should point out that the wording of the clause in the German Treaty is not the same as in the English Treaty, and appears to be wider in its scope. We presume that the Board of Trade have satisfied themselves that the difference is immaterial.

The simplest way of dealing with the whole subject would be to bring into force unconditionally a Convention in the terms of Article XVII of the German Treaty. There is, we presume, some reason for deeming this course inexpedient.

Draft Protocol between Great Britain and Japan.

Whereas by Treaty, grant, usage, sufferance, and other lawful means, Her Britannic Majesty has power and jurisdiction in relation to her subjects within the dominions of His Majesty the Emperor of Japan;

Whereas by Article XVII of a Treaty signed between Great Britain and Japan on the 16th July, 1894, it is stipulated as follows:—

"The subjects of each of the High Contracting Parties shall enjoy in the dominions and the possessions of the other the same protection as native subjects in regard to patents, trade-marks, and designs, upon fulfilment of the formalities prescribed by law.

Whereas by Article XX of the same Treaty it is agreed that, from the date on which such Treaty comes into force, the jurisdiction then exercised by British Courts in Japan shall cease, and that such jurisdiction shall be assumed and exercised by Japanese Courts;

And whereas it has been agreed between the Governments of Great Britain and Japan that the provisions of the above-mentioned Article XVII shall come into force at once:—

The Undersigned, duly authorized for that purpose by their respective Governments, have agreed upon the following Articles:—

Article 1. Her Britannic Majesty consents to renounce all extra-territorial jurisdiction at present exercisable by British Courts in Japan for the judicial hearing and determination of matters in difference between British subjects and subjects of the Emperor of Japan, ~~or for the repression of crimes or offences committed by British subjects,~~ in so far as it applies to the protection of patents, trade-marks, and designs.

Art. 2. The foregoing Article shall not take effect until all other Powers which enjoy similar benefits to those conferred by Article XVII of the Treaty between Great Britain and Japan of the 16th July, 1894, and which possess extra-territorial jurisdiction in Japan, shall similarly have renounced their right to exercise such jurisdiction between their own subjects or citizens respectively, and subjects of the Emperor of Japan ~~as well as for the repression of crimes or offences committed by their own subjects or citizens respectively,~~ in so far as it applies to the protection of patents, trade-marks, and designs.

In witness whereof the Undersigned have signed the above Protocol, and have affixed thereto the seal of their arms.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, November 15, 1897.

Jurisdiction in Japan over Chinese serving on H.M's. ships.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, the papers marked in the accompanying list relative to the case of six Chinese subjects, borne on the books of certain of Her Majesty's ships, who were arrested by the Japanese authorities in August last, at Hakodate, on a charge of gambling while on shore in that port.

Mr. Lowther, Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Tôkiô, reported the circumstances by telegraph, stating that the Consul had lodged a protest against the Japanese claim to jurisdiction over these men, and that Mr. Wilkinson, the Acting Judge at Yokohama, had advised that Chinese borne on the books of Her Majesty's ships should be considered as British subjects.

Mr. Lowther was thereupon instructed to make representations to the Japanese Government, and to ask that the men might be given up. He was informed that Her Majesty's Government had refused to surrender a Chinese servant employed on board, and borne on the books of, Her Majesty's ship "Esk," who accidentally killed another Chinese subject while on shore at Ichang last year. Your Report on this case is inclosed (Paper I). Reference was also made to some correspondence sent home by Her Majesty's Minister at Tôkiô in 1894 (Paper J), in which will be found a Memorandum by Mr. Wilkinson respecting the status of Chinese and Japanese seamen serving in the merchant-vessels of Treaty Powers. Mr. Wilkinson then advised that the jurisdiction over Chinese seamen in British merchant-vessels properly belonged to Her Majesty's Courts, and that the claim of the Japanese authorities to exercise such jurisdiction in respect of offences committed by them in Japan should be strenuously resisted.

Some doubt appears, however, to have been entertained as to the soundness of the views advanced by Mr. Wilkinson in this Memorandum; at any rate, no instructions were ever sent to Her Majesty's Minister, and the matter was not pressed to a definite conclusion.

In the case now under consideration, Mr. Lowther presented a note to the Japanese Government in the sense of his instructions, requesting the surrender of the men; but the Minister for Foreign Affairs was very decided, and would not accept the precedent in China, maintaining that the Chinese in Her Majesty's ships are not British subjects or protected persons under Treaty or according to the definition contained in the Orders in Council, and that they must be treated as if they were Japanese subjects.

Lord Salisbury thereupon instructed Mr. Lowther to make a strong protest against the trial of the Chinese in question by a Japanese Court. He had in the meantime received a note from the Japanese Government, stating that British jurisdiction in Japan is expressly limited by Treaty and by the Orders in Council of 1865 and 1881 to British subjects by birth or naturalization, and requesting a reconsideration of the case.

In spite of Mr. Lowther's protest, the prisoners were sentenced to fifteen days' hard labour and to fines; they served their time, and afterwards rejoined their respective ships.

The negotiations on this subject are set forth in the inclosed despatches from Mr. Lowther.

I am to call your special attention to his despatch No. 170 (Paper A), and to the Minutes thereon, and to his note to the Japanese Government inclosed in his despatch No. 174 (Paper B), which was written after consultation with Mr. Wilkinson. The contentions of the Japanese Government are fully explained in the article from the "Japanese Mail" inclosed in Mr. Lowther's despatch No. 181 (Paper D). A copy of the Treaty of the 26th August, 1858, conferring on Her Majesty extra-territorial jurisdiction over British subjects in Japan (Paper K), is also inclosed.

In the Orders in Council of 1865 and 1881 (Papers L and M), a British subject is defined as a subject of Her Majesty, whether by birth or naturalization, and in the Order in Council of 1884 (Paper N) it is provided that the expression "British subject" shall include a British-protected person in so far as by Treaty, Capitulation, grant, usage, sufferance, or other lawful means Her Majesty has jurisdiction in relation to such persons in China, Japan, and Corea respectively.

The letters from the Admiralty of the 27th September and 19th October (Papers G and H) show the importance attached by the Commander-in-chief on the China Station to the question at issue.

So far as Japan is concerned, it must be remembered that Her Majesty's jurisdiction over British subjects in that country will cease when the new Treaties come into force—probably in 1899, but as similar cases may arise in other countries, such as China, where Her Majesty possesses exclusive criminal jurisdiction over British subjects and protected persons, it is desirable that the principle on which British authorities should proceed should be laid down for future guidance, and I am accordingly to request you to favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion as to whether any further, and if so what, representations should be made to the Japanese Government in regard to this case, or whether any definite instructions should be addressed to Her Majesty's Representatives in China and Japan as to the status of Japanese and Chinese subjects serving on board Her Majesty's ships in regard to offences committed on shore in those countries respectively.

His Lordship would also be glad to receive any observations of a general character which you may wish to offer in connection with the papers now submitted.

I have, &c.

Report.

The only rights which we have against Japan in this matter must be derived from the Treaty. The Orders in Council cannot extend our rights as against Japan. All that they can do is to provide machinery in our Courts there for trying cases over which, under the Treaty, we have jurisdiction.

By the Treaty, our Consular Courts have jurisdiction over crimes committed by British subjects. While serving on board one of Her Majesty's ships, foreigners forming part of the crew are British subjects, as between this country and Japan, within the meaning of the Treaty. A man-of-war is a portion of British territory, and, while on board it, they are under the allegiance of the Queen We cannot doubt that, if such a person committed a crime on board a man-of-war while in a Japanese port, he might be tried in the Consular Court.

We think that, as between the two countries, the character of a British subject adheres to such a person during his temporary absence from the vessel to which he belongs.

If the Japanese contention be correct, the Japanese Government would be entitled to insist on the trial in the Japanese Courts of an officer or blue-jacket in Her Majesty's navy in respect of an assault committed by him on shore, if they could show that there was something in his pedigree which, under the Statutes conferring British nationality on persons born abroad, might prevent his being, by English municipal law, a British subject. It seems to us impossible to suppose that such a line of inquiry should be open to the Japanese Government An officer or one of the crew of a British man-of-war must, we think, be regarded as a British subject within the meaning of the Treaty, whether on board ship or on shore.

If a member of the crew were himself a Japanese subject other considerations would arise, and we do not think it expedient to insist on ousting the Japanese jurisdiction in respect of offences committed by such Japanese subjects on shore or on board merchant-vessels in Japanese ports. But, in the present case, in our opinion, the Japanese Government should be informed that Her Majesty's Government insists on the view which has already been presented with regard to the case of these six men, and Her Majesty's Representatives in China and Japan should have instructions in conformity with the views expressed in this Report.

Gentlemen,

Foreign Office, November 30, 1897.

I HAVE the honour, by the direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit to you the papers noted in the accompanying list, which relate to an application made by the Japanese Minister at this Court that due facilities should be accorded by Her Majesty's Government for recovering and apprehending seamen deserters from Japanese merchant ships, whether in this country or elsewhere in Her Majesty's dominions.

I am to direct your attention to a Memorandum by the Solicitor to the Board of Trade, forming the Inclosure in the letter from that Department of the 7th August last, with regard to the requirements of section 238 of "The Merchant Shipping Act, 1894," which reproduce the main provisions of "The Foreign Deserters Act, 1882." It appears to Lord Salisbury that the requirement of the statute has been sufficiently satisfied by the fact that, for practical purposes, whether by law, Treaty, or usage, Her Majesty's Government actually enjoy in Japan such facilities as the Japanese Government now seek to obtain in Her Majesty's dominions.

I am accordingly to inclose the draft of an Order in Council applying section 238 of "The Merchant Shipping Act, 1894," in the case of Japan, and I am to request that you will favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion as to whether the draft, in its present shape, may properly be laid before the Queen in Council for Her Majesty's approval.

At the Court at , the day of Present:

The Queen's Most Excellent Majesty in Council.

WHEREAS by sub-section (1) of section 238 of "The Merchant Shipping Act, 1894," it is provided that, where it appears to Her Majesty that due facilities are or will be given by the Government of any foreign country for recovering and apprehending seamen who desert from British merchant-ships in that country, Her Majesty may, by Order in Council, stating that such facilities are or will be given, declare that that section shall apply in the case of such foreign country, subject to any limitations, conditions, and qualifications contained in the Order:

And whereas it appears to Her Majesty that due facilities are given by the Government of Japan for recovering and apprehending seamen who desert from British merchant-ships in that country:

And whereas the provisions of section 1 of "The Rules Publication Act, 1893," have been complied with:

Now, therefore, Her Majesty, by virtue of the power vested in her by the hereinbefore recited sub-section (1) of section 238 of "The Merchant Shipping Act, 1894," and by and with the advice of her Privy Council, is pleased to order and declare, and it is hereby ordered and declared, that from and after the date hereof the said section 238 of "The Merchant Shipping Act, 1894," shall apply in the case of Japan.

And the Secretary of State for the Home Department, the Secretary of State for the Colonies, and the Secretary of State for India in Council, are to give the necessary directions herein accordingly.

MOROCCO.

No. 27.

[June 30, 1897.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, May 15, 1897.

Nationality of children of I. A. Abensur, born in Morocco before his naturalization in Great Britain.

I AM directed by the Marquess of Salisbury to transmit to you the Papers, which are noted in the accompanying list, relative to an application which has been made to Her Majesty's Consul at Tangier for the enrolment, in the Consular Register of British subjects, of certain infant children of a naturalized British subject, named Mr. Isaac A. Abensur, aged respectively nine years, five years, and six months.

Mr. Abensur, who was theretofore a subject of the Sultan of Morocco, having divested himself of his Moorish nationality in contemplation of Moorish law, was naturalized as a British subject by a special Act of Parliament, the short title of which is "Abensur's Naturalization Act, 1896," on the 7th August last.

This Act (Paper B) confers upon him (§ 1) "All the rights, privileges, and capacities whatsoever of a natural-born subject of Her Majesty the Queen," and the question which now arises for decision is, whether the infant children who are the offspring of a marriage contracted between Mr. Abensur and a Hebrew lady at Tangier on the 10th June, 1885, according to the Hebrew religious law prevailing in Morocco, are (1) according to English law legitimate; and (2) if according to English law legitimate, whether they are entitled to be registered as British subjects, notwithstanding that they were born before the date of their father's naturalization, under the special Act already quoted.

L.O.R. 1888 (Conf. 5785), p. 47.

I am to draw your attention to the instructions upon this subject which was addressed to Her Majesty's Consul at Tangier on the 17th March last (Paper E), to the Report by the Law Officers of the Crown respecting the case of Mr. Grant's children (the 14th June, 1888) to which reference is therein made (Paper F), and to Mr. Consul White's despatch of the 9th ultimo (Paper H), in which he gives particulars as to the local law and usage of Morocco in regard to Jewish marriages in that country.

You will observe that in this last-named Paper Mr. White reports that Mr. Abensur obtained his private Act of Parliament largely in the interests of his children, and was assured by his legal adviser (for whose opinion, however, neither Her Majesty's Government nor this Department are in any way responsible) that under that Act those children would obtain British nationality equally with himself.

Mr. White also draws attention to a despatch which was addressed to Sir J. D. Hay by Lord Rosebery on the 6th March, 1886, and in which it was stated that marriages performed by Jewish Rabbis between British subjects in Mahommedan countries would be admitted as valid in England.

The despatch in question is inclosed (Paper J).

I am to request that you will take the inclosed Papers into your consideration, and favour his Lordship with your opinion as to the question set forth in the third paragraph of this letter, and generally as to the instructions which should be sent to Her Majesty's Representatives in Morocco for their guidance in dealing with applications for the registration of children of marriages between British subjects performed by Jewish Rabbis in that country.

Report.

We agree in thinking that the doctrine of English law that for the validity of a marriage in England the presence of an episcopally ordained clergyman is necessary, has no bearing upon the present case. It never applied to the marriage of Jews in England, and cannot apply to the marriage of a Jew in Morocco.

With regard to the other points raised, we are not quite agreed as to reasons, though agreeing in the result. The opinion of the Attorney-General upon these points is as follows:—

"The question whether Abensur's marriage was monogamous raises points of difficulty, but, for the purposes of the question submitted to us, it is not necessary to express any opinion thereon, or to consider whether Mr. Abensur's children are legitimate according to English law. A good deal may depend upon the place where, and, the circumstances under which, the questions arise, and I desire not to express any opinion against the legitimacy of the children.

"In my judgment, however, assuming them to be legitimate, they yet cannot be registered as British subjects. 'Abensur's Naturalization Act' is not, I think, retrospective, and cannot be held to naturalize children born before the Act was passed.

"To attain Mr. Abensur's object I think he must obtain an Act of Parliament making his children born before the passing of the Act British subjects, and it would be well to provide, at the same time, that any children born after the passing of the Act should also be British subjects."

The opinion of the Solicitor-General upon these points is as follows:—

"For the present purpose I think it is immaterial whether the marriage of Abensur was monogamous or polygamous. This question would be material if he desired the assistance of the English Divorce Court (Hyde v. Hyde, L. R. 1 P. and D. 130), or if his children claimed to inherit real property in England (see Birtwhistle v. Vardill, 7 C. and F., 1895). But it cannot, in my opinion, be broadly laid down that for all purposes the offspring of a polygamous marriage is to be treated, in the view of English law, as illegitimate. The Divorce Court and the law of inheritance to real property in this country recognize only monogamous marriages, but for the purpose of inheriting nationality I think that a polygamous marriage by a subject of Her Majesty in a country where he is domiciled, and where the law allows of such unions, must be treated as lawful, the English law adopting for this purpose the law of the domicile.

"This second objection, therefore, to the registration, in my opinion, fails like the first.

"A difficulty, however, is presented by the fact that the children were born before Abensur was naturalized. If they had been born after the Act of Naturalization they would, though born abroad, in my opinion, be British subjects by virtue of the statutes 7 Anne, cap 5, sec. 3, and 4 Geo. II, cap. 21, sec. 1.

"The children born before the Act of Naturalization stand, however, on a different footing.

"It is no doubt eminently reasonable that infant children living with their father should follow his nationality.

"The Law Officers, in their Report of the 4th November, 1861, advised that, in their opinion, minors who were born in Her Majesty's dominions, but whose fathers had become naturalized American citizens, ought, during their minority, to be considered and treated as between the two Governments, not as British subjects, but as American citizens, minors in this position being by the Statute Law of the United States regarded as American citizens.

"No difficulty would exist with regard to children born abroad of a person afterwards naturalized, who might not desire to assume the character of British subjects, as the Statute 4 Geo. II, cap. 21, merely confers upon children born abroad the privilege of being British subjects, but does not fasten upon them without their own concurrence any burdens whatever (see Sir Roundell Palmer's speech in the House of Commons on the 20th March, 1868, as quoted in 'Forsyth on Constitutional Law,' p. 339). But, in the present case, as they were born abroad, the title of these children to be, in view of English law, British subjects must depend upon 7 Anne, cap. 5, sec. 3, as explained by 4 Geo. II, cap. 21, which confers this privilege only on children whose fathers were at the time of their birth natural-born subjects.

"Although for some purposes naturalization by special Act has undoubtedly a retrospective effect (Blackstone's Commentaries, Book II, chapter 15, p. 250, of 11th edition citing Co Lib. 129a), it appears to me to be impossible to say that Abensur was at the time of the birth of these children, before the passing of his special Act, a natural-born subject as required by 4 Geo. II, cap. 21."

The Attorney-General and the Solicitor-General are, therefore, agreed in thinking that the claim to have these children recognized as British subjects fails.

We may further observe that the Morocco Order in Council does not appear to make any provision for the registration of infants, and that, before advising generally as to applications for the registration of children of marriages between British subjects performed by Jewish Rabbis in Morocco, we should desire further instructions as to the law or practice under which such registration has been carried out.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, August 16, 1897.

Extradition Treaty with Netherlands.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit to you herewith correspondence, in print, that has taken place between this Department, the Home Office, and the Netherland Minister at this Court, with regard to the text of an Extradition Treaty between Great Britain and the Netherlands.

This correspondence sets forth the various points that have arisen and received consideration since the matter was last brought to the notice of the Law Officers of the late Administration.

Copies of the draft Treaty, in the form in which it has been approved by Her Majesty's Secretary of State for the Home Department, and accepted by the Netherland Government, are also inclosed, and I am to state that Lord Salisbury would be glad to be favoured with your opinion as to whether, in its present shape, his Lordship can properly sign it, in conjunction with the Netherland Minister at this Court, who is desirous of so doing at an early date.

Draft Treaty.

Report.

We think that the Treaty may be signed, subject to the following observations:—

In Article II (6) the punctuation requires correction: the comma after "counterfeiting" should be omitted, and a comma inserted after "altering." The word "or" after "forged" should be omitted.

The first paragraph of Article IV presents some difficulty in its wording. The word "or" in line 7 should apparently be "and."

We suggest the words "is actually upon his trial" instead of the words "is still under trial."

We also suggest that the words following should run thus: "Within the territory of the other of the two High Contracting Parties."

In paragraph 2 (a) of Article XII the word "law" should be substituted for the word "legislation."

Article XIII.—After "for trial," in line 6, should run, "if the crime has been committed."

Draft Treaty between Great Britain and the Netherlands for the Mutual Surrender of Fugitive Criminals.

HER Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, Empress of India, and Her Majesty the Queen of the Netherlands, and in Her name Her Majesty, the Queen-Regent of the Kingdom, having mutually resolved to conclude a new Treaty for the extradition of criminals, the said High Contracting Parties have named as their Plenipotentiaries to conclude a Treaty for this purpose, that is to say:

Her Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, Empress of India; and

Her Majesty the Queen of the Netherlands, and in Her name Her Majesty the Queen-Regent of the Kingdom;

Who, having communicated to each other their respective full powers, found in good and due form, have agreed upon and concluded the following Articles:—

ARTICLE I.

The High Contracting Parties engage to deliver up to each other those persons who, being accused or convicted of a crime or offence committed in the territory of the one Party, shall be found within the territory of the other Party, under the circumstances and conditions stated in the present Treaty.

ARTICLE II.

The crimes or offences for which the extradition is to be granted are the following:—

1. Murder, including infanticide, or attempt, or conspiracy to murder, including such crimes when directed against the Sovereign, his heir, or any other person whomsoever, provided that the crime is not of a political character.

2. Manslaughter, including the manslaughter of a child.
3. Assault occasioning actual bodily harm.
4. Maliciously wounding or inflicting grievous bodily harm.
5. Counterfeiting or altering money, or uttering counterfeit or altered money.
6. Forgery, counterfeiting or altering, or uttering what is forged, counterfeited or altered.
7. Embezzlement; fraud by a bailee, banker, agent, factor, trustee, or director or member or public officer of any Company, made criminal by any law for the time being in force; or larceny.
8. Malicious injury to property if the offence be indictable.
9. Obtaining money, goods, or valuable securities by false pretences.
10. Crimes against bankruptcy law.
11. Perjury, or subornation of perjury.
12. Rape.
13. Carnal knowledge, or any attempt to have carnal knowledge, of a girl under 16 years of age.
14. Indecent assault.
15. Administering drugs, or using instruments with intent to procure the miscarriage of a woman.
16. Abduction.
17. Child stealing.
18. Kidnapping of minors and their false imprisonment.
19. Burglary or house-breaking.
20. Arson.
21. Robbery with violence.
22. Any malicious act done with intent to endanger the safety of a railway train.
23. Threats by letter or otherwise, with intent to extort.
24. Piracy by law of nations.
25. Sinking or destroying a vessel at sea, or attempting to do so.
26. Assaults on board a ship on the high seas, with intent to destroy life, or do grievous bodily harm.
27. Revolt by two or more persons on board a ship on the high seas, against the authority of the master.
28. Dealing in slaves in such a manner as to constitute a criminal offence against the laws of both States.

Extradition is also to be granted for participation in any of the aforesaid crimes, provided such participation be an extradition crime by the laws of the State applied to.

In the foregoing cases extradition shall take place only when the crime, if committed within the jurisdiction of the country on which the claim for surrender is made, would constitute an extradition crime by the laws of that country.

Extradition may also be granted, at the discretion of the State applied to, in respect of any other crime for which, according to the laws of both the Contracting Parties for the time being in force, the grant can be made.

ARTICLE III.

Either Government may, in its absolute discretion, refuse to surrender its own subjects to the other Government.

ARTICLE IV.

The extradition shall not take place if the person claimed on the part of the British Government, or the person claimed on the part of the Netherland Government, has already been tried and discharged or punished, or is actually upon his trial, within the territory of the other of the two High Contracting Parties for the crime for which his extradition is demanded.

If the person claimed on the part of the British Government, or if the person claimed on the part of the Netherland Government, should be under examination, or is undergoing sentence under a conviction, for any other crime within the territories of the two High Contracting Parties respectively, his extradition shall be deferred until after he has been discharged, whether by acquittal, or on expiration of his sentence, or otherwise.

ARTICLE V.

The extradition shall not take place if, subsequently to the commission of the crime, or the institution of the penal prosecution, or the conviction thereon, exemption from prosecution or punishment has been acquired by lapse of time, according to the laws of the State applied to.

ARTICLE VI.

A fugitive criminal shall not be surrendered if the offence in respect of which his surrender is demanded is one of a political character, or if he prove that the requisition for his surrender has in fact been made with a view to try or punish him for an offence of a political character.

1897

ARTICLE VII.

A person surrendered may in no case be kept in prison, or be brought to trial in the State to which the surrender has been made, for any other crime or on account of any other matters than those for which the extradition shall have taken place, until he has been restored or had an opportunity during one month of returning to the State by which he has been surrendered.

This stipulation does not apply to crimes committed after the extradition.

ARTICLE VIII.

The requisition for extradition shall be made through the Diplomatic Agents of the High Contracting Parties respectively.

The requisition for the extradition of an accused person must be accompanied by a warrant of arrest by the competent authority of the State requiring the extradition, and by such evidence as, according to the laws of the place where the accused is found, would justify his arrest if the crime had been committed there.

If the requisition relates to a person already convicted, it must be accompanied by the sentence of condemnation passed against the convicted person by the competent Court of the State that makes the requisition for extradition.

A sentence passed in contumaciam is not to be deemed a conviction, but a person so sentenced may be dealt with as an accused person.

ARTICLE IX

If the requisition for extradition be in accordance with the foregoing stipulations, the competent authorities of the State applied to shall proceed to the arrest of the fugitive.

ARTICLE X.

Pending the presentation of the demand for extradition through the Diplomatic channel, a fugitive criminal may be apprehended under a warrant issued by any Police Magistrate, Justice of the Peace, or other competent authority in either country, on such information or complaint, and such evidence, or after such proceedings as would, in the opinion of the authority issuing the warrant, justify the issue of a warrant if the crime had been committed or the person convicted in that part of the dominions of the two Contracting Parties in which the Magistrate, Justice of the Peace, or other competent authority exercises jurisdiction; provided, however, that in the United Kingdom the accused shall, in such case, be sent as speedily as possible before a Magistrate. He shall, in accordance with this Article, be discharged, as well in the Netherlands as in the United Kingdom, if within the term of twenty days a requisition for extradition shall not have been made by the Diplomatic Agent of the demanding country in accordance with the stipulations of this Treaty. The same rule shall apply to the cases of persons accused or convicted of any of the crimes or offences specified in this Treaty, and committed on the high seas on board any vessel of either country which may come into a port of the other.

ARTICLE XI.

If the fugitive have been arrested in the British dominions he shall forthwith be brought before a competent Magistrate, who is to examine him, and to conduct the preliminary investigation of the case, just as if the apprehension had taken place for a crime committed in the British dominions.

In the examinations which they have to make in accordance with the foregoing stipulations, the authorities of the British dominions shall admit as valid evidence depositions or statements on oath or the affirmation of witnesses taken in the Netherlands, or copies thereof, and likewise the warrants and sentences issued therein, and certificates of, or judicial documents stating the fact of, a conviction, provided the same are authenticated as follows:—

1. A warrant must purport to be signed by a Judge, Magistrate, or officer of the Netherlands.
2. Depositions or affirmations, or the copies thereof, must purport to be certified under the hand of a Judge, Magistrate, or officer of the Netherlands, to be the original depositions or affirmations, or to be the true copies thereof, as the case may require.
3. A certificate of or judicial document stating the fact of a conviction must purport to be certified by a Judge, Magistrate, or officer of the Netherlands.
4. In every case such warrant, deposition, affirmation, copy, certificate, or judicial document must be authenticated either by the oath of some witness, or by being sealed with the official seal of the Minister of Justice, or some other Minister of State of the Netherlands; but any other mode of authentication for the time being permitted by the law in that part of the British dominions where the examination is taken may be substituted for the foregoing.

ARTICLE XII.

If the fugitive have been arrested in the dominions of the Netherlands the officer of justice shall prefer a requisition within three days after the arrest, or, if the arrest have not taken place, or if it have taken place prior to the application for extradition, then within three days after the receipt of authority for that purpose from the Netherland Government in order that the person claimed may be interrogated by the Court, and that it may express its opinion as to the grant or refusal of extradition.

Within fourteen days after the interrogatory the Court shall forward its opinion and its decision, with the papers in the case, to the Minister of Justice.

The extradition shall only be granted on the production, either in original or in authenticated copy—

1. Of a conviction; or,
2. (a.) Of a warrant of arrest (which, by the law of the British dominions, is the only document which is granted when it is adjudged upon evidence taken on oath that the accused ought to be taken into custody), issued in the form prescribed by British law, and indicating the offence in question sufficiently to enable the Netherland Government to decide whether it constitutes, in contemplation of Netherland law, a case provided for by the present Treaty; and,

   (b.) Of the evidence.

In the examinations which they have to make in accordance with the foregoing stipulations, the authorities of the Netherland dominions shall admit as valid evidence depositions or statements on oath, or the affirmations of witnesses taken in the British dominions, or copies thereof, and likewise the warrants and sentences issued therein, and certificates of, or judicial documents stating the fact of, a conviction, providing the same are authenticated as follows:—

1. A warrant must purport to be signed by a Judge, Magistrate, or officer of the British dominions.
2. Depositions or affirmations, or the copies thereof, must purport to be certified under the hand of a Judge, Magistrate, or officer of the British dominions, to be the original depositions or affirmations, or to be true copies thereof, as the case may require.
3. A certificate of, or judicial document stating the fact of, a conviction, must purport to be certified by a Judge, Magistrate, or officer of the British dominions.
4. In every case such warrant, deposition, affirmation, copy certificate, or judicial document must be authenticated either by the oath of some witness, or by being sealed with the official seal of one of the Principal Secretaries of State, or some other Minister of State of the British dominions, but any other mode of authentication for the time permitted by law in that part of the dominions of the Netherlands where the examination is taken may be substituted for the foregoing.

ARTICLE XIII.

The extradition shall not take place unless the evidence be found sufficient, according to the laws of the State applied to, either to justify the committal of the prisoner for trial, if the crime had been committed in the territory of the said State, or to prove that the prisoner is the identical person convicted by the Courts of the State which makes the requisition, and that the crime of which he has been convicted is one in respect of which extradition could, at the time of such conviction, have been granted by the State applied to. The fugitive criminal shall not be surrendered until the expiration of fifteen days from the date of his being committed to prison to await his surrender.

ARTICLE XIV.

If the individual claimed by one of the two High Contracting Parties in pursuance of the present Treaty should be also claimed by one or several other Powers, on account of other crimes or offences committed upon their respective territories, his extradition shall be granted to that State whose demand is earliest in date.

ARTICLE XV.

All articles seized which were in the possession of the person to be surrendered, at the time of his apprehension, shall, if the competent authority of the State applied to for the extradition has ordered the delivery thereof, be given up when the extradition takes place, and the said delivery shall extend not merely to the stolen articles but to everything that may serve as a proof of the crime.

ARTICLE XVI.

The respective Governments mutually renounce all claim for the repayment of expenses incurred by them in the arrest and maintenance and transport of the person to be surrendered, and all other expenses which may be incurred within the limits of their respective territories until the person to be surrendered is placed on board ship, together with the expenses of giving up and returning all seized articles and of sending and returning the papers containing proof of the crime, or other documents, and they reciprocally agree to bear all such expenses themselves.

The above stipulations, however, shall not apply to extradition to and from Canada, as regards which Colony all the expenses shall be borne by the demanding State.

The person to be extradited shall be sent to the port which the Diplomatic or Consular Agent of the demanding State shall indicate.

ARTICLE XVII.

If in any criminal matter pending in any Court or Tribunal of one of the two countries it is thought desirable to take the evidence of any witness in the other, such evidence may be taken by the judicial authorities in accordance with the laws in force on this subject in the country where the witness may be; and any expenses incurred in taking such evidence shall be defrayed by the country in which it is taken.

ARTICLE XVIII.

The stipulations of the present Treaty shall apply to the Colonies and foreign possessions of the two High Contracting Parties, but being based upon the legislation of the mother country, shall only be observed on either side so far as they may be compatible with the laws in force in those Colonies or possessions.

The demand for the extradition of an offender who has taken refuge in a Colony or foreign possession of either Contracting Party may also be made directly to the Governor or principal functionary of that Colony, or possession by the Governor or principal functionary of a Colony or possession of the other Contracting Party, when the two Colonies or foreign possessions are situated in Asia, Australia (including New Zealand and Tasmania), the Pacific and Indian Oceans, or South or East Africa.

The same rule shall be followed if the two Colonies or foreign possessions are situated America (including the West India Islands).

The said Governors or principal functionaries shall have the power either of granting the extradition or of referring the question to their Government.

In all other cases, the demand for extradition shall be made through the Diplomatic channel.

The period of provisional arrest provided for in Article X shall, for the purposes of this Article, be extended to sixty days.

ARTICLE XIX.

From the day when the present Treaty shall come into force, the Treaty of Extradition between the two countries of the 19th June, 1874, shall cease to have effect; but the present Treaty shall apply to all crimes within the Treaty, whether committed before or after the day when it comes into force.

ARTICLE XX.

The present Treaty shall be ratified, and the ratifications shall be exchanged as soon as possible.

The Treaty shall come into force three months after the exchange of the ratifications. It may be terminated by either of the High Contracting Parties at any time on giving to the other six months' notice of its intention to do so.

In witness whereof the respective Plenipotentiaries have signed the same, and have affixed thereto the seal of their arms.

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, October 30, 1897.

Proposed Extradition Treaty with Netherlands.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 14th instant, expressing the opinion that the proposed Treaty of Extradition between Great Britain and the Netherlands may be signed, subject to certain modifications, which shall accordingly be made and brought to the notice of the Netherland Government in due course.

Before, however, proceeding to signature, Lord Salisbury is of opinion that it may be desirable, even at this late stage of the negotiation, to propose to the Netherland Government, the addition of some provision for the mutual surrender of persons manufacturing or keeping explosives with harmful intent, and of conspiring to commit such crimes.

His Lordship understands that such an offence, if committed within the jurisdiction of the Crown, is an "extradition crime" (within the meaning of the Extradition Act) as it constitutes an offence against the Offences against the Person Act of 1861, which Act is specially mentioned in the Schedule annexed to the Extradition Act, 1870 (Amendment) Act of the 5th August, 1873. It would, of course, be necessary first to ascertain from the Netherland Government if a corresponding offence exists in the Dutch Penal Code, and, if so, if they would assent to its being included in the new Treaty. Should, however, no difficulty arise on either of these grounds, some such provision might be conveniently added to paragraph 4 of Article II of the Treaty in its present form.

In this connection I am to observe that, at the suggestion of the Italian Government, provision has been made for the inclusion of such an offence in a Treaty of Extradition at present in course of negotiation with Italy, but which has not, as yet. reached a sufficiently advanced stage to be submitted, in its entirety, for your approval.

The offence in question is described as "making, keeping, or carrying an explosive substance, dangerous or noxious thing or material with intent to do grievous bodily harm," and it is proposed subsequently to insert the word "sending" after "keeping" (see section 29 of 24 & 25 Vict., cap. 100), and Lord Salisbury considers that a stipulation worded in identic terms, might be proposed to the Government of the Netherlands. It has been approved by Her Majesty's Secretary of State for the Home Department after reference to the Chief Magistrate at Bow Street.

In addition to this Lord Salisbury would wish, were it possible, to make some stipulation for the mutual surrender of persons who, outside the jurisdiction of the State to which they belong, commit similar offences against that State, who, in short, are guilty of the crimes referred to in "The Explosives Act, 1883." His Lordship understands, however, that, as yet, this is not legally possible, having regard to the terms of the preamble of the Extradition Act of 1870, and to the fact that the Act of 1883, being of later date than the Extradition Acts, is not comprised in the Schedules of extradition crimes. Some considerations on this point are advanced in the Memorandum, accompanied by the four Acts referred to, which is inclosed, and to which I am to invite your attention.

It might, however, be possible, with the assent of the Netherland Government, to record in the Treaty an understanding to the effect that arrangement shall hereafter be made for mutual surrenders in such cases, so soon as the Legislatures of the two countries had provided the necessary machinery. On this latter point Lord Salisbury would be glad to be favoured with any observations you may think well to offer. I may mention that there are precedents for entering into international engagements in anticipation of future legislation, an example of which is furnished in Article IV of the Liquor Traffic Convention signed at the Hague in November, 1887, of which a copy is inclosed.

I am to request that you will be good enough to take the subject of this letter, and the documents which accompany it, into your consideration, and to favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion:—

1. As to whether a provision in similar terms to that proposed to be inserted in the Treaty with Italy may properly be submitted for the acceptance of the Netherland Government in extension of paragraph 4 of Article II as it at present stands.

2. As to whether you see any objection to a stipulation, worded as follows, being added to the Treaty, either at the end of Article II, or in the form of a Protocol, if the Netherland Government agree:—

"The High Contracting Parties hereby undertake, so soon as their respective Legislatures empower them to do so, to enter into a further agreement for the mutual surrender, to the country of his origin, of any person who, being a subject of one of the Contracting Parties, shall, within the dominions of the other Contracting Party, make or have in his possession or under his control, any explosive substance with intent, by means thereof, to endanger life or cause serious injury to property in the State of which he is a subject, or to enable any other person by means thereof to endanger life or cause serious injury to property in the same State.

"The High Contracting Parties further undertake that such Agreement shall also provide for the surrender to his country of origin of a person who, having committed an offence of the above nature in a third country, shall have taken refuge within the dominions of the other Contracting Party."

I have, &c.

Report.

We suggest that the provision proposed to be added in extension of paragraph 4 of Article II should be modified in accordance with the clause (A) (a) in the draft initialled by us herewith. We have confined this clause to explosive substances, as it is with these that we understand it is desired especially to deal, and have added the words "placing or throwing" as well as "causing any explosion."

We suggest that there should also be added clauses including in the list of extradition crimes the offences with regard to explosives under "The Malicious Injuries to Property Act, 1861," which is one of the Statutes scheduled to the Extradition Acts. The clauses we suggest for this purpose are (A) (b) and (c) in the accompanying draft initialled by us.

2. We think that it is very desirable that a clause intended to deal with offences against "The Explosives Act, 1883," should be added to the Treaty in the form of a Protocol.

We think that this clause should embrace all the offences specified in the Explosives Act, sections 2 and 3. It ought in the first instance to deal with such offences committed within the dominions of the country demanding extradition. For this purpose all that is wanted is to add these offences to the list of extradition crimes.

In the second place, the proposed clause ought to provide for the surrender of subjects of the Contracting Parties who, out of the dominions of their own country either in the dominions of the other Contracting Party or in any third country, commit any of the offences mentioned in section 3 of the Explosives Act.

We have drafted a clause (B) in the accompanying draft intended to carry out these objects. The clause (B) as sent to us omits to deal with the case of offences against the Explosives Act committed within the dominions of the country demanding extradition.

It is possible that the proposal which it is desired to embody in the Protocol may require legislation in Holland to make the Acts in question crimes as well as to make them subjects for extradition. In this country legislation would be required for the latter purpose only.

Although the subject is not strictly relevant to that of extradition, we desire to point out that it would be most desirable to make an arrangement with Holland to endeavour to procure the passing in the two countries of Statutes making it a crime in England to conspire there to cause an explosion in Holland, and making it a crime in Holland to conspire there to cause an explosion in England.

Annex.

Draft Treaty between Great Britain and the Netherlands for the Mutual Surrender of Fugitive Criminals.

HER Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, Empress of India, and Her Majesty the Queen of the Netherlands, and in her name Her Majesty the Queen-Regent of the Kingdom, having mutually resolved to conclude a new Treaty for the extradition of criminals, the said High Contracting Parties have named as their Plenipotentiaries to conclude a Treaty for this purpose, that is to say:

Her Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, Empress of India,

And Her Majesty the Queen of the Netherlands, and in her name Her Majesty the Queen-Regent of the Kingdom,

Who, having communicated to each other their respective full powers, found in good and due form, have agreed upon and concluded the following Articles:—

ARTICLE I.

The High Contracting Parties engage to deliver up to each other those persons who, being accused or convicted of a crime or offence committed in the territory of the one Party, shall be found within the territory of the other Party under the circumstances and conditions stated in the present Treaty.

ARTICLE II.

The crimes or offences for which the extradition is to be granted are the following:—

1. Murder, including infanticide, or attempt, or conspiracy to murder, including such crimes when directed against the Sovereign, his heir, or any other person whomsoever, provided that the crime is not of a political character.

2. Manslaughter, including the manslaughter of a child.

3. Assault occasioning actual bodily harm.

4. Maliciously wounding or inflicting grievous bodily harm;

(a.) Causing any explosion, or making, keeping, placing, throwing, sending, or carrying any explosive substance, with intent to do grievous bodily harm.

(b.) Unlawfully and maliciously by explosion, destroying, or damaging any building to the danger of life, or placing or throwing in or near any building any explosive substance with intent to destroy any building, machinery, or chattels, or placing or throwing any explosive substance in or near any ship or vessel with intent to damage any ship, vessel, machinery, or chattels.

(c.) Making, or unlawfully having possession of any explosive substance with intent unlawfully and maliciously to destroy or damage any building, machinery, or any ship or vessel, or any sea bank, bank of river, or canal, or reservoir, or quay, lock, or any other work belonging to any port, harbour, dock, or reservoir, or navigable river or canal, or any bridge or viaduct.

5. Counterfeiting or altering money, or uttering counterfeit or altered money.

6. Forgery, counterfeiting or altering or uttering, what is forged, ~~or~~ counterfeited or altered.

7. Embezzlement; fraud by a bailee, banker, agent, factor, trustee, or director or member or public officer of any Company, made criminal by any law for the time being in force; or larceny.

8. Malicious injury to property if the offence be indictable.

9. Obtaining money, goods, or valuable securities by false pretences.

10. Crimes against bankruptcy law.

11. Perjury, or subornation of perjury.

12. Rape.

13. Carnal knowledge, or any attempt to have carnal knowledge, of a girl under 16 years of age.

14. Indecent assault.

15. Administering drugs, or using instruments with intent to procure the miscarriage of a woman.

16. Abduction.

17. Child stealing.

18. Kidnapping of minors and their false imprisonment.

19. Burglary or house-breaking.

20. Arson.

21. Robbery with violence.

22. Any malicious act done with intent to endanger the safety of a railway train.

23. Threats by letter or otherwise with intent to extort.

24. Piracy by law of nations.

25. Sinking or destroying a vessel at sea, or attempting to do so.

26. Assaults on board a ship on the high seas with intent to destroy life or do grievous bodily harm.

1897

27. Revolt by two or more persons on board a ship on the high seas against the authority ot the master.

28. Dealing in slaves in such a manner as to constitute a criminal offence against the laws of both States.

Extradition is also to be granted for participation in any of the aforesaid crimes, provided such participation be an extradition crime by the laws of the State applied to.

In the foregoing cases extradition shall take place only when the crime, if committed within the jurisdiction of the country on which the claim for surrender is made, would constitute an extradition crime by the laws of that country.

Extradition may also be granted, at the discretion of the State applied to, in respect of any other crime for which, according to the laws of both the Contracting Parties for the time being in force, the grant can be made.

The High Contracting Parties hereby undertake, as soon as their respective Legislatures empower them to do so, to enter into a further agreement to add to the list of crimes or offences for which extradition is to be granted the following:—

1. Unlawfully and malicously causing by any explosive substance, an explosion of a nature likely to endanger life, or to cause serious injury to property.

2. Unlawfully and maliciously doing any act with intent to cause by an explosive substance, or conspiring to cause by an explosive substance, an explosion of a nature likely to endanger life, or to cause serious injury to property.

3. Unlawfully and maliciously making or having possession or control of any explosive substance, with intent—by means thereof—to endanger life, or cause serious injury to property, or to enable any other person—by means thereof—to endanger life, or cause serious injury to property.

And also to arrange for the mutual surrender to the country of which he is a subject "of any person who being a subject of one of the Contracting Parties shall within the dominions of the other Contracting Party, or in any third country, unlawfully and maliciously do any act with intent to cause by an explosive substance, or conspire to cause by an explosive substance, an explosion in the dominions of the Contracting Party demanding his surrender, of a nature likely to endanger life, or to cause serious injury to property, or who unlawfully and maliciously shall make, or have in his possession, or under his control, any explosive substance with intent by means thereof to endanger life, or cause serious injury to property in the dominions of the Contracting Party demanding his surrender, or to enable any other person by means thereof to endanger life, or cause serious injury to property in such dominions."

ARTICLE III.

Either Government may, in its absolute discretion, refuse to surrender its own subjects to the other Government.

ARTICLE IV.

The extradition shall not take place if the person claimed on the part of the British Government, or the person claimed on the part of the Netherland Government, has already been tried ~~or~~ and discharged or punished, or is ~~still~~ ~~under~~ actually upon his trial, within the territor~~ies~~y of the other of the two High Contracting Parties ~~respectively~~, for the crime for which his extradition is demanded.

If the person claimed on the part of the British Government, or if the person claimed on the part of the Netherland Government, should be under examination, or is undergoing sentence under a conviction, for any other crime within the territories of the two High Contracting Parties respectively, his extradition shall be deferred until after he has been discharged, whether by acquittal, or on expiration of his sentence, or otherwise.

ARTICLE V.

The extradition shall not take place if, subsequently to the commission of the crime, or the institution of the penal prosecution, or the conviction thereon, exemption from prosecution or punishment has been acquired by lapse of time, according to the laws of the State applied to.

ARTICLE VI.

A fugitive criminal shall not be surrendered if the offence in respect of which his surrender is demanded is one of a political character, or if he prove that the requisition for his surrender has in fact been made with a view to try or punish him for an offence of a political character.

ARTICLE VII.

A person surrendered may in no case be kept in prison, or be brought to trial in the State to which the surrender has been made, for any other crime or on account of any other matters than those for which the extradition shall have taken place, until he has been restored or had an opportunity during one month of returning to the State by which he has been surrendered.

This stipulation does not apply to crimes committed after the extradition.

ARTICLE VIII.

The requisition for extradition shall be made through the Diplomatic Agents of the High Contracting Parties respectively.

The requisition for the extradition of an accused person must be accompanied by a warrant of arrest issued by the competent authority of the State requiring the extradition, and by such evidence as, according to the laws of the place where the accused is found, would justify his arrest if the crime had been committed there.

If the requisition relates to a person already convicted, it must be accompanied by the sentence of condemnation passed against the convicted person by the competent Court of the State that makes the requisition for extradition.

A sentence passed in contumaciam is not to be deemed a conviction, but a person so sentenced may be dealt with as an accused person.

ARTICLE IX.

If the requisition for extradition be in accordance with the foregoing stipulations, the competent authorities of the State applied to shall proceed to the arrest of the fugitive.

ARTICLE X.

Pending the presentation of the demand for extradition through the Diplomatic channel, a fugitive criminal may be apprehended under a warrant issued by any Police Magistrate, Justice of the Peace, or other competent authority in either country, on such information or complaint, and such evidence, or after such proceedings as would, in the opinion of the authority issuing the warrant, justify the issue of a warrant if the crime had been committed or the person convicted in that part of the dominions of the two Contracting Parties in which the Magistrate, Justice of the Peace, or other competent authority exercises jurisdiction; provided, however, that in the United Kingdom the accused shall, in such case, be sent as speedily as possible before a Magistrate. He shall, in accordance with this Article, be discharged, as well in the Netherlands as in the United Kingdom, if within the term of twenty days a requisition for extradition shall not have been made by the Diplomatic Agent of the demanding country in accordance with the stipulations of this Treaty. The same rule shall apply to the cases of persons accused or convicted of any of the crimes or offences specified in this Treaty, and committed on the high seas on board any vessel of either country which may come into a port of the other.

ARTICLE XI.

If the fugitive have been arrested in the British dominions he shall forthwith be brought before a competent Magistrate, who is to examine him, and to conduct the preliminary investigation of the case, just as if the apprehension had taken place for a crime committed in the British dominions.

In the examinations which they have to make in accordance with the foregoing stipulations, the authorities of the British dominions shall admit as valid evidence, depositions, or statements on oath, or the affirmations of witnesses taken in the Netherlands, or copies thereof, and likewise the warrants and sentences issued therein, and certificates of, or judicial documents stating the fact of, a conviction, provided the same are authenticated as follows:—

1. A warrant must purport to be signed by a Judge, Magistrate, or officer of the Netherlands.

2. Depositions or affirmations, or the copies thereof, must purport to be certified under the hand of a Judge, Magistrate, or officer of the Netherlands to be the original depositions or affirmations, or to be the true copies thereof, as the case may require.

3. A certificate of or judicial document stating the fact of a conviction must purport to be certified by a Judge, Magistrate, or officer of the Netherlands.

4. In every case such warrant, deposition, affirmation, copy, certificate, or judicial document must be authenticated either by the oath of some witness, or by being sealed with the official seal of the Minister of Justice, or some other Minister of State of the Netherlands; but any other mode of authentication for the time being permitted by the law in that part of the British dominions where the examination is taken may be substituted for the foregoing.

ARTICLE XII.

If the fugitive have been arrested in the dominions of the Netherlands, the officer of justice shall prefer a requisition within three days after the arrest, or, if the arrest have not taken place, or if it have taken place prior to the application for extradition, then within three days after the receipt of authority for that purpose from the Netherland Government, in order that the person claimed may be interrogated by the Court, and that it may express its opinion as to the grant or refusal of extradition.

1897

Within fourteen days after the interrogatory, the Court shall forward its opinion and its decision, with the papers in the case, to the Minister of Justice.

The extradition shall only be granted on the production, either in original or in authenticated copy—

1. Of a conviction; or

2.—(a.) Of a warrant of arrest (which, by the law of the British dominions, is the only document which is granted when it is adjudged upon evidence taken on oath that the accused ought to be taken into custody), issued in the form prescribed by British ~~legislation~~ law, and indicating the offence in question sufficiently to enable the Netherland Government to decide whether it constitutes, in contemplation of Netherland law, a case provided for by the present Treaty; and—

(b.) Of the evidence.

In the examinations which they have to make in accordance with the foregoing stipulations, the authorities of the Netherland dominions shall admit as valid evidence, depositions, or statements on oath, or the affirmations of witnesses taken in the British dominions, or copies thereof, and likewise the warrants and sentences issued therein, and certificates of or judicial documents stating the fact of a conviction, provided the same are authenticated as follows:—

1. A warrant must purport to be signed by a Judge, Magistrate, or officer of the British dominions.

2. Depositions or affirmations, or the copies thereof, must purport to be certified under the hand of a Judge, Magistrate, or officer of the British dominions to be the original depositions or affirmations, or to be true copies thereof, as the case may require.

3. A certificate of or judicial document stating the fact of a conviction must purport to be certified by a Judge, Magistrate, or officer of the British dominions.

4. In every case such warrant, deposition, affirmation, copy certificate, or judicial document must be authenticated either by the oath of some witness, or by being sealed with the official seal of one of the Principal Secretaries of State or some other Minister of State of the British dominions, but any other mode of authentication for the time being permitted by law in that part of the dominions of the Netherlands where the examination is taken may be substituted for the foregoing.

ARTICLE XIII.

The extradition shall not take place unless the evidence be found sufficient, according to the laws of the State applied to, either to justify the committal of the prisoner for trial, ~~in case~~ if the crime ~~shall have~~ had been committed in the territory of the said State, or to prove that the prisoner is the identical person convicted by the Courts of the State which makes the requisition, and that the crime of which he has been convicted is one in respect of which extradition could at the time of such conviction have been granted by the State applied to. The fugitive criminal shall not be surrendered until the expiration of fifteen days from the date of his being committed to prison to await his surrender.

ARTICLE XIV.

If the individual claimed by one of the two High Contracting Parties in pursuance of the present Treaty should be also claimed by one or several other Powers, on account of other crimes or offences committed upon their respective territories, his extradition shall be granted to that State whose demand is earliest in date.

ARTICLE XV.

All articles seized which were in the possession of the person to be surrendered at the time of his apprehension shall, if the competent authority of the State applied to for the extradition has ordered the delivery thereof, be given up when the extradition takes place, and the said delivery shall extend not merely to the stolen articles but to everything that may serve as a proof of the crime.

ARTICLE XVI.

The respective Governments mutually renounce all claim for the repayment of expenses incurred by them in the arrest and maintenance and transport of the person to be surrendered, and all other expenses which may be incurred within the limits of their respective territories until the person to be surrendered is placed on board ship, together with the expenses of giving up and returning all seized articles, and of sending and returning the papers containing proof of the crime, or other documents, and they reciprocally agree to bear all such expenses themselves.

The above stipulations, however, shall not apply to extradition to and from Canada, as regards which Colony all the expenses shall be borne by the demanding State.

The person to be extradited shall be sent to the port which the Diplomatic or Consular Agent of the demanding State shall indicate.

ARTICLE XVII.

If in any criminal matter pending in any Court or Tribunal of one of the two countries it is thought desirable to take the evidence of any witness in the other, such evidence may be taken by the judicial authorities in accordance with the laws in force on this subject in the country where the witness may be; and any expenses incurred in taking such evidence shall be defrayed by the country in which it is taken.

ARTICLE XVIII.

The stipulations of the present Treaty shall apply to the Colonies and foreign possessions of the two High Contracting Parties, but being based upon the legislation of the mother country, shall only be observed on either side so far as they may be compatible with the laws in force in those Colonies or possessions.

The demand for the extradition of an offender who has taken refuge in a Colony or foreign possession of either Contracting Party may also be made directly to the Governor or principal functionary of that Colony or possession by the Governor or principal functionary of a Colony or possession of the other Contracting Party when the two Colonies or foreign possessions are situated in Asia, Australia (including New Zealand and Tasmania), the Pacific and Indian Oceans, or South or East Africa.

The same rule shall be followed if the two Colonies or foreign possessions are situated in America (including the West India Islands).

The said Governors or principal functionaries shall have the power either of granting the extradition or of referring the question to their Government.

In all other cases the demand for extradition shall be made through the diplomatic channel.

The period of provisional arrest provided for in Article X shall for the purposes of this Article be extended to sixty days.

ARTICLE XIX.

From the day when the present Treaty shall come into force the Treaty of Extradition between the two countries of the 19th June, 1874, shall cease to have effect; but the present Treaty shall apply to all crimes within the Treaty, whether committed before or after the day when it comes into force.

ARTICLE XX.

The present Treaty shalt be ratified, and the ratifications shall be exchanged as soon as possible.

The Treaty shall come into force three months after the exchange of the ratifications. It may be terminated by either of the High Contracting Parties at any time on giving to the other six months' notice of its intention to do so.

In witness whereof, the respective Plenipotentiaries have signed the same, and have affixed thereto the seal of their arms.

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, September 2, 1897.

Gentlemen,

Messrs. Ziegler and Co.'s claim on Persian Government for plunder of their goods by robbers.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, the papers noted in the accompanying list, which relate to a claim for compensation brought by Messrs. Ziegler and Co., of Manchester, against the Persian Government.

It will be seen from the letters addressed to this Department by Lloyds, Papers (A) and (C), that the agents of Messrs. Ziegler and Co. recently sent from Bushire to Shiraz a quantity of goods which had previously been insured at Lloyds to the amount of 9,200*l*.

These goods were plundered by robbers between Kazeroom and Shiraz during the disturbances consequent on the death of the late Shah, and Messrs. Ziegler and Co. sustained a loss of 3,695*l*.

This amount was paid to the Company by the underwriters.

When application was made to the Persian Government for compensation for the stolen goods, they refused it on the ground that these goods were insured. In the case of other goods which were not insured, they had consented to award compensation.

The Persian Government contend (see Mr. Hardinge's despatches of the 11th July, Papers (D) and (E)) that the value of the stolen goods having been recovered by Messrs. Ziegler from an Insurance Company, no claim lies against Persia, and they hold that it is an inevitable condition attached to the existence of Insurance Companies that they should occasionally be subject to losses.

Mr Hardinge, Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Tehran, states that he cannot discover any case in which the Persian Government have made good losses on property which they knew to have been insured.

I am to request that you will take the papers transmitted herewith into your consideration, and inform Lord Salisbury whether, in your opinion, the Persian Government are liable for compensation in this case, and whether you consider the claim to be one which may properly be pressed upon them by Her Majesty's Government.

I am also to request that you will favour his Lordship with any general observations which you may have to offer on the case.

I have, &c.

Report.

The fact that Messrs. Ziegler and Co. were insured, and that the underwriters have paid their claim is immaterial, and does not affect the question of the liability of the Persian Government to make good the loss. Her Majesty's Government should not on this account abstain from pressing the claim.

Whether the claim is one which can be properly pressed depends upon the facts, which are not before us. If the goods were lost by the default of the Persian Government, or their officers, they should make good the loss to the persons on whom it falls, whether the owners or underwriters.

The question whether the claim should be pressed must, in our opinion, be decided by the usual considerations which govern the liability of Governments to the subjects of other nations for losses occasioned by civil disturbance, having regard to the ascertained facts.

The fact that the Persian Government have paid all uninsured owners for similar losses tends to show recognition of liability by them, but it is not conclusive, as the payment may have been by way of friendly concession.

Gentlemen,

Persia (Judicial Fees) Order in Council, 1897.

I AM directed by the Marquess of Salisbury to transmit to you herewith a correspondence which has passed between the Foreign Office and the Treasury with respect to the preparation of an Order in Council, to be cited as "The Persia (Judicial Fees) Order in Council, 1897," for the purpose of amending "The Persia Order in Council, 1889," in certain respects.

A Memorandum, explaining the changes proposed to be made, and the grounds on which it has seemed desirable to make them, is annexed.

I am also to transmit to you the accompanying letter from Mr. Albert Gray, forwarding a draft Order, which has been prepared by him under instructions from this Department, and I am to request that you will favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion as to whether the draft in its present shape may properly be laid before the Queen in Council for Her Majesty's approval.

Draft Order in Council.

WHEREAS by Treaty, grant, usage, sufferance, and other lawful means, Her Majesty the Queen has power and jurisdiction in Persia:

And whereas it is expedient to amend "The Persia Order in Council, 1889" (in this Order referred to as "the principal Order"):

Now, therefore, Her Majesty, by virtue and in exercise of the powers in this behalf by "The Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890," or otherwise in Her Majesty vested, is pleased, by and with the advice of her Privy Council, to order, and it is hereby ordered, as follows:—

1. This Order may be cited as "The Persia (Judicial Fees) Order in Council, 1897."

2. (a.) The Consul-General may, with the approval of the Secretary of State and concurrence of the Treasury, make Rules imposing fees leviable in respect of any proceedings in, or processes out of, any Court established under the principal Order.

(b.) But the Court may in any case, if it thinks fit, on account of the poverty of a party, or for any other reason, dispense in whole or in part with the payment of any fee chargeable in respect of such matter.

(c.) The Court shall in every such case forthwith report the dispensation to the Consul-General, and he shall give such directions thereon as he thinks fit.

(d.) Nothing in this Order shall affect any Order in Council prescribing a Table of Fees to be taken by Consular officers; and, when a fee is taken under that Order, no fee shall be taken in respect of the same matter under any Rules made in pursuance of this Order.

3. As from the time when any Rules under this Order come into operation, Article 27 of the principal Order, and the second Schedule thereto, shall be repealed, and any reference in that Order to the fees imposed by that Article shall be construed to apply to the fees that may be imposed by Rules under this Order.

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, October 16, 1897.

Nationality of son of J. G. da Silva Casquilho, born at sea of Portuguese parents on board a British vessel.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit to you herewith a despatch from the Acting British Consul-General at Rio de Janeiro respecting a claim to British nationality which has been advanced by Senhor J. G. da Silva Casquilho, a Portuguese subject, on behalf of his son, who is stated to have been born at sea, on board the British steam-ship "Douro" whilst that vessel was on a voyage from Brazil to Southampton, on the 13th November, 1879; the birth of the child being recorded in the ship's log-book, and duly reported to the competent British authority.

The precise point raised in this instance does not appear to have been the subject of direct judicial pronouncement by any competent British Court. The decision, however, in the case of Regina v. Anderson, I.C.C.R., p. 161, and the considerations on which that decision was founded appear to have a close bearing upon the present question.

In the course of the arguments of the prisoner's Counsel in that case Mr. Justice Blackburn interposed with the statement that it has been decided "that a ship which bears a nation's flag is to be treated as part of the territory of that nation. A ship is a kind of floating island," and expressions of similar import are to be found in the Judgments of the other members of the Court for Crown Cases Reserved on that occasion.

It is presumed that, in so far as questions of nationality are concerned, this doctrine would cover the case of a child born on board a British merchant-vessel on the high seas, and that whatever might be the nationality of the father, the vessel would be considered in English law as being so far British territory as to confer British nationality "jure soli" upon the child so born. If this view should be correct, Senhor Casquilho might be informed accordingly. But before furnishing Acting Consul-General Rhind with instructions to this effect, Lord Salisbury would be glad if you would take the matter into your consideration and favour him with your opinion as to whether such instructions would be right and proper under the circumstances.

In further reference to this subject, I am to call your attention to a case which arose in 1894 in regard to the nationality of a child born of German parents on board a German vessel within British territorial waters.

The question had many features in common with the present case, but was complicated by the consideration that the child was born within the territorial waters of a State of a different nationality from that of the vessel on board which the birth took place.

It was referred to the then Law Officers for opinion, and formed the subject of their Report of the 25th August, 1894, which, as will be seen, is of a very inconclusive character.

L.O.R. 1894 (Conf. 6641), p. 52.

The points at issue appear, however, to Lord Salisbury to be of considerable practical importance on which it may become incumbent on the Secretary of State to issue instructions at any moment, and I am to request that you will take them into your consideration in connection with the present case and favour him, for his assistance and guidance, with your observations thereupon.

The correspondence which took place in 1894 and a list of the papers are annexed.

Report.

In our opinion, a child of Portuguese parents, born on the high seas on board a British merchant-vessel is, by the Municipal Law of this country, a British subject.

We are also of opinion that the child of foreign parents born on board a foreign merchant-vessel in a British port, being within the limits of the country, is, by British Municipal Law, a British subject; but this would not apply to the case of a child of foreign parents born on board a foreign vessel merely passing through British territorial waters.

In either of these cases the child may also be of foreign nationality according to the law of the country to which its parents belonged, and would be entitled, under the Naturalization Act of 1870, to disclaim British allegiance on coming of age.

Moreover, the fact that such children are by British Municipal Law British subjects would not be decisive of the question of their nationality in any question arising between this country and another foreign country which claimed their allegiance. Any such question would have to be decided on general grounds of common sense and international comity, having regard to all the circumstances under which, and the place where, the question arose; and we cannot doubt that it would be improper in all cases to insist, as against a foreign Power, on treating as a British subject a child whose parents were subjects of that foreign Power, merely on the ground of the birth on board a British vessel, or on board a foreign vessel within a British port. We would refer, by way of illustration, to the last paragraph of the Report of the then Law Officers (Sir R. Webster and Sir Edward Clarke) of the 27th August, 1887.*

L.O.R. 1887 (Conf. 5597), p. 55.

A child so born would, however, until disclaimer be entitled to vote at elections in this country, if otherwise qualified, and would be liable by English law to indictment for offences which are punishable if committed abroad by British subjects.

Senhor da Silva Casquilho may be informed that his child is by our law a British subject, but ought not to be allowed to suppose that this country would, in all cases, assert the nationality of the child as against Portugal or Brazil, if the question should ever arise. The rule of English law that all persons born within the Queen's allegiance are British subjects, cannot, of course, be regarded as binding on foreign Powers.

The question whether the child should be registered by the Consul as a British subject depends on the Consular Regulations, which are not before us. It is quite possible that, as the birth took place at sea, it is not the duty of the Consul to effect the registration.

[February 3, 1897.]

The Law Officers of the Crown to Mr. Chamberlain.

Extradition of coolies between Straits Settlements and Kedah.

Sir, Royal Courts of Justice, February 3, 1897.

WE were honoured with your commands signified in Mr. Wingfield's letter of the 25th ultimo, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 12th August, 1896, respecting the proposed extradition between the Straits Settlements and Kedah of fugitive coolie contract labourers, he was directed to transmit to us a copy of a despatch which you had addressed to the Governor of the Colony, and of a subsequent letter (with its inclosures) from the Foreign Office on the subject.

That a copy of the Siam Order in Council was also inclosed.

That it would be seen that a difficulty had arisen in applying the procedure advised in our Report, inasmuch as the Assistant Legal Adviser to the Siamese Government had given an opinion that, by the law of Siam, the breach of a labour contract was not a criminal offence, but produced only civil consequences. That Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires proposed to meet this difficulty by omitting from the draft Regulations prepared by the Attorney-General of the Straits the words which limit the operation of the Order to such breaches of contract as would be an offence against the laws of Siam; but that the Marquess of Salisbury was of opinion, in which you concurred, that it was objectionable in principle to make what, according to the local law or custom, was apparently a mere breach of civil contract, an offence against the Order in Council punishable criminally; and that it appeared also to be at least doubtful whether the Fugitive Offenders Act could be applied to the case of an act which, though made an offence against the Order in Council, was not an offence punishable by the general law of Siam.

That Mr. Wingfield was, therefore, to request that we would be so good as to take the papers into our consideration, and advise you whether any, and if so what, further steps could be properly taken to obtain the object in view.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your commands, have the honour to

Report—

That, according to the opinion that has now been obtained as to the law in force in Kedah, it is clearly impossible to deal with the surrender of fugitive labourers by way of Extradition Treaty. As such labourers have committed no offence against the law of Kedah, their surrender is not a matter which can be dealt with by machinery which is applicable only to criminals.

The difficulty which this opinion as to the law of Kedah raises in the way of making a new Regulation such as suggested depends, in our opinion, rather on questions of policy than of law.

We do not think that the power to make Regulations is so limited by Article 84 of the Order in Council that no act could be made a crime which is not a crime by the law of Kedah. If it is deemed necessary for the enforcement of any local law or custom in the case of British subjects that any infraction should be constituted a criminal offence, we think that such a Regulation might be made, although the act in question would not be a criminal offence by the law of Kedah. In other words, the Regulation may, we think, provide machinery differing altogether from that of the local law for the purpose of carrying it out; and we think that there is power to make a Regulation constituting a breach of a labour contract a criminal offence, if this be deemed necessary, in the case of British subjects for the proper enforcement of the obligations imposed by the local law upon the labourer under such a contract.

We further think that the operation of the Fugitive Offenders Act, Part II, is not confined to the case of acts which are crimes by the local law, as well as by the laws in force in the British Courts in the country.

Where Her Majesty has jurisdiction in foreign parts the Act may be applied, and a person, subject to the jurisdiction of the British Court there, may be dealt with under the Act if he has committed a crime according to the law of the British Court.

The method suggested in our last Report is, in our opinion, the only one by which this difficulty can be dealt with. It is, no doubt, a question for very serious consideration whether, as a matter of policy, it is desirable that a Regulation should be made making a breach of a labour contract by a British subject criminal when it would be no offence if committed by a native. It must, however, be remembered that according to the local custom, if not the local law, such breaches of contract appear to be, in practice, punished with considerable rigour. And, in cases where there is a pecuniary penalty, the law itself provides for imprisonment in default of payment, although it is stated that this imprisonment is in the nature of a civil remedy only, so far as this distinction is appreciated in Kedah.

Upon the whole, subject to the considerations of policy above indicated, we think that the procedure indicated in our previous Report should be followed, if the difficulty with Kedah is of such gravity as to make it necessary that action should be taken in the matter.

* Case of the sons of Mme. Triebel:—

"We think it right to add the expression of our opinion that, in cases of double nationality, Her Majesty's Government would not be entitled to assert for persons being or deemed to be natural-born British subjects exemption from their obligations as subjects of a foreign State; and that if the sons of Mme. Triebel should use the passport as a ground for contending that they are exempt from the obligations of military service in Germany, that contention ought not to be supported by Her Majesty's Government."—Law Officers' Report 1887, pp. 55, 56.

Registration of British subjects in Siam.

Gentlemen,

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit to you herewith the papers noted in the accompanying list, which relate to a question which has arisen in connection with the registration of British subjects at Her Majesty's Consulate-General in Siam.

It is, his Lordship conceives, unnecessary to invite your perusal of the voluminous earlier correspondence which has passed on this subject. It may suffice to state that various circumstances have of late years led to a large increase in the number of persons who apply to be registered at the Bangkok Consulate-General, and that in consequence many disputes have arisen with the Siamese authorities as to who are, and who are not, entitled to British protection. These and other considerations render it desirable that the practice of registration should not be unduly extended.

I am to invite your particular attention to the considerations set out in the Memorandum by Mr. Davidson, Q.C., the legal adviser to the Foreign Office, which forms the inclosure to the letter from this Department to the India Office of the 9th April, and to the reply received from that Office of the 27th instant.

I am to request that you will be good enough to take these papers into your consideration, and to favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion as to whether Her Majesty's Government are entitled, in law, to claim as British subjects—in the sense in which that expression is employed in the Treaties between Great Britain and Siam—the children and grandchildren of persons born on British soil, or on soil which has subsequently become British, and, if so, whether it is competent for Her Majesty's Government to exercise any discretion with reference to asserting or declining to assert as against the Siamese Government, and in admitting or declining to admit with reference to the claimants themselves claims of this nature in the circumstances mentioned.

Lord Salisbury will at the same time be glad to be favoured with any observations of a more general nature which you may desire to offer on the papers.

Report.

We assume from the terms of the despatch from the India Office and of Sir Charles Turner's Memorandum that there is nothing in the local law of British Burmah which specially affects this question.

Upon the conquest of Burmah, Burmese subjects became British subjects, and we think that their children and grandchildren, born subsequently to the conquest, are also, by British law, British subjects, though born out of Burmah.

The fact that these children and grandchildren are the issue of polygamous marriages is not, in our opinion, decisive of the question of nationality.

The rules relating to the jurisdiction of the English Divorce Court, and to succession to land in England, have not necessarily any application to questions of nationality, and the opinion of the Law Officers, dated the 14th June, 1888, in the case of Abdul Kerim Grant, did not lay down any general principle apart from the facts of the particular case.

There are many parts of the British Dominions in which polygamous marriages

Revision of Siam Order in Council, 1889.

Gentlemen,

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, the accompanying papers relating to the revision of "The Siam Order in Council (1889)."

The point on which his Lordship desires to have your opinion is whether the registration provisions of this Order should be repealed, as suggested by Mr. Albert Gray, in view of the conflict between Siamese law and custom and the clause in the existing Order, which is explained in Papers A, G, and H.

I am to request that you will be good enough to take these papers into your consideration, and favour Lord Salisbury with your views on Mr. Gray's suggestion in his letter of the 24th instant (Paper I).

In our opinion, the course recommended by Mr. Albert Gray in his letter of the 24th July should be followed. There appears to be a Siamese law of mortgage which is well understood, and not irrational. We think that the law of the country where real property is situate ought to prevail, and recommend that the attempt to establish a register of mortgages of lands or houses by British subjects should be abandoned.

2, Paper Buildings, Temple, July 24, 1897.

Sir,

IN reply to Mr. Bertie's letter of the 15th July respecting the provisions of the Siam Order in Council relating to the registration of mortgages, I have the honour to report as follows:—

The insertion of provisions for the registration of mortgages in Orders in Council under the Foreign Jurisdiction Act has not been general.

Those in the Siam Order seem to have been taken from the China, Japan, and Corea Orders of 1881. There is a provision for registration of all non-testamentary documents relating to land in the Zanzibar Order of 1884. No similar provisions were, however, inserted in the Africa, Morocco, and Persia Orders of 1889, nor in the Ottoman Orders.

It seems to me wrong in principle that such provisions should affect to bind Siamese subjects, and being aware that any system of registration, which gives priority to registered documents over non-registered documents, is readily used for fraudulent purposes in an Oriental country, I am of opinion that the registration provisions of the Siam Order should be repealed.

The fact that Siamese law, as appears from Mr. French's Memoranda, has a well-recognized system of mortgage, seems to add weight to the arguments for this course.

The repeal is, however, a matter upon which it would be well to ascertain the views of the Law Officers before the preparation of an Order in Council.

I have, &c.

are lawful, and for the purposes of nationality it seems to us impossible to treat the issue of such marriages, who are legitimate by the law of the domicile of their parents, as illegitimate.

These considerations do not, however, dispose of the question whether these persons are British subjects within the meaning of the Treaty between this country and Siam. If it be contended by the Siamese Government that, according to Siamese law, these persons are Siamese subjects, in such a conflict of laws it is impossible to say that the question can be disposed of merely by reference to the Municipal law of either country. Such questions must be decided rather with reference to those principles of fairness and good sense which must govern the relations of two nations.

The question is one between the Government of Siam and Her Majesty's Government, and should, in our opinion, be decided in each case in accordance with that discretion which, in their opinion of the 4th November, 1861, the Law Officers considered should be applied to the decision of a somewhat analogous question arising with the United States.

We are not in a position to advise whether these persons ought, as between Her Majesty's Government and that of Siam, to be treated as British subjects.

A great deal must depend upon the permanence of the settlement made in Siam by the fathers or grandfathers of such persons; and we can only say that each case must be determined on its own merits, and with reference to what is fair as between the two Governments claiming the allegiance of the person.

Foreign Office, August 3, 1897.

Gentlemen,

Dispute between Mr. M. Campbell and Siamese Railway Department as to Bangkok–Korat Railway.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, the papers, marked in the accompanying list, which relate to a dispute between the Siamese Railway Department and Mr. Murray Campbell, the contractor for the construction of a railway from Bangkok to Korat.

In accordance with the terms of the Contract, which is given in the volume annexed to Paper A, the dispute was referred to arbitration.

The two Arbitrators, Sir Guilford Molesworth and Herr Lange, differed, and selected Herr van Bosse to act as Umpire. Mr. Murray states (see No. 4 in Paper A) that he had previously protested against this selection; he subsequently ascertained certain facts which convinced him that the Tribunal had acted ultra vires, and that certain of its members were not acting impartially, and he proceeded to withdraw from the proceedings under protest, declining to be bound by any Award which the Court might make. Sir G. Molesworth followed his example, and communicated to Lord Salisbury the circumstances of his withdrawal (No. 5 in Paper A).

A letter was addressed to Mr. Campbell from this Department on the 12th July (see No. 4 in Paper A), stating that, if he should be advised by his Counsel that he has exhausted all ordinary legal remedies, including recourse to arbitration, Lord Salisbury would be prepared to submit his Counsel's opinion to you, with the other papers in the matter.

Messrs. Leighton and Savory have now forwarded the case submitted to Mr. Cripps, Q.C., with that gentleman's opinion on it, and they have appealed for the intervention of Her Majesty's Government (see Paper B).

I am to request you to take the inclosed papers into consideration, and to favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion as to whether the circumstances are such as to entitle Mr. Campbell to relief, and whether, in that case, Her Majesty's Minister Resident at Bangkok should be instructed to bring the present position of the case to the attention of the Siamese Government, and, if so, whether officially or unofficially.

His Lordship would also be glad to receive any observations of a general character which you may have to make on the case.

Report.

The statements contained in Mr. Murray Campbell's letter and in that from Sir G. Molesworth show a great probability that there has been a miscarriage of justice in this case.

We think that Her Majesty's Minister Resident at Bangkok should be instructed to bring the present position of the case before the Siamese Government unofficially.

The Siamese Government cannot desire that the matter should remain undecided. The proceedings before the Umpire, M. van Bosse, which were expected to last for a month, went on for three days only, and Mr. Murray Campbell would certainly appear to have had strong primâ facie ground for his withdrawal.

Under these circumstances the proper solution would appear to be that a new Umpire should be appointed in whom both parties have confidence.

We think that Her Majesty's Minister may properly be instructed to endeavour to bring about this result by unofficial representations to the Siamese Government.

Should these representations prove unavailing, we should like before advising official action to be taken to have some information whether redress could not be had from the Courts in Siam. It is very possible that Mr. Cripps may be right in his statement that no effective relief can be obtained there. But there is an absence of any evidence as to the nature of these Courts, and the relief, if any, which they could give. Her Majesty's Minister in Siam would, no doubt, be able to procure information upon this subject. If unofficial representations prove unavailing, and it appears that the Siamese Courts cannot, or will not, give relief, we think that Mr. Murray Campbell should be required to put in a somewhat more definite shape his allegations against Herr van Bosse, and to support them by statutory declarations directed to specific questions of fact. If he is able to show in this way that his withdrawal was justifiable, we think that Her Majesty's Government, in the event of unofficial representations proving unavailing, and its appearing that there is no remedy in the Siamese Courts, may properly treat the case as one calling for direct Diplomatic representations to Siam.

Mr. M. Campbell's Contract for construction of Bangkok-Korat Railway.

Foreign Office, November 2, 1897.

Gentlemen,

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, the papers named in the accompanying list on the subject of Mr. Murray Campbell's Contract with the Siamese Railway Department for the construction of a railway from Bangkok to Korat.

On the receipt of your Report of the 24th August (Paper A), Her Majesty's Minister at Bangkok was instructed to bring the case to the notice of the Siamese Government, and to press unofficially for the appointment of a fresh Umpire (Paper B).

Mr. Greville replied on the 4th October (Paper C) that the Siamese Government were not disposed to agree to the appointment of a fresh Umpire. They stated that the Umpire was proposed by the British Arbitrator, but this statement is at variance with the facts as given by Sir G. Molesworth (see Paper H), and has since been modified (see Paper G).

In answer to a further telegram as to the possibility of the contractor obtaining redress through the Siamese Courts, Mr. Greville (Paper E) reported that the Siamese Government might give guarantees for the constitution of a proper Siamese Court to try the case, but that such a Court would find it a very difficult matter to deal with. The intention of the Siamese Government was to await the Award of the Umpire.

Mr. Greville has now explained (Paper G) that redress might be obtained in the so-called International Court, which, however, he believes would not consider itself competent to try the case before an Award has been given. Some account of this Court will be found in the Memorandum annexed to Mr. Greville's telegram.

It has also been pointed out by Mr. Murray Campbell that a reference to the Courts was specifically barred by clause 42 of the original Contract (Paper I, pp. 12 and 13).

Lord Salisbury would be glad to be favoured with your opinion as to whether any, and if so, what representations can properly be made to the Siamese Government on behalf of Mr. Murray Campbell in the present state of the case, and his Lordship would wish to receive any remarks or suggestions which you may have to offer in regard to the means of obtaining redress for Mr. Campbell.

I am to observe that no independent information has reached this Department showing that the Umpire still intends to make an Award, though the Siamese Government clearly anticipate that he will eventually do so.

Report.

In our opinion it may properly be represented by Her Majesty's Government to the Siamese Government that Mr. Murray Campbell's case ought not to be allowed to remain in its present very unsatisfactory position.

Mr. Murray Campbell alleges that the conduct of the Umpire was such that he ought to have been removed from his office, and that his Award is not binding. If the Siamese Government will concur in having this question brought before any local Court of authority, Her Majesty's Government will hold their hands until that Court has given its decision.

The clause in the Contract ousting recourse to the Court does not apply to the present application for relief on the ground of misconduct of the Arbitrator or Umpire.

The Siamese Government should, we think, be informed that if they refuse to concur in having the question decided in this way Her Majesty's Government will have to consider Mr. Murray Campbell's representations with a view of seeing whether he is entitled to redress at the hands of the Siamese Government.

If the Siamese Government refuse to concur in the course suggested, Mr. Murray Campbell should, we think, be required to support (by statutory declarations directed to definite matters of fact) his allegations against the Umpire, and if these allegations appear to be established, we think that Her Majesty's Government may properly endeavour to obtain redress for him by diplomatic representations.

Claims of British subjects for losses through disturbances at Constantinople.

Gentlemen,

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, to transmit to you a despatch from Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople with its inclosures, as noted in the accompanying list, relating to the claims of British subjects against the Turkish Government for compensation for losses arising out of the disturbances at Constantinople in August last.

The investigation of the various claims presented by British subjects was intrusted by Her Majesty's Ambassador to Mr. Wratislaw, the Acting British Consul at Constantinople, and Mr. Max Müller, Third Secretary to Her Majesty's Embassy, who, with the valuable assistance of Mr. Gilchrist, an English merchant at Constantinople, nominated for that purpose by the British Chamber of Commerce, have drawn up the Report now forwarded by Sir P. Currie.

I am to request that you will take the accompanying papers into your consideration and favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion whether all or any of these claims—and, if so, which—may properly be made the subject of representations to the Porte.

The only claim which appears to call for any remark, in addition to the observations made by Messrs. Wratislaw, Max Müller, and Gilchrist in the accompanying explanatory statement (Inclosure 3) is that of Messrs. Temple and Co. (No. 24 in the schedule). This claim is of so suspicious a nature, and the statements of the firm appear to be so unworthy of credit, that, in the absence of absolute legal proof, Lord Salisbury doubts whether it can properly be put forward.

His Lordship will be obliged if you will favour him with your views on these points, together with any general observations which you may desire to offer on the whole set of claims.

Report.

We recommend that the claims should be sent in as settled by Mr. Wratislaw and Mr. Max Müller, subject to the following remarks :—

The claim of Messrs Temple and Co. (No. 24) should be reduced to the small sums allowed for damage to safe, furniture, and iron door; the £ T 158 for cash from safe should not be claimed at all.

The amounts claimed for loss by the death or disappearance of Armenian debtors (see Nos. 1 and 15) would not, by English law, be legally recoverable, but, assuming that the loss has actually been sustained in this way, constitute, we think, a fair head of claim.

The 2,000*l.* for penalty under contract (No. 25) should, we think, be claimed on the advice of Mr. Tarring; but the Turkish Government should be informed that, if they should think fit to prosecute the action in the name of M. Sofiano, anything recovered will be received on their account. This claim is, however, subject to the consideration that the Turkish Government may be able to show that the action would have failed on some ground other than the loss of the contract.

As regards the 300*l.* for the "Serghis" (No. 19), the Turkish Government can hardly set up that they would not have paid their debt, and, as the only evidence of it has been destroyed, we think it may be fairly claimed.

As regards promissory notes and valuable securities, it will, of course, be open to the Turkish Government to show that the amounts represented will not be really lost. In any case, all rights in respect of them should be made over, or offered, to the Turkish Government if they pay.

The item of £ T 100 for the clothes, &c., of the men who were killed (No. 28) can be put forward only on behalf of their representatives, and we fear that it cannot properly form part of the British claim. On the other hand, we think that any injury to the business of Mr. Seager, directly resulting from the murder or imprisonment of his servants, is a legitimate head of claim, and may properly be added to their claim.

Greek blockade of Gulf of Salonica.

Gentlemen,

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, the Papers noted in the accompanying list, which relate to the announcement by the Greek Government of a blockade of the Gulf of Salonica, from the mouth of the River Peneus to that of the Haliacmon, of the Gulf of Volo, and of the coast of Epirus and Albania from Prevesa to Valona.

You will observe that, in the first of the three notes addressed to Lord Salisbury by the Greek Chargé d'Affaires (Paper A), M. Métaxas, in announcing the blockade of the Gulf of Salonica, uses the words "le littoral bloqué serait d'une distance de 5 milles marins de la côte," and in announcing the blockade of the coast of Epirus, states that "le blocus s'étendra jusqu'à la portée d'un canon."

It is worthy of remark that the Greek Government apparently use the term "littoral," which, in its literal meaning, is synonymous with "côte" or coast, in a much more extensive sense, i.e., as comprising not only the shore itself but the waters, to a distance of 5 marine miles from the shore, and that by describing these waters as "le littoral bloqué," they seem to imply an intention to blockade a strip of the high seas for a distance of 2 miles outside the ordinarily recognized limit of the territorial waters.

It may, however, be that the note is loosely expressed, and that its meaning is merely that the Greek Government reserve to themselves the right of stationing a blockading squadron for the purpose of interdicting access to the coast line, at any distance from the shore up to a maximum of 5 miles.

The phrase "portée d'un canon" again is extremely vague, especially as in the note no starting point is indicated from which the range of the cannon is to be calculated.

A notice of the blockade has already been inserted in the "London Gazette"

1897

(Paper D), but before acknowledging the communications made by M. Métaxas, Lord Salisbury wishes to be favoured generally with your opinion upon its terms, and especially to be informed whether you consider that any observations or reservations should be made by Her Majesty's Government with regard to them.

Report.

We agree in the observation that the notice that a portion of the sea will be blockaded is unusual, and if the words used were intended to imply an intention to restrict the innocent passage of ships through the whole of the sea area named, it might be desirable to make some reservation or protest, but we rather regard the language used as indicating the distance within which it is proposed that the character and object of vessels approaching the blockaded coast shall be ascertained in the ordinary way, and if so, they do not appear to call for any special notice or observation.

Claims of British subjects for losses through disturbances at Constantinople.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, September 22, 1897.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, a despatch from Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople, with its inclosures, relative to claims of British subjects against the Turkish Government for compensation for losses arising out of the disturbances at Constantinople in August 1896.

These claims have been presented since the date of the despatch from Sir P. Currie referred to you in my letter of the 11th March, and reported on in your letter of the 25th of the same month.

I am to request that you will take the accompanying papers into your consideration, and favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion whether all or any of these claims, and, if so, which, may properly be made the subject of representations to the Porte.

His Lordship will also be obliged if you will favour him with any general observations which you may wish to make on these claims.

Refusal of Canada to admit citizens of United States to privilege of Registration of Copyright.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, October 27, 1897.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you herewith, by direction of the Marquess of Salisbury, papers, as marked in the accompanying list, which refer to a complaint on the part of the United States' Government in respect to the action of the Government of Canada in refusing to admit citizens of the United States to the privilege of registration of copyright in Canada, notwithstanding the declaration of Her Majesty's Government that the Law of Copyright in force in all British possessions permits to the citizens of the United States of America the benefit of copyright on substantially the same basis as to British subjects.

L.O.R. 1891 (Conf. 6207), p. 110.

The declaration in question was based upon a Report, of which a copy is also inclosed (Paper A), from your predecessors in office in 1891. It is contained in a note to Mr. Lincoln (then United States' Representative at the Court of St. James) of the 16th June, 1891 (Paper B), and is to the following effect:—

"Her Majesty's Government are advised that, under existing English law, an alien by first publication in any part of Her Majesty's dominions can obtain the benefit of English copyright, and that contemporaneous publication in a foreign country does not prevent the author from obtaining English copyright; that residence in some part of Her Majesty's dominions is not a necessary condition to an alien obtaining copyright under the English Copyright Law, and that the Law of Copyright in force in all British possessions permits to citizens of the United States of America the benefit of copyright on substantially the same basis as to British subjects."

Acting upon this assurance, the President of the United States issued a Proclamation on the 1st July, 1891 (Paper C), extending the benefits of the American Copyright Act of the 3rd March, 1891 (Paper D), to all British subjects.

By virtue of this Proclamation British authors can obtain copyright in the United States on the condition of republishing and reprinting from type set up in the United States. On the other hand, under the existing English law, as you are aware, any person, whether a native or an alien, can obtain a copyright throughout Her Majesty's dominions by the mere act of first publication in any part of those dominions.
